DR. MINTZEL: It is, or course, possible for the defense to prove from the documents the matters pertaining to the activity of Strauch's service in Riga and as stated by the defendant , but the defense does not object to Mrs. Strauch being examined as a witness and we would like to actually submit the affidavit ..

MR. GLANCY: Also, Your Honor, you might remind defense counsel that the immunity extends more specifically to Strauch himself, rather than his wife. He also just waive this immunity. He is the one who says whether or not his wife will testify.

THE PRESIDENT: That is also a feature of this rule of law, and do you believe that the defendant will be willing to waive that immunity, that cloak of protection placed around himself through his wife?

DR. MINTZEL: I am convinced of that, but perhaps I could ask the defendant personally and I could tell the tribunal tomorrow morning of the result.

THE PRESIDENT: Very veil, yes.

MR. GLANCY: In the meantime, sir, I would like, as a matter of record, state that we wish to reserve our right.

THE PRESIDENT: The right will be preserved to the prosecution.

DR. GLANCY: Thank you, sir.

DR. MINTZEL: I would like then to proceed with the submission ments that it contains I would like to mention that unfortunately the documents of Document Book 2, as well as No. 3, beginning from number I have been numbered from the beginning. I came to an agreement with the Secretary General to suggest to change the enumeration to the effect that in Book 2 and Book 3 the document numbers should be changed to the same number as they were to be submitted as exhibits. I now offer as Exhibit No. 16 that document which is called Document 1 in Document Book No. 2; it should be, however, document No. 16. Exhibit 16, document -it was 1, it is now 16. This document consists of excerpts from reports of events. The excerpts from No. 24 and No. 26 on page 2 show that Einsatz Commando 2 moved from Latvia to the area around Leningrad.

The excerpt No. 29 on page 3, has the name to the predecessor of Strauch -- Batz, was crossed out in Berlin and the name "Strauch" had been substituted by one of the officials in Berlin. In the location reports supplement to these reports of events, the name "Strauch" appears for the first time in the report of events of the 5th of November, 1941. This is not incontradiction of the fact that Strauch had actually only arrived in Riga on 10-11-42. The remark made in handwriting in the location report at Berlin had been made by the Departmental official in Berlin, apparently because he was informed authoritively that Strauch had been appointed on this very day, or perhaps the preceding day. Knowing this decree, he crossed ou the name "Batz" and he substituted the name "Strauch". The following excerpts show Strauch as the chief of Einsatz Kommando 2 up to the excerpt from report of events 146 on page 8. of the 15th of December 1941. If Einsatz Kommando 2 is mentioned here in the excerpts that does not necessarily mean that Strauch was really chief of Einsatz Kommando 2 which was removed from Latvia to the sector around Leningrad. It is a fact that the institution of the agencies -- the permanent agencies of the commandos in Riga for instance, was only mentioned in later reports of events, but that the Einsatz Kommando 2 as it is mentioned here, only means negligent attitude on the part of the officials who -

MR. GLANCY: It is my opinion, sir, that the documents will speak for themselves quite forcibly, and therefore this is not the time nor the place for argumentation.

THE PRESIDENT: You are presenting that document as if you were arguing the case, and of course, you know this is not the time to present the argumentation. In any way that you can enlighten the Tribunal as to the nature of the document you will be helping the Tribunal. We don't object to that, but to draw conclusions from a document and argue on it is not proper at this time.

DR. MINTZEL: On this occasion I only pointed out the difference between an Einsatzkommando of the commanding agency because here it is particularly obvious. May I now come to the Report of Events No. 149 on page 9 of the 22nd of December 1941. Here Strauch is mentioned for the first time as the commander in White Ruthenia. He appears, however, only in a few reports as such because very soon, on the 7th of January 1942, in this excerpt of the Report of Events 152 which is on Page 10, it adds: the present SS-Sturmbannfuehrer Dr. Hofmann deputizing for him, which provides an explanation that he was only for a short time shown here as the commander of the Einsatzkommando in Minsk, while after a few days it became evident that there is a deputy. But I shall come back to that in my final plea. show Strauch merely being mentioned in that capacity and during that tern of office he was there. They refer to the whole time during which Reports of Events were issued at all. This is up to No. 195 of the 24th of April 1942.

My next exhibit is No. 17. It used to be No. 2 but now it will receive No. 17. It is an excerpt from Activity and Situation Report No. 11. This excerpt gives a detailed report about the partisan organization in Minsk and it also shows the part which a number of Jews played in this partisan organization.

My next exhibit is Exhibit No. 18 which was No. 3, but it now will become Document No. 18. This is an excerpt, or at least it contains expcerpts from the reports from the occupied eastern territories. These reports begin at a certain date and they take the place of the former so-called Reports of Events.

What is contained here as evidence material pertains to the constantly proving partisan danger in White Ruthenia, and Report No. 9 is of special importance. It is on pages 31 through 35. This report has been quoted by the prosecution in excerpt and has been introduced as exhibit No. 178, Document No. 5156. The mimeographed copy which I have received of this exhibit from the prosecution shows that those parts are missing which would threw some light on the partisan danger in White Ruthenia and which actually deal with the participation of Strauch in the concerning operations. For instance, this report of events from the occupied territories in the east contains a report of a discussion in the presence of all military personnel and Security Police personnel concerning this question, and Strauch also took part in this meeting. -- detailed description of these discussions and the confirmation of the fact that fighting squads were to be formed and that the Security Police units should carry out the espionage activous in the program of this special action, is missing in the documents as submitted by the prosecution. Therefore, I have here collected the pages which they left out.

MR. GLANCY: I wish to remind defense counsel that the rule in this Tribunal as in others is that when an extract is offered the entire document is offered. He is at liberty and there are no objections on the prosecution's part that he offer this. However, we want it understood that the entire document was open for his perusal.

THE PRESIDENT: You want to exclude the interpretation that you purposely withhold any pages which might be of benefit to the defense?

MR. GLANCY: Exactly, sir, I want that completely understood.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, it will be understood on the record.

DR. MINTZEL: I have only pointed this out, your Honor, because naturally as a rule those who deal with such documents have used the mimeographs which are put at their disposal by the prosecution.

I have to point out the following in the excerpt from No. 17 of the reports from the Eastern occupied countries which you find on Page 7 of the index, there is a printing mistake. After excerpt from the 7 August 1942, Excerpt from No. 15, it should say also "Excerpt from No. 47 of the 26th of March. 1943." What follows there is of the 26th of March. 1943. The excerpts here from the report numbered 43 shows that Einsatzkommando 2 and the commanding agencies are separate entities, both with regard to personnel and space.

The next exhibit from Document Book No. 2 I shall offer as Exhibit No. 19, the document which has born the No. 4 and which is now going to be made No. 19. It is an excerpt from "Soldiers Handbook on the Rules of Land warfare" by an American colonel, Judge Advocate General's Department, in which he explains the rules of land warfare of the Ameridan G.I.'s. The excerpts which I submit here talk about members of the army being not liable to punishment if they carry out orders by their commanding officers which are in contradiction to the rules of land warfare; it says that those that carry out the order are not punishable but those who give the orders are.

Exhibit No. 20 is Document No. 5 which will now become Document No. 20. In the following exhibits we have excerpts from the record, comments by the defendants and the witnesses which have been examined, as witnesses for the defendant Strauch. They are, of course, contained in the records, but they are here with shortened and put into the document book for Strauch.

The Exhibit No. 20 contains the testimony of the defendant Schulz. As a witness for the defendant Strauch, Schulz comments on the fact that in the location reports the name of a commander is being mentioned at a time when the named defendant has not started his service yet.

MR. GLANCY: It seems to be cumulative and merely a burden to the record. It is admittedly in the record already. We see no reason for its further inclusion in this form.

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Speight offers the cement that it is pretty convenient to have it there before us.

MR. GLANCY: On that basis, sir, I withdrew my objection.

DR. MINTZEL: In order to summarize the opinions of these men who testified as to Strauch's character, attitude and activities, I have here put then in a shortened and abbreviated form for the convenience of the Court. I offer former Document No. 6 now as Document No. 21 and as Exhibit No. 21 the testimony of the witness Jost as witness for the defendant Strauch. Jost says, concerning the question whether Strauch could have been chief of the Einsatzkommando 2 or whether he was just a commander of the Security Police or the SD in Latvia in Riga, what he has said during his own examination, the distinction between the Einsatzkommando and the commanding agencies testifies that according to his memory in June or July 1942 no mass executions took place in Ruthenia. He expresses his opinion of the participation of the Einsatzkommando in the partisan warfare and he says that Strauch, at the beginning of March 1942, was still stationed at Riga and not in Minsk ashe had met Strauch at that time in Riga and he had discussed current matters with him. Jost furthermore declares that Strauch had received the authority not to take any anti-Jewish measures so far, and on the occasion of this discussing Jost expresses his comment on the Kube letter.

Then there is No. 22. It is a document which is up to now No. 7 which is now going to be 22. It isthe testimony of Dr. Blume as the witness for the defendant Strauch. Dr. Blume has stated that Strauch, after he had been drafted to Riga as commander, had telephoned him and had asked for this appointment to be postponed ashe had broken his arm.

Dr. Blume furthermore states that when he was transferred from Riga to Minsk, which had been planned at an early date, Strauch broke his arm again which prevented him from leaving, and thus it was decided that Strauch, before he was to commence on his new appointment in Minsk, should be cured of his habit of breaking his arm.

As Exhibit No. 23, I submit Document No. 8, which is now going to be Document 23. The testimony of the defendant Sandberger as a witness for the defendant Strauch, and Sandberger states that although he was stationed in the adjoining territory, Estonia, where he was commander of the Security Police and the SD, he had never heard anything about the fact of Strauch was the commanding chief of Latvia, and above all other things, Dr. Sandberger comments upon his affidavit of the 19th November, 1944, in which he says that Strauch participated in Jewish persecutions, but he says here that he could not have any knowledge of incidents that happened in Minsk as he had never been there himself.

My last exhibit in Document Book II is Document No. 8 which is going to be changed to No. 24. It is an excerpt from the total report of the Einsatzgruppe A up to the 15th of October, 1941. From this it becomes evident that two-thirds of the entire Einsatzkommando II were removed to Lenigrad, and that only one-third remained in order to install an agency for the Commanders of the Security Police and the SD in Latvia.

In Document Book No. III -

THE PRESIDENT: Do we have Document Book III?

SECRETARY GENERAL: No, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: If you are willing to present it without our having it before us, we are willing to hear you.

MR. GLANCY: If the Tribunal please, the Prosecution is not in possession of the document book, and I would like to reserve the right to lodge objections at a later time. Also, at this time, Sir, I would like to object to one document in Document Book II. This is Document Court No. II, Case No. IX.

No. 4, Exhibit 19, an excerpt from as Soldier's Handbook, which treats with reprisal measures, and the fact that the soldier will not be prosecuted if he follows superior orders. However, I would like to have the chance to inform myself further. I do believe that the stipulations mentioned here are qualified as to what is patently illegal shall not be obeyed. That is from my memory and not from the book itself. However, I think that is in there as qualification.

THE PRESIDENT: Well then, you are reserving the right to refer to the entire handbook or even to present further excerpts from it.

MR. GLANCY: Yes, sir.

THE PRESIDENT: That right is reserved.

MR. GLANCY: Thank you, Sir.

DR. MINTZEL: Your Honor, it would be welcome, I think, if the three documents contained in Document Book III could be presented. I shall submit these documents now, although the translations have not been available to the Prosecution or to the Tribunal. Yet if you agree, I shall do so now.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, please present them.

DR. MINZEL: I submit as Exhibit No. 25 Document No. 1, in Document Book III, which is now to receive the Document No. 25. It is an affidavit of the defendant Strauch of the 22nd January, 1948, in which he comments upon the matters which are contained in rebuttal Document Book No. V-A, which is a bulky document pertaining also to Strauch's activities. Strauch makes the statement in detail concerning these documents, especially to Prosecution Exhibit 196 that he had nothing to do with the police battalions. In Exhibit 221 he says that Vandenbach's order that seventy Jews who were in the service of Kube were to be executed, was left to his successor in White Ruthenia who had this order carried out. He speaks about the kind of participation in the operations which were mentioned in the Ruebe affidavit. He also says concerning the Exhibits of the Prosecution, Exhibits 224 and 225 that he and the men of his agency did not take part in the operation Court No. II, Case No. IX.

"Harvesting Festival" (Erntefest) and "Jacob", and that no persons were killed who were not either partisans or who could be proved to be aids or abettors of the partisans. Commenting upon Exhibit No. 226 Strauch says that the executions mentioned therein are those of people who had been condemned to death by German courts.

My next Exhibit is No. 26; it was Document No. 2, and the document in Document Book III will now receive the Document No. 23. It is an affidavit of the defendant, Dr. Rasch, of the 26th January, 1948. Rasch says that he visited Strauch in Riga at the end of January or the beginning of February, 1942, and that at that time he, Strauch, had a permanent domicile, and that he, Rasch, had stayed with him in Riga.

The last Exhibit is No. 27, former Document No. 3 in Document Book III; it is now Document No. 27; and is an affidavit of the defendant Dr. Gick, in which he says that in the reports of the events of the 22nd December, 1941, until the 3rd of April, 1942, the commander of the Security Police and SD for Latvia, Dr. Lange had been named.

THE PRESIDENT: Any other Defense Counsel desire to present any documents? Does the Prosecution have anything to offer?

MR. GLANCY: Not at the present time, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Did Dr. Heim intend to present something for the defendant Blobel? Apparently not.

MR. GLANCY: I don't think so.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Aschenauer, you will be ready to proceed tomorrow morning?

DR. ASCHENAUER: Yes, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. Tomorrow morning we will hear the presentation of Ohlendorf's case; then, that will be followed by the presentation of the final pleas for the other defendants. Following that, the Prosecution will make its summation plea.

judgment will be rendered. Some reference has been made to a date, but that date cannot be maintained because we have delayed in the hearing of the summation pleas, so that the date of the judgment is unknown to anyone, including the Tribunal.

MR. GLANCY: After the generous offer of the Tribunal to sit as long as was necessary to finish the Defense's case and offer of documents, I suppose we can assume that it is complete in fact.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. It is now understood that there is no further presentation of documents in open court. Should there be a straggling document show up, than it will be presented directly to the Judges with copies going to the Prosecution.

MR. GLANCY: Thank you, Sir.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal at this time will recess until tomorrow morning at 9:30.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 0930 hours, 4 February 1948.)

Otto Ohlendorf, et al., defendants sitting at Nurnberg

THE MARSHAL: The Honorable, the Judges of Military Tribunal II. Military Tribunal II is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Aschenauer.

DR. ASCHENAUER: (Attorney for the Defendant Ohlendorf) Mr. President, Your Honors.

based on the substantive law of Decree No. 10 of the Control Council which was issued by the 4 signatory powers in execution of the Moscow and London Declarations, dated 30 October 1943 and 8 May 1945. Therefore it is to be examined whether and to what extent this law is consistent with the rules of international law. The Tribunal not only is entitled, but is also obligated, to make this examination. It is obvious to choose as a parallel the right of examination on the part of the American judge with respect to the constitutionality of the established law, all the more as the unwritten rules concerning the right of examination by the judge apply to all American judges, therefore also to the military Tribunal which was established by virtue of Decree No. 7. The London statute, the Decree No. 10 of the Control Council end the implementation rules based thereon are called the corner stones of the new international law and, in the opinion of the first Nurnberg verdict, the sentence has come up more than once that everything, called by the London Statute an agreement serving especially the trial of the German war criminals, is in itself nothing else than a generally recognized law, an international law. If this, however, in the case, then this law, on the part of the judge who is called upon to apply it, must likewise submit to the examination which every law is subject to with respect to its constitutionality.

There is no reason whatsoever, if we follow the American conception of the law, to regard an agreement, based on international law, as nothing else but a national internal law. On the contrary: In general, more guarantees are given in the field of national legislation - if only on account of the homogeneousness of the legislative bodies - for the fact that the individual laws keep within the framework and spirit of the constitution more than in international law where the body of legislators is more or less mixed and - as in collective agreements like that now under discussion - is more or less determined by accident. Rules of international law, too, are subject to examination by the Court. Therefore it will be necessary that the Court will examine every sentence of the international law with respect to its consistency with the generally recognized fundamental rules of international law. These fundamental rules the existence of which is today completely undisputed, regardless of the difficulties as to their valuation and definition in the individual case, at a time of reorientationof international law in particular to principles exceeding the legal obligation out also those borne by the "Conscience publique", are here taking - mutatis mutandis the place of the national constitutional law. The basic rules of international law also include the general fundamental rules of the contract law. The rules about efficacy and lack of efficacy of agreements, however, their interpretation in the individual case may be con entious, are the more general, more comprehensive and older sentences with respect to the system of the London agreements; in the same way as an agreement, based on international law, must be regarded as void, if, for instance, it limits the sovereignty of a state in an immoral manner just because of the fact that the corresponding contract regulations are in contradiction to the superordinated, generally applied rules of sovereignty, the ad hoc concluded agreements of international law which are vitiated by a defect, recognized by the general legal principles of international law, are in the same way to be regarded as void.

Consequently, the American Military Tribunal is not relieved from the obligation to undertake an examination of the substantive validity of the London agreement and of the rules applied to its execution, all the more as military Tribunal No. III, in my opinion, has adhered to this conception in its opinion in the trial against Altstoetter and others. The examination as to the "constitutionality" is here replaced by the obligation to examine the London agreement enacted on a fallacious basis with respect to its compatibility with the superordinate, general rules about the efficacy of agreements of international law. Moreover, article 2 of Decree No. 7, issued by the Military Government on 18 October 1946, and dealing with the constitutionality and jurisdiction of specific .Military Tribunals, is no obstacle to this examination. The aforementioned decree ordains that:

"The courts or its members or deputy members cannot be challenged counsels". Article 2e of Decree No. 7 combines twoviews which, as a rule, are dealt with separately according to German penal law namely:

the challenging of the judge and the assertion of procedural objections. The Decree No. 7 authorizes to determine such a restriction of the procedural rights of the defendants. In this case, however, no assertion of such procedural rights is in question. A challenging of certain judges or the entire Court is by no means intended here. Neither do I challenge the procedural jurisdiction of the Court. On the contrary, the objections are of quite a different nature which are not supposed to be ruled out and cannot be ruled cut by Article 2e of Decree No. 7. I raise the question whether the trial, in view of the story of the origin in international law concerning the provisions for the punishment of the war criminals, is admissible at all.

Therefore, not the mere substantive or local jurisdiction of the Court as such is challenged (this would be immaterial according to article 2 of the aforementioned decree) but the fundamental question is raised whether the entire system of the substantive and procedural rules, issued for thejudgment of the War crimes, in view of their origin, has a claim for legal validity at all. Such a statement can obviously not be ruled out through a regulation as it is contained in Article 2e of the Decree No. 7. Bluntly expressed: A materially or formally invlaid law cannot evade the examination by ruling it out; on the contrary, the right and also the duty of a judge to examine any rule will under all circumstances prevail. In my opinion, the London Protocol, dated 8 August 1945, with all its rules issued for its supplementation and implementation represents a new institution of law from the point of view of international law, and from the political point of view , an experiment. The London agreement, including its implementation rules, must be counted to those agreements which, in view of the subtleness of the questions dealt with, can only then have a claim of legal validity and general respect in the future, if those agreements themselves have been concluded in a politicly loyal manner by politically loyal partners. If this is the case, it will be possible that the principles, laid down for the first time in this agreement and applied in practice for the first time in Nurnberg, will be recognized and will have a claim for legal Validity in the future.

If this, however, is not the case, the public conscience will some day, sooner or later, form its negative judgment about this sort of trial, regardless of the number of actually concluded trials and the number of convictions pronounced, and the time is bound to come when this kind of trials is considered an abuse and not a development of international law, and when the conduct of these trials is no longer regarded as a generally binding administration of penal justice.

The sentence: "Nobody can be a judge in his own cause" is considered a matter of course by the national penal law. The slogan of "Judex inhabilis" states: The judge is precluded from the exercise of his duty if he himself is injured by the criminal act or has retained certain close connections with the offender. Another reason for the preclusion of a judge, because this is absolutely obvious, is not even mentioned in the procedural systems. The judge can neither then perform his duty as a judge if he is suspected as an offender or participant in connection with the criminal act on trial. As opposed to the national penal law it is obvious that the principles of "Judex inhabilis" can only claim a lesser significance in international law, Only in very rare cases will it be possible in international tribunals to prevent the participation of those states which themselves have been directly or indirectly injured by the acts on trial, and the objections are based on the very "incompatibility" which have been raised again and again in all countries against the exercise of a judicature which is based on international law. It is not intended in this connection to go into further details with regard to this question. for this case, are those principles which apply to the juridical unsuitability of the person suspect of the act. The accomplice in a war crime or even more so the instigator of such a crime may not be considered suitable to participate as a judge in the trial against war crimes of that kind.

protocol to the non-aggression pact with Germany. From the viewpoint of international law the attitude of the Russian authorities, at least with respect to Poland, represents a breach of the treaty of 25 July 1932; in this treaty the Soviet Union had given guarantees not to take a part in a treaty which was directed against the other treaty partner. Now it is hardly possible to conceive of a harsher form of agreement, directed against another state, than that which prepares and makes possible the military annihilation and partition of the partner. And it is furthermore difficult to think of a cruder form of "adoption" of or "participation" in such a treaty than that chosen by the USSR; for, as seen politically, it involves a partition agreement confined solely to the USSR and the Reich which was made possible by the use of arms. The fact that both States, Germany as well as the USSR, "considered" or "would be willing to consider" the possibility of maintaining a Polish State of reduced territory, has no more weight, with respect to the clear demarcation of the spheres of interest, than the fact that the decisive military campaign was to be undertaken by the Wehrmacht while the Soviet Union .at first remained in the background. based on the "disintegration", or "discontinuation" of the Polish State, which in the eyes of the Soviet Union brought about the end of Polish sovereignty and thus also ended the Soviet non-aggression obligations under the pact of 25 July 1932, does not pertain to this case and can only be regarded as an excuse. For at this time Poland was not even considered incapable of waging war (debellatio) from the German viewpoint, and the German military as well as the Polish government offices were surprised by the premature entry of the Soviet troops into Polish territory. Even this is not relevant. For the Soviet-Polish agreement of 25 July 1932 was not broken on 14 Sept.

Considered from a strictly legal point of view, such a trial procedure cannot represent a "contribution to the development of international law", for an agreement so arrived at lacks from the beginning that authorization from the "Conscience Publique" which such a new development in international law must have if it is to be effective. The participation of a disloyal partner destroys the authority of such an agreement and may also put the collaboration of the non-incriminated partners in a light which will unfavorably affect the claim for validity of the international agreement. For it is surely recognized in the civil law systems of all civilized countries that among the required prerequisites, the personal qualities and circumstances of the contract partner are usually used as a tacit, universally subordinate basis for the contract. This is especially the case - if we may first refer to civil law - in contracts which are either long term or have special confidential conditions as a basis. In these cases the personal affairs of the contract partner are especially important. Now if the partner craftily suppresses traits which would make him unfit as a contract partner if they were examined objectively, and would justify the withdrawal of the honest partner from the planned agreement, or if he uses deception concerning their existence, then it is generally accepted that the basis for such a contract has disappeared. al law (which is proved by parallel instances in international treaty law), the destructive and annulling effect of the presence of such contract partners, who themselves have no qualification to contract such agreementss. If, for instance, a continuously neutral country, like Switzerland, joined an alliance which had been formed by two other countries, then, because Switzerland could not act correspondingly, its entry into such an alliance would be illegal and could have no legal effect.

And for this reason, when Switzerland joined the League of Nations in 1920, it made a declaration on 13 Feb. 1920 whereby it relieved itself of any military obligatio ns which were incumbent on all members of the League. Only through such a declaration could Switzerland join the League of Nations. Soviet Union to make agreements in general by saying that its agencies were guilty of certain acts according to the London Treaty. But there is an impediment ex persona in the way of participation by the Soviet Union in such international agreements which regulate the punishment of the authors of crimes against the peace. This follows from the following considerations: the moral meaning of such treaties would be reversed if states which had themselves committed the same crimes or allowed them to be committed by their agencies, could participate in forming such treaties. world opinion that it would not be able to recover. And finally, the remaining, loyal partners to such an agreement would necessarily have to lose their own position as guardians of international legality as a result of making pacts with one outside the community of nations. This so much the more since the bare fact that, in line with the London Statute and Law 10 of the Control Council, the victors are judging the vanquished, which is in itself a great moral encumberment to the agreements. they are made by parties which are not also guilty. This is not the case with Law 10 of the Control Council. Therefore, the Control Council Law 10, after thorough and objective examination - in connection with this (I refer you) to my motion of 9 December 1947, which I have also directed to the Military Tribunal Court No. II - has not gained legal validity because it stands in contradiction to international law.

It is not without reason that Christopher Emmet says in his "Verdict on Nuernberg", on page 138 in the 22 Nov. 1946 issue of "The Commonwealth":

"If, however, all of the judging nations had come to Nuernberg with clean hands, the verdicts might have really been the milestones in history that Judge Jackson believed them to be. Unfortunately, however, against the findings in Nuernberg we must raise the constantly increasing suspicion that the leaders of one of the judging countries should have been sitting on the defendants bench with the Nazi criminals." the basis for this trial.

Article II, 4b of the Control Council Law No. 10 orders:

"The fact that a person acted under orders of his responsibility for a crime; but it can be considered as an extenuating circumstance."

from responsibility could no longer be considered, under any circumstances. Accordingly, the defendants at these trials could not refer to the higher orders they received with the idea of complete exoneration. before the Control Council Law No. 10 was passed. Even in the Anglo-Saxon countries the prevailing school of thought generally favored the conception that the defendant in a war crimes trial had to be allowed the defense that he acted on higher orders.

I add the following quotations to this statement: in the 1914 edition, which was valid until 1944, states word for word as follows:

"Members of the combat forces who commit violations the enemy."

further determines that acting on higher orders constitutes complete justification so far as war crimes are concerned. This conception ruled British jurisprudence for decades, almost until the end of World War II.

It says further in the British manual:

"They can punish the officials or commanders who are measures that are described in this chapter."

the head of the state, the members of the government, as well as the higher commanders of the armed forces and other commanders who are independently responsible for an original order. 1940, which is still valid today, agrees with these directives almost verbatim. It says:

"Individual members of the armed forces are not to or commanders."

Prof. Max OPPENHEIM, co-author with Col. EDMONDS of the rules of warfare of the British MANUAL OF MILITARY LAW and for many years chief advisor of the British admiralty on questions of international law, has this to say on the subject, in his work on "INTERNATIONAL LAW", volume II, 1st to 5th edition, paragraph 253:

"Violations of the rules pertaining to warfare are concerned.

If the members of the armed forces by the enemy; the latter may then use reprisals.

be punished; for the commanders are alone responsible and the latter may therefore be punished by the enemy as war criminals when they are captured."

Prof. OPPENHEIM, who for many years was the leading authority on international law in Great Britain, held to this opinion throughout his life.

English and American law agrees on this point. George MANNER, the American expert on international law, in an article on "the legal Nature and Punishment of Criminal Acts of Violence contrary to the Laws of War" in American states the principle that members of the armed forces of a nation could not be held personally responsible for acts that violate the rules of warfare which they commit by order or with the consent of their government or their military superios, should be considered a rule of the usages of warfare that a universal tenet of International Law that reference to higher orders is excluded, existed neither during the 1st nor during the 2nd World war.

Nor has it materialised yet since 1945. In this respect however Control Council law No. 10 is in opposition to International Law. It cannot, as a one-sided act of the victorious powers, invalidate the pertinent international norms. Therefore it cannot hinder reference to a higher order either as justification of acts violating International Law, On this point, the already mentioned Prof. Lauterpacht declares:

"The cause of International Law demands not merely crime.

It demands also that such a punishment takes place in conformity with International Law."

these statements to higher orders for the purpose of achieving exoneration in full. In the event of the Honourable court not following this argumentation by reasons of the "being bound by a statute (positives) law" then it is faced with a further weighty problem which can be summarized in the following way: limited to a punishment of their own choice of those provided for in Art. II No. 3 of Law No. 10; a limitation in accordance with the rules of International Penal Law of the power of jurisdiction of the Court result in the selection of the punishments names in Art. II No. 3. Trials already carried through. There was no occasion for opening it either in view of the wording of Art. II No. 3 of the Law in so far not to be misunderstood. In the meantime, however, legislative facts have entered which make necessary legal examination of the extent of the authority to inflict punishment by the Court. abolished capital punishment for the sphere of its jurisdictional competence. Therefore the question arises: has to decide and pass sentence in accordance with a statute based on international agreement, even then when the death penalty provided by this Statute has been abolished subsequently and on principle by one of the Treaty States of the Statute? all the immediate decision on two preliminary questions. First of all, the international range of Control Council Law No. 10 has to be checked, as to the penal sanctions of which the deeds of the defendants are subject, according to paragraph 1 of the indictment, in the first instance.

Further, the international range of the Abolition Law of the USSR dated 20 May 1947 has to be ascertained. After these preliminary questions have been clarified the deductions for the concrete case are reached. International Range of Law No. 10. Law No. 10 was issued by the Inter-allied Control Council for Germany. By unanimous interpretation at home and abroad, however, it did not become thereby primarily a "German Law"; only in so far as in certain exceptional eases, Art. II 1c, the trial of crimes against humanity directed against Germans has been handed over to German Courts might one speak of a "transformation" of Law No. 10 into a national international German Law.

In all other cases the character of Law No. 10 remains unaltered, and indeed it is a statutory, interallied - that is "foreign law", passed by an Interallied authority (Control Council) aiming at German war criminals. Looked at materially however, a "foreign Law" as such does not exist; looked at from a legal validity point of view, Control Council Law 10 as already explained is therefore no Law but a State Treaty between the Four Allied Main Powers, looked at as a treaty from a technical point of view, an international (created by the Control Council as an international organ) Agreement implementing the Moscow Declaration dated 30 October 1943 and the London Agreement dated 8 August 1945. That the Allied Powers themselves wished to ascribe such a character to Law No. 10 is revealed beyond doubt by the following points:

(a) the circumstance that the preamble of Law No. 10 30 October 1943/8 August 45.

(b)the fact that national German Courts are expressly forbidden judicature on the basis of Law No. 10 in special orders of the Zone Commander (Art.

III No. 1 within limits.)

Law No. 10 is therefore first and foremost an International Agreement between the four signatory powers for punishing war criminals. Since, however, the Courts of the Treaty Powers have to base their decisions directly on this agreement Law No. 10 has become simultaneously an integral part of the internal law of the Treaty States. Thereby it has the same dual nature as the majority of international conventions. of the abolition of capital punishment in the USSR on this norm must be investigated firstly in its capacity as international Agreement and secondly in its capacity as national law.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Aschenauer, may I interrupt you for a moment please? If you regard Control Council Law 10 as in effect a treaty between the signatory powers how do you argue that any change in the internal law of the Soviet Union affects this international agreement?

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor -

THE PRESIDENT: Let's suppose that the Soviet Union changed the law of succession or in some way modified the law of property, how would that effect an international treaty?

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor, this question will be answered to in the following statements in my plea, if I may continue, I shall answer to your question in the rest of my final plea. The International Range of the Abolition Law of the USSR dated 20 May sovereign state can at any time undertake an alteration of her internal national law, and indeed particularly even if this internal law is based on an International Agreement. The Soviet Union is consequently justified to alter Law No. 10 in its capacity as National Soviet Law with effect for the Soviet sphere of jurisdiction, particular, to determine that the death sentence provided for by Art. II No. 3a of this Law may no longer be pronounced. Law No. 10 has become also a part of the internal law of the remaining parties of the Treaty, the USA, England, etc. that the Abolition Act pronounced by the USSR does not affect in itself the corresponding legal system of the USA, England, etc; looked at from a concrete point of view, the remaining parties to the Treaty can therefore continue to apply the death penalty in accordance with Art. II No. 3a of Law No. 10 for the sphere of their jurisdictional authority without taking into consideration whether the Soviet Union has abolished capital punishment or not. This is inherent in the already mentioned character of Law No. 10 which is not merely an international convention but also an internal law of the Treaty States. Such a way of looking at it and a result of this kind would only be impartially justified however if Law No. 10 were only a norm of the Internal Law of the Treaty States. This, however, is not the case as explained. Law No. 10 is at the same time an International Agreement. The question is therefore whether the Law of the USSR dated 20 May 1947 cannot be regarded as a tacitly undertaken notice of termination of this Agreement in so far as this provides for the death penalty in Art.

II No. 3a, at least however as a tacitly given explanation that the USSR no longer looks upon this agreement as valid as regards the means of punishment (death sentence) provided for and therefore advocates the point of view that, from a treaty point of view, the other signatory powers were no longer justified in pronouncing the death sentence. Looked at from a concrete point of view, the fact as to whether Law No. 10 is still supported by the "communis opinio" of the parties to the Treaty as regards justification for pronouncing the death sentence has to be examined.

Law No. 10 as repeatedly stressed by its originators and its immediate predecessor, the Nuernberg Statute, is issued to make victory possible for the so-called material justice. In the interests of this high aim the Nuernberg Statute and the subsequent Control Council Law No. 10 have put up even with constructions foreign to continental legal thought like for example the sacrifice of the sentence "Nulla poena sine lege poenali praevia". The circumstance that the Nuernberg Statute as well as Law No. 10 are satisfied with the element of violation of international law and the element of violation of public morals of the deed as norms of the time of the deed establishing criminal responsibility, showsclearly that in the interests of material justice express declaration of punishableness of the incriminating actions by defining special criminal facts of the case of the national legal system is to be desisted from. With that it is established that the Nurnberg Statute as well as Law No. 10 wanted to give precedence to the idea of material justice rather than the restriction rooted in continental thought "Nulla poena sine lege poenali praevia". Examination of the legal and political expediency of a step of this kind exceeds the limits ascribed to the plaideyer. From this fact however the obligation results, it is true, to advance the following sentence:

the general conviction (communis opinio) of the objection It results that the provisions of Art.

II No. 3 of Law No. 10 without detriment to their further continued validity are to be subjected to revision then if forcible proofs are given for the fact that such a communis opinio between the signatory powers no longer exists at all or at least no longer exists in the sphere of selection of means of punishment in question. however, such a fundamental significance which causes the material continued effectiveness of Art. II No. 3a of Law No. 10 to be in question. The reasons for this may be classified in two groups:

a) The penal law of the Soviet Union has always been inclined to abolitionism in principle. 1919 as in the federal principlesof the penal legislation, as also in penal codes of the states (save for individual groups of crimes), the penal law in the USSR, notwithstanding Article 14 Subsection 21 of the Federal Constitution of 5 December 1936 is essentially still states' law, i.e. regulated by the laws of the individual federal republics; in 1922 and 1926, capital punishment is designated always and only as a temporary measure caused by the then existing circumstances, bound to be abolished in principle or without exception as soon as conditions would permit. The fact that, by the penal coes in force, a relatively great number of acts was punishable by death cannot, in agreement with authoritative soviet-official conception so far, be taken as an argument against the basically provisional nature of this institution. This is given expression also by the so-called federal law of 20 May 1947, specifying that the promises for the application of the death penalty no longer exist and thereby emphasizing again the basically provisional nature of the supreme penalty.

b) Also, the Soviet Union did not restrict itself to abolishing the death penalty ex nunc only and with effect in its own national territory only, in the sense of internal state's law. Rather does the law, in connection with implementation instructions decreed by the Soviet Military Administrations in occupied foreign territory, make it clear that the abolition shall have an absolute and comprehensive effect:

1. The abolition applies also to former enemy territory occupied by the Soviet forces within the framework of the Potsdam Agreement;

2. the abolition applies not only to ordinary civilian courts but as well to proceedings before military end special courts, and especially also to those Soviet Courts which have been established in the East-Zone and in the USSR proper to prosecute the crimes specified by Control Council Law No. 10:

3. the abolition has effect ex tune (a consequence of the principle postulated by Article 3 of the Introductory Law to the Penal Code of the UDSSR of 1926; retroaction of the more lenient, i.e., in thiscase, of the abolitionary law, is obligatory. in the meantime been drawn by the courts of the USSR. In the trial against the members of the 9th Police Reserve Battalion, who, in particular also had to answer charges specified by Article III 1c of the Law No. 10, no death penalties were pronounced, although the court in its sentence stated that according to the previous Legal Penalty the conditions calling for capital punishment had existed; instead, they were sentenced to hard labor for different length of time, i.e. a maximum of 25 years, in accordance with the limitation by Soviet Federal Law of 20 May 1947. It must, therefore, be considered as being beyond doubt that the internal legislation of the Soviet Union has in principle changed course since the publication of Control Council Law No. 10. Concretely it looks like this: if, in the case under consideration, a military court of the Soviet Union had to decide, the inapplicability of Article II subsection 3 would be incontestable. In the relation of the Signatory Powers to each other the communisopinio, therefore, in matters concerning the quality and quantity of punishment has disappeared which yet existed at that time, when every one of the four Signatory Powers knew the possibility of the death penalty in accordance with the law of their nations. of International Penal Lay:

Law. For, as stated, Law No. 10 is not only an international treaty but also an internal norm of penal law of the signatory nations. In itself, the contents of this internal norm is not, as regards the remaining signatories, especially the USA, affected by the unilateral change of the law by another signatory nation (USSR). Regarded generally and basically, therefore, the military courts of the USA judicating on the strength of Law No. 10 are, without question, justified to apply Article II subsection 3 a. The question is only whether this jurisdiction power is not restricted in cases in which there exists a cogent point of contact regarding international penal law with the jurisdictional powers of the USSR. It is, therefore, to be examined in how far reasons of international penal law restrict the applicability of Law No. 10 in its character as internal norm of penal law of the signatory powers. I shall show that in this present trial, too, for reasons of fairness and the generally accepted ideas of justice, Control Council Law No. 10 is not to be implemented by the legal institution of European average penal law. This my opinion is supported by the verdict of the Jurist Trial, Case III, where it says on p. 41 of the German version: "Although this tribunal is composed of American judges, trained in the system and the rules of Common Law, it, nevertheless, is in session on the strength of international authority and can let itself be guided only by the basic principles of justice and fairness which underlie every civilized conception of law and legal procedure." International or even national military courts exercising penal jurisdiction on the strength of an international statute, are a novum in the history of International Law. This is the reason for the lack of cases of precedence which would permit an immediate solution of the quetion under discussion. Yet, International Law - in a steady evolution of now almost hundred years duration - has developed legal doctrines which are applicable to the case in hand at least by analogy. I have in mind the legal principles, created in international extradition laws, and which are, today, universally acknowledged.

We shall discuss these principles in subsection a), in subsection b) will be shown the reasons why these principles apply to the case on trial. a) The International Principle of not Sentencing to Death a Defendant Compared with the other acknowledged principles of international extradition law (non-extradition of one's own national; reciprocity; speciality; non-extradition for political offenses; extradition only if the offense is punishable also by the laws of the state applied to; non-extradition if the offense cannot be prosecuted in concrete by the laws of the state applied to;), the principle of exclusion of the death penalty plays a corresponding part. This principle, regularly, becomes acute in the extradition relation between such states (applied to) which have no capital punishment, and those (applying) states the penal system of which provides for the death penalty. In cases of this kind, the system of inter-state extradition laws regularly and unmistakably shows the tendency of states in favor of abolition to refuse extradition or to make it dependent on the understanding that the applying state will not exact the death penalty. and agreements of European, as well as non-European states. Thus, Article 5 of the Swiss Extradition Law of 22 January 1892 determines:

"If the penal code of the applying state provides for the offense, for the commission of which extradition is requested, corporal punishment (this includes death), then extradition will be consented to only on condition that the punishment, eventually, is commuted to imprisonment or a fine." further yet, prohibiting extradition if the laws of the applying state are in concrete stricter about the offense in question than the terms of Dutch penal law.

on condition that the applying state, which, contrary to the one applied to, employs the death penalty, assumes the obligation not to pronounce it in the case in question. This, e.g., is the case in the BelgianRoumanian Extradition Treaty of 18 August 1880 (See Mertitz: International Legal Aid in Penal Cases (Internationale Rechtshilfe in Strafsachen) 897, Vol. II p. 48 Foot note No. 15); the same practice has always been applied by abolition-conscious Italy. Belgium, the classical land of extradition law, made corresponding reservations in particular in relation to its South-American treaty partners (Brazil, Peru, a.o.) In connection with this, the circumstance must be mentioned that, in analogous extension of this principle, in extradition law the tendency of any state, absolutely, prevails to refuse extradition if the extradited person faces a penalty or a kind of punishment unknown to the laws of the state applied to and obnoxious to its public opinion. Into thiscategory belongs the tendency not to extradite if the extradited faces eventually corporal punishment. In these cases, even countries not in favor of abolition tend to refuse extradition either altogether or to make it dependent on the condition that such punishment, distasteful to the ordr* publique of the state applied to, isnot inflicted. Thus, in discussing the German Extradition Law of 23 December 1929 in the Reichstag, a corresponding passus was not included in the law only for fear of invoking international entanglements by criticising foreign penal laws; yet, the Reichstag, in this respect, took the following resolutions:

"the Government of the Reich is to be requested to consider ment unusual in Germany will be inflicted."

These examples may suffice, For, they show already that there is in international extradition law a principle which has attained such little practical significance only due to the, up to now, small number of states favoring abolition, but the theoretical import of which is on equal standing with the other extradition principles: the principle of the prohitition of the death penalty in the relation of the abolitionist state to the non-abolitionist state.

b) The Application, to this Trial. of the Principle of theExclusion of the Death Penalty in International Legal Aid Relations. Here, it must be examined if and to what extent the principle established under a) also has validity for the proceedings before the American Military Tribunal, Since, here, it isnot a question of extradition proceedings the principles found in a) can be applied only in analogy; however, the analogous applicability of the afore-said principle to the subject-matter of the present case is a cogent necessity.

According to Art. I of the Law No. 10, the Moscow Declaration of 30 October 1943 "concerning responsibility of Hitler followers for atrocities committed" and the London Agreement of 8 August 1945 "concerning prosecution and punishment of war criminals" are an inseparable part of Law No. 10.

This means that the regulations set down in the last paragraphs of the Moscow Declaration about the competency to sentence war criminals also apply to proceedings to Low No. 10; thereby, the following rules are established: 1. for crimes locally not determined the competency of the international military courts is indicated; 2. for locally determined crimes, primarily, the competency of national military courts is indicated.

The indictment shows the acts of the defendants to be "locally determined" in the sense of the Moscow Declaration: the acts the defendants are charged with took place, without exception, in the national territory of the Soviet Union. a court of the Soviet Union, which, by the Moscow Declaration, would have had to decide "according to the laws of these liberated countries". But since they were placed before an American Court, this results for the latter in certain limitations of decision* for the American court derives its competency not from their own primary rights, but from their being public administrators or trustees of the primarily touched Soviet interests.

One of these limitations is the Law of the Soviet Union of 20 May 1947, by which the defendant cannot be sentenced to death, but, at the most, to 25 years of penal detention. concrete is irrelevant for the judgment of the situation with regard to its material legality. For, in this case, too, the American court remains the trustee only of the state primarily entitled to inflict punishment. But it would be in contradiction to the promises of international law applying to such a public legal trusteeship if the American court, exercising jurisdiction in the concrete case only "by proxy", would inflict penalties the law of the primarily affected state has expressly abolished for analogous cases, to be sure, also in regard to war criminals. including the jurisdiction in the territories in Germany occupied by the Soviets.

In conclusion, therefore, it must be scertained: 1. Inasfar as the Law No. 10 represents itself as an International agreement between the signatory states, it has, to be sure, formally not been influenced by the Law of the USSR of 30 May 1947. But it must be examined if, due? to the no longer existing communis opinio of the signatory powers, the stipulation of Art. II subsection 3 a did not become materially irrelevant. This examination, being foremost a questio facti, is up to the court.

2. Independent of the decision on point 1 above, the applicability of Art II subsection 3 a of Law No. 10 in its character as internal law of the signatory states did, by acknowledged principles of international penal law, become inadmissible then, as the Soviet Union is the party primarily entitled to inflict punishment. In these cases, even a nonSoviet court may not pronounce the penalty of death provided for in Art, II subsection 3 a.

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor, that is the end of the section, and it would be a suitable occasion to have the recess.

PRESIDENT: Very well. The Tribunal will be in recess 15 minutes.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed, Dr. Aschenauer.

DR. ASCHENAUER (ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENDANT OHLENDORF): with membership in organizations, which the IMT has declared to be criminal: namely membership in the Schutzstaffel of the NSDAP (generally known as the "SS") and in the "Security Service of the Reichsfuehrer SS" (generally known as"SD"). judgment. Because he neither was (comp. IMT Judgm.) a member of the Allgemeine SS, nor the Waffen-SS or the SS-death head - units nor an SS-member within a Police Department, but rather he was an SS-Fuehrer, at last SS-Gruppenfuehrer in the "Security Service of the Reichsfuehrer-SS" (this is what was written on his membership card), that is member of the SS-formation SD.

This kind of SS-membership, however, is according to the IMT judgment treated as membership in the Security Service of the RFSS (gnerally known as the SD) not within the scope of the SS, but in the judgment against the SS it is in respect to this membership referred to the judgment against the Gestapo and the SD. I quote page 113 of the "Judgment of Nuernberg":

"Conclusions": "..........the Tribunal includes in the SS all persons who officially were accepted as members into the SS including the members of the General SS, the members of the Waffen-SS, the members of the SS-Deathhead units and the members of the various Police departments, "Then the judgment goes on to say: "The Tribunal does not include the so-called Reiter-SS. The Security Service of the Reichsfuehrer-SS will be dealt with in the judgment of the Tribunal against the Gestapo and the SD." tion or group within the SS for the purpose of the judgment by the IMT, especially in regard to the SD, is in harmony with the real situation. For after the SS became independent in 1934 there was no "general membership in the SS." No applicant was accepted generally into the SS, but the acceptance into the SS and the membership therein became cemented into a certain organization or group of the SS. The judgment on the declaration of criminal organizations or groups corresponds to this situation, by, in leaning on the legal institute of conspiracy, predicating the charge of membership in an organization upon the supporting membership to a certain perpetrator-organization or perpetratorgroup, namely conscious cooperation in a criminal group for criminal purposes (compare IMT-Transcript, page 16,503). that OHLENDORF belonged to an organization or to a group of the SS outside of the SD, I may in my comments on Count III of the indictment limit myself to OHLENDORF's membership in the SD. IMT judgment the SS special formation SD was not convicted as a whole. And in view of the goal of the indictment in the IMT Trial there would have been no room for that, like with any conspiracy indictment to obtain punishment for assistance in the crime, and according to the opinion of the judgment that "criminal organization" means essentually "cooperation for criminal purposes" (comp. official edition, Court No. II, Case No. IX.

Vol. I, p. 258). For the SS-formation SD was a purely summary designation for SS-members of certain branches of service, who were administered by this organization merely in personnel matters. The SS-formation SD itself neither was charged with any material tasks nor did it carry out any material work of its own. Also no SS-service was done in this formation. It was not even organized in units. Its members did not meet within the aegis of its organization. Therefore the members could not obtain a common opinion on objective purposes of the organization, much less combine for common purposes. This is the reason why actually it has now become a general practice with the Spruchkammern in the American as well as the British Zone to evaluate the larger number of members of the SS-Special formation SD (for instance members of the Kripo, Stapo) as mere wearers of uniform and to exonerate them of membership with the SS in spite of their membership in the SS by way of the SS-Special formation SD. of the Security Service of the Reichsfuehrer SS (commonly called SD) as membership in a criminal organization therefore, has been limited by the IMT in its judgment to the members of the Offices III, VI, and VII of the RSHA, although also from the RSHA the SD-members of the Offices I and II belonged to it. The SS-activity stated to be criminal membership in the SD, therefore, is according to the IMT judgment to be found in the work of theSD-Offices III, VI and VII. All other members of the SD count as uniform wearers.

The defendant OHLENDORF was honorary member of Office III (SDdomestic service) of the RSHA, the so-called Spheres of Life-Intelligence Service.

According to Article 10 of the Statute "the criminal character of the troup of organization is considered as proven and cannot be contested." of which the organizations were declared to be criminal, belongs Court No. II, Case No. IX.

however "that the guilt within the meaning of Criminal Law is a personal one and that mass punishments are to be avoided", "innocent persons should not be punished." (P. 96 "The Verdict of Nuernberg").

Furthermore, the following is to be taken into consideration:

"Since .... the declaration concerning the organizations and groups will determine the criminal character of their members, this declaration should except those who had no knowledge of the criminal aims oh actions of the (that means "of these") organizations, as well as those who were drafted into the organizations by the State, unless they participated personally in the actions which were declared to be criminal by Article 6 of the Statute. The mere fact of membership is not sufficient to make one subject to such declarations". (B. 96 "The Verdict of Nuernberg"). tioned actions must be crimes of which the defendant became aware as having been committed within the framework of the organization of the SD, or in which he participated within the framework of his organization - in this case the SD - Office III - that means, not actions which are considered as criminal and which were committed outside the SD or in which the defendant participated outside of his organization - in this Case the SD Office III. cause of his membership of theSD- Office III Reich Main Security Office - is incumbent on the Prosecution. The Military Tribunal II v. OSWALD POHL and others expressly stated in the opinion concerning the defendant SCHEIDE (official text of the Verdict, p. 95 ff.) that the Prosecution has to produce evidence which may be considered as being beyond every reasonable doubt. The "high" position of the defendant SCHEIDE alone would not be sufficient to constitute a suspicion of criminal knowledge sufficient for a conviction.

of a compulsory membership in an organization, perpetration of or a sufficient form of participation in a war crime or a crime against humanity, within the framework of the organization, must be positively proved. According to the verdict on SCHEIDE in Case IV it must be incontestably proved that an accused person during his membership in an organization had had a positive knowledge of crimes committed in the framework of this organization, or, as far as he was a compulsory member, that he participated personally in criminal actions. According to this verdict it is, therefore, not sufficient that a defendant receives, at any time or place, outside of his organization which was declared to be criminal, knowledge of crimes against the laws of war and humanity committed by other organizations, or that he was himself guilty of War crimes or crimes against humanity. generally of membership in criminal organizations, more precisely the SS and the SD. In this Count 3 it only refers to the verdict of the IMT, according to which the SS and the SD were declared to be criminal organizations, and that the IMT frequently referred to this decision to the crimes with which the Einsatzgruppen are charged. Consequently the Prosecution considers it to be already a proof of criminal activity within the framework of the SS and SD, if the defendant is convicted of crimes against humanity during his activity with the Einsatzgruppen. That means, the Prosecution considers the Einsatzgruppen as parts or agencies of the SS or the SD. this in its description of the Einsatzgruppen as military units of a special kind, it nevertheless brings the SD into a connection with the Einsatzgruppen by declaring the SD in the Offices III, IV and VII of the Reich Main Security Office to be criminal. I shall make clear at another place of my plea that the Einsatzgruppen in fact were no agencies or parts of the Offices of the Reich Main Security Office.

or a group it will be sufficient for the pending trial to point to the fact that neither in the proceedings before the IMT nor in the indictment in Case IX was it alleged, stated, or much less proved that the Einsatzgruppen had been an organization or group of the SS. On the contrary, they were military units of a special kind, which were not intended to last. They were not formed by a voluntary union of a majority of persons, likewise their tasks and their aims were not established by unanimous agreement of their members. At the time of the formation of the Einsatzgruppen the members knew neither the aims nor the tasks. They were not asked either, nor did they give their consent, as to whether they wished to participate in the tasks of the Einsatzgruppen or not. The Einsatzgruppen were rather formed by a military order and the members were individually assigned by military orders. The exceptional temporary character of the Einsatzgruppen was so strongly marked that they were not even organized into an independent actual unit. Outside of a relative majority of conscripted civilians who had been drafted for labor, the Einsatzgruppen comprised detailed members of the Gestapo (Secret State Police), of the Criminal Police, of the SD, of the Regular Police, of the Waffen-SS and of the Armed Forces. The men detailed to the Einsatzgruppen wore the uniforms of their home organization (i.e. the regular and drafted members of the Regular Police wore the uniform of the Regular Police), the groups of the entail any kind of membership in the SS, nor did it constitute a new membership in a new organization or group.

the Prosecution takes as a point of departure the fact that Ohlendorf had been ordered against his will to the Einsatzgruppe D (See Pros. Doc. NO 2875 in Doc. Book of the Pros No. III.) That such an order by Himmler or Heydrich did not leave any alternative to the person concerned, and that a refusal to obey this order would have entailed severe punishment, is also acknowledged by the IMF. But, since the IMT tries to divest this irresistible coercion of its import by tracing it back to the voluntary membership as an offical in the Security Police or the SD, the representative of the Prosecution in Case IX, Mr. Walton, in cross-examining the defendant Ohlendorf also attempted to demonstrate this causal connection in the case of the defendant Ohlendorf, However, without success. the time of the Russian campaign, Ohlendorf had no employment connection with the SD. Neither was he draft-deferred for wartime employment in the SD. Rather, Ohlendorf had a mobilization order for the Reichsgruppe Trade, the organization by which he was employed (Sea doc. No. 54, Exh. No. 59 in Ohlendorf Doc. Bk. IV). This fact alone had, up to 1941, prevented his drafting into the army for which he was drafted originally. And only this retention by the Reich Group Commerce made his compulsory induction by the Reichsfuehrer-SS in 1941, possible. Mr, Walton asked: "Is it not a fact that if you had been a member of the SS and the SD before the war, you would have been inducted to some branch of the Armed Forces different from the SS and the SD"?

Answer:

"Unfortunately, I cannot decidethis theoretically, for, as I said before, I was draft-deferred for the Reich Group Commerce. However, very many persons were inducted into the Einsatz who were not members of the SS and who had nothing whatever to do with the SS, and who could be inducted just for the reason that, up to that date, they Court No. II, Case No. IX.

were in a position beyond the immediate reach of the Armed Forces, that is, for example, in protected enterprises". .....

And then, Mr. Walton, himself, asked:

"Then, it was due to your draft-deferment that you were not assigned to the Armed Forces, but to the SS and the SD units?" And Ohlendorf answered, in accord with the true state of affairs: "That is so." of the Reich Group Commerce and not as a full-time member of the SD. Like hundreds of others, he was taken away from civilian private employment. Furthermore, his honorary membership in the SD was, by his being ordered to Russia, not affected at all. Just like any other person inducted into the Einsatzgruppe from civilian life under compulsion by the state, he remained, during the time he was a member of the Einsatzgruppe in Russia, in his private employment relationship as an employee of the Reich Group Commerce and received from there his salary all the time he was with the Einsatz in Russia (See affidavit Dr. Franz Hayler in Suppl. Doc. Bk. Ohlendorf, Doc. No. 64, Exh. No. 65.). Ohlendorf's honorary position in the SD as Head of Office III, SD Interior Service of the RSHA was suspended. During this time he engaged in no activities whatever in the SD, rather, his membership was inactive (See affidavit Hoettel in IMT trial, Transcript p. 14504/5 and Ohlendorf's uncontradicted statement in the same instance, Transcript P. 1831-32.) I am citing from this statement:

"The fact that I commanded an Einsatzgruppe has no connection with my position in Office III, which was given me as a person and not as Head of Office III. I.e., as Head of an Einsatzgruppe I had an entirely new function and a position completely separated from my former position".

Ohlendorf's activity in Einsatzgruppe D must therefore be considered independent from his honorary affiliation with the SD, to say Court No. II, Case No. IX.

nothing of the circumstance that even before the war and at the time he was ordered to Einsatzgruppe D, he was no longer a voluntary member of the SD and had, already in 1938, given up his employment in the SD to remove himself from dependence on the SS and the SD. activity of Office III, SD Interior in the RSHA, and the activities of the Einsatzgruppen which can be charged as war crimes and crimes against humanity. Such a material connection has not even been alleged, much less been proved by the Prosecution. Such a connection is also in contradiction to the task of Office III SD-Interior of the RSHA, which was so aptly described in the C.I. Handbook Germany, published by Supreme Headquarters Allied Forces, Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G/2 Counter Intelligence Subdivision. It says therein under sub-section IV "The German Intelligence Service" as follows: "..... The SD within the Reich, RSHA Office III, with its local branch offices constitutes the Party news agency inside of Germany. It maintains for its purposes a network of news men for every sector of German life, ... drawn from all social strata and callings. The information supplied by them is worked into situation reports which the Regional District Offices then relay to the RSHA. These reports are extremely candid and give a complete picture of the state of mind and the atmosphere in Germany ..." their charge regarding Count 3, that Ohlendorf, within the SD Office III of the RSHA, had committed war crimes and crimes against humanity, or had known about such crimes in the sphere of the SD, one can ascertain that the Prosecution has made no attempt whatever to blame Ohlendorf of such facts to say nothing of proving them. the SD Main Office and of the Office III SD-Interior of the RSHA, which determined the tasks and activities of the Organization of the SD-Interior, offers no points of departure for criminal activities in Court No. II, Case No. IX.

the sense of Article 6 of the Statute. It was designed for consideration of political and criminal investigation of objective information material. Accordingly, neither Office III nor its regional substructure the SD-Sections, were connected, for example, with the opposite departments (KPD, SPD, Jews, etc.) or with police affairs (Sabotage, espionage, etc.). The organizations were, rather organized according to sectors of public life and, correspondingly were charged with the departments for Justice and Administration, Folkdom and Public Health, Culture, Science and Education and Economics. Furthermore, the Office III SD Interior of the RSHA had no executive power whatever and absolutely no aims and purposes requiring the practice or support of police executive measures, neither for their own Offices nor for any other Office. The Presiding Judge of this Tribunal, himself, ascertained this in the course of the cross-examination of the defendant Seibert in regard to his activity in Office III, in which Seibert headed one of the 4 Groups: (I am quoting from p. 2521 of the Transcript).

Pres. Judge: "Well, no, Dr. Gawlik, it is quite right that you show here that the work in this Office was entirely legal and correct . . . and further on - I quote Pres.

Judge: "That is absolutely right, Dr. Gawlik, but now that is settled. And if the Prosecution does not refute it then it is so, namely that his activity in this special Office does not include anything criminal . . ." of Office III differ in no respect in their character and their activity from Group III D in which the defendant Seibert worked. under the leadership of the defendant Ohlendorf? him, "How do the people concerned react to the measures of the National Court No. II, Case No. IX.

Socialist Reich and its leading organization, and what effect do these measures have on these people, actually or in the forseeable future, to gather suitable facts, opinions, moral and mental reaction by a network of reporters from every social sphere and all ways of life, and to transform them into reports. The resulting reports were evaluated and condensed, and published by Office III as "Reports from the Reich", appearing at first daily, later once a week, and made available to all the leading departments in the Party and State. They spheres of life. The intent and purpose of this reporting service were to replace the positive opposition, lacking in the Third Reich, and the healthy and positive public criticism necessary in a sound commonwealth. (See, among other, Affidavit Hans Fritzsche, Doc. Book I, Doc. No. 6, Exh. No. 28). For a better understanding of this activity I wish to refer to Ohlendorf's conception, which I shall present later of the National Socialist State, as Ohlendorf wanted to develop it through his work. In order to have at least a substitute for the missing public criticism about National-Socialist politics, Ohlendorf built up the SD-Interior Service in spite of the constant resistance and opposition of the influential hierarchy of the Third Reich. The numerous affidavits of his co-workers in SD-Interior and the recipients of the SD-Reports prove exactly what is said in the above mentioned C.I. Handbook: (Doc. Bk. I, Doc. No. 5, Dr. Gerhard Klopfer, 10, Dr. med.

of Ohlendorf was practically an illegal matter since he lacked any authorization of the competent authorities for this activity. He carried it out on his own responsibility. The SD, as the only information service of the Party, had been authorized by the Party only as its own information service. Bormann, the chief of the party chancellory, was right in actually accusing the SD-Interior that it was no longer doing any work in the fields of enemy intelligence and was dealing with questions which only concerned the individual party offices, and that it was becoming the "mouthpiece of defeatism". The SD-Interior under Ohlendorf's command, although an institution of the Party but in opposition to the chief of the Party Chancellory and even in opposition to the Reichsfuehrer SS to whom, in his capacity as the chief of Office III of the SD-Interior, Ohlendorf was subordinated in accordance with the table of organization, had developed into the vary opposite of what these offices expected, namely into the mouthpiece of the positive opposition. organizations evolved in the course of the war more and more to an actual, and partly very strong opposition, against the faulty development of National Socialism realized by Ohlendorf, and against the practice of National Socialism and its conspicuous leading personalities. It was only thanks to Ohlendorf's tactical skill and diligent conduct that he was able to remain in this state of opposition till the end of the regime, which not only was for the benefit of his own Court No. II, Case No. IX.

people but also for all the other nations and national groups within the territories occupied by Germany.

Let me quote nere only the most conspicuous proof for this contention: 1.) In Ohlendorf's efforts for anthroposophy the defense has quoted, as an example, the attempt made by Ohlendorf to sustain, in an absolutely tolerant manner, a spiritually manifold life in contrast to the onesided aspirations of Nazi ideologists; although he was opposed to the ideology of anthroposophy, the latter, having been persecuted during the time of the Nazi regime and finally outlawed, nevertheless found in Ohlendorf its best supporter and protector against all attempts by the offices of the NSDAP and the Nazi state to extermina this philosophy and all its institutions from public life. The affidavits of Dr. Elisabeth Klein and of Dr. Rudolf Hauschka give proof to this. Frau Dr. Klein confirms that Ohlendorf, with respect to the anthroposophical society and its institutions did not only show a tolerant attitude but also used his influence on behalf of the se institutions, although they were fanatically rejected by the highest Party leaders like Heydrich and Bormann. She furthermore confirms that Ohlendorf for that reason was opposed and isolated by a number of authorities. Dr. Hauschka confirms that, in anthroposophical circles, Ohlendorf had the reputation of a daring fighter against the Nazi cultural terror and that he used his influence on behalf of anthroposophy under very great risk for his own person without that in many cases the then persecuted persons had even suspected this. Frau Dr. Barlen eventually confirms, in rounding off this subject that a document from the files of the Reichsfuehrer-SS which came to her notice as late as during the days of collapse, contained an expression of strong distrust against Ohlendorf on the part of the Reichsfuehrer SS. 2.) The defendant Ohlendorf attempted twice to stop the Jewish policy of the Third Reich and steer it into an orderly course. The first cause was the elimination of the Jews from the economy with the climax of the so-called "crystal night" (Kristallnacht") and the following defamatory discrimination of the Jews (Yellow Star, etc.)

He put his SD-machinery to work in order to investigate these incidents and in detailed reports he expressed his opinion against these acts. In 1939/40 Ohlendorf twice suggested to Heydrich to create a Jewish minority state (Affidavit by Dr. Ehlich, Doc. No. 10, Exhibit No. 33). Ohlendorf at that time met with a sharp repudiation. Moreover, von der Heyde confirms in his affidavit that Ohlendorf repeatedly and successfully used his influence at the competent Section IV for Jewish employees of the I.G. Farben without even knowing them. As for the rest compare also the affidavit by Frau Barlen.

Ohlendorf's attitude and conduct in regard to the Jewish question can only then be understood if one is familiar with his views about people and race which became the leading motives of his thinking and acting and therefore also of his activity in the SD. To this point I quote from the affidavit by Dr. Hans Ehlich since in his group this view of Ohlendorf had to be expressed more clearly:

"Ohlendorf had quite a clear fundamental conception of the people's character. To him nation meant a community of people of the same race shaped together by a common history, language and culture. To him folkdom was the expression of a nation's character and the outward forms of its national existence. The nation as a community, based on the changing relationship of the individual, and the people as a whole were to him the expression of the natural law of mankind, a divine act of creation. Thus, Ohlendorf saw in the various nations neither superior nor inferior races but the various tones of the creative symphony "mankind". He regarded race merely as a biological conception. To him the various nations were not superior or inferior but different in character. He therefore regarded as wrong and directed against the laws of mankind the domination of one nation with its principles of life over another nation. On the contrary he aimed to achieve an order of nations in which every nation can develop in accordance with its character and its possibilities and qualifications.

Neither did he consider a nation to be bound to a state organization. Ohlendorf frequently indicated, by giving the Polish people as an example, that a people can retain its national existence for long times without being organiz ed into a state. The Jewish people too, was mentioned by him as a proof for this fact. Therefore, for the purpose of solving the Jewish question he was of the opinion that the aim could only be achieved through creation of a closed Jewish territory in which the Jewish people were to create a state in accordance with their national character...." and conduct of those personalities of the Third Reich who were outstanding authorities in regard to this point.

If his assistant Roessner in the above, under paragraph 1) quoted affidavit describes Ohlendorf's aim as a will for the accomplishment of a way of life in accordance with the German and European character for the promotion of moral liberty and responsibility of the individual, and if he proves that this will was borne by a humanitarian thought taken from the depths of the nations, then these conceptions and motives of Ohlendorf are incompatible with the fundamental idea of race hatred and racial contempt as charged in this indictment.

Ohlendorf himself answered my question: Why did you instruct the SD to oppose, of all people, Reichsleiter Ley, Goebbels and Bormann ? I quote the answer: "Because these three men, as nobody else, challenged the moral value of the human being." The moral value of the human being and his inner freedom was the fundamental motive for his acting and thinking and to him it also meant the recognition and promotion of the human rights of every race and folkdom. 3.) Ohlendorf, as a result of his work in the SD, has also successfully employed this conception for the best possible treatment of the foreign workers.

The best proof for this is the memorandum prepared in connection with these questions concerning the treatment of the foreign workers, which was issued on 15 April 1943 by the Reich Ministry of Propaganda and the RSHA, the Reich Security Main Office. The points contained in this memorandum orginate from the reporting system of Office III. It was only due to the urgent representations of Ohlendorf that this memorandum was issued, that the respective authorities in the Party and State used their influence that injustices, chicanneries, insults and mistreatment towards these people were prohibited, that the barbed wire fences around the camps of the Eastern workers were removed and that otherwise a housing, fit for human beings, and a supply with food, was ordered. (Affidavit by Dr. Ehlich, Doc. Book I, Doc. No. 10, Exhibit No. 33. pages 46/47). 4.) The policy of violence, applied in the Ukraine by the Gauleiter and Reich Commissioner Koch, was repeatedly and continuously attacked by Ohlendorf after his return from Russia. As a result, he came into a serious conflict with Himmler to whom Koch had made a complaint. Himmler, at that time, instructed Kaltenbrunner the SD ought to be decimated and that at last it was time for the SD to discontinue its reports, otherwise its responsible chief would be put into custody. 5.) In a manner, similar to that against Koch, Ohlendorf also turned against the policy of violence applied by Terboven in Norway. In this case he changed from the indirect fight to the open fight against Terboven and also ordered the co-defendant Braune, who at that time was in Norway and previously active in the SD, to use all means in taking steps against Terboven's negative acitvity. With regard to the result of this order by Ohlendorf I refer to the evidence and the Final Flea in the case against Braune. 6.) As a result of his work in the SD, Ohlendorf was in strong opposition to almost all known representatives of the Third Reich, because of their conduct not only towards their own people but also towards other nations.

and requested the letter's dismissal from the SD. Goebbels prohibited the issue of the SD reports in the Ministry of Propaganda and accomplished that Himmler prohibited the "Reports from the Reich" because he regarded the strong criticism, practiced therein, as a spread of defeatism. and openly heedless drawing up of the SD reports; he was right in being under the impression that Ohlendorf and his assistants made themselves the mouthpiece of an opposition. Sauckel's policy with respect to the foreign workers was likewise strongly attacked by Ohlendorf as it is confirmed by the witness Dr. Michel. Because of the oppositional activity of the SD, Bormann at first attempted to get control over the SD. When, due to Ohlendorf's resistance, he did not succeed, he finally banned in 1944 all full time and honorary party functionaries from participation in the activities of the SD Interior Service and threatened to report to the Fuehrer.

The hostile attitude Himmler's towards Ohlendorf which is confirmed by various affidavits and also by a letter of Himmler, could be traced solely to Ohlendorf's activity in the SD Interior Service Office, III of the Reich Security Main Office (compare among others affidavit by Dr. Franz Hayler).

Moreover, Himmler's Chief Adjutant, Karl Wolff, makes a statement concerning Himmler's rejection of Ohlendorf.

Wolff testifies about the open conflict which broke out between Himmler and Ohlendorf in the fall of 1939 because of the system Ohlendorf applied in directing the Sd Interior Service. By order of Himmler, Wolff had had to request Ohlendorf to resign from his service in the SD since an agreement between him and Ohlendorf was not possible.

If I summarize the points of view concerning Ohlendorf's membership in the SD, the following picture in regard to this question will result and I am in the position to demonstrate this picture by quoting Prosecution Document NO-2875, Volume III D, page 56 and the following pages.

1934 in Kiel and 1935 in Berlin, because of his critical behavior towards National Socialist institutions, he nevertheless takes up again a suggestion by his former teacher, Professor Jens Jessen, and declares his readiness to accept a political-critical intelligence mission in the field of economy within the SD, which up till then had been unknown to him. This was Ohlendorf's only motive for entering the SD, and it cannot be disputed that it contained no criminal aims whatsoever. or the will to agree to criminal purposes. ing personalities of National Socialism, who did not want open criticism. Partly it was made impossible for him to work in the way he wanted. This caused him as early as in 1937/38 to endeavor his separation from the SD. However, he succeeded to dissolve his service relationship to the SD only as a full-time employee, on an honorary basis Heydrich, the Chief of the SD Main Office, forced him to say on, on the basis of the peculiar service relationship of fealty obligating only one side. Thus from 1938/39 Ohlendorf was only honorary director of the Main Office II, Economics of the SD Main Office. Warsaw in November 1939, was again prevented by Heydrich.

and soul. Already in 1937 Heydrich declared: "Nobody can leave the Security Police, unless we do not want him anymore. In this case however the road leads through the concentration camps." It is therefore wrong if the IMT puts the compulsion exerted merely under the pressure of the loss of an official position. Besides it is not possible at all to attribute such a motive to the defendant Ohlendorf, since, as I proved above, he had given up his position with the SD and since 1938 was forced against his will to continue as a member. III of the RSHA was put on a new basis inasmuch as the service with this office was considered war service and the members thereof placed under martial law. Every attempt, even as much as a request for leaving the SD was made punishable. The official compulsion to remain in the SD was the same as the obligation to which every soldier was subjected and which made any separation impossible without endangering body and soul. And contrary to the prerequisite assumed in the quotation of the IMT judgment that this compulsion was possible only through the martial laws and therefore losses its value because the person concerned was a voluntary member of the organization when the compulsive situation commenced, this fact is not true for the defendant Ohlendorf, since, as already pointed out, and which has been proven, he was since 1938 at the latest, only an involuntary member of the SD. feel assured by the evidence, the findings of the Court and the Prosecution that the possibility for exculpation granted in this point by the IMT-judgment and the statements of the Prosecution in the IMT-trial, is achieved for the defendant Ohlendorf, inasmuch as it is established, that according to what his superiors told him before he entered the SD 1) the purpose of the SD was the reporting on abuses and miscarriage of developments within the National Socialist Reich; that is the Court No. II, Case No. IX.

2) his motive for entering the SD and therefore the SS was a politic possible to him by Party organizations; also the opposite of 3) once this aim does not seem to him to be sufficiently guaranteed 1938 to be permitted to leave the SD.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess until 1:45.

(The hearing reconvened at 1345 hours, 4 February 1948).

THE MARSHAL: Take your seats please.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Aschenauer, would you mind? Dr. Mayer wishes to make a statement.

DR. MAYER: Mayer for Braune.

Your Honor, I have a request to make to the Tribunal. It is that the defendant Braune be excused from the session tomorrow afternoon so that the defendant Braune will be able to have a discussion with a Dr. Rheinford who, as a prosecution witness, is staying in the witnesses' part of the prison here. This Dr. Rheinford was the legal advisor of the brotherin-law of the defendant, and the defendant wants to discuss difficulties concerning an inheritance matter of his which occurred because his fatherin-law died. I would be very grateful to the Tribunal if they would permit the defendant Braune to do this, thus enabling him to settle his private financial affairs.

THE PRESIDENT: The record will show the purpose for which the defendant Braune will be excused tomorrow afternoon from attendance in court. The marshal will make all necessary arrangements.

DR. MAYER: Thank you, your Honors.

THE PRESIDENT: You may continue Dr. Aschenauer. DR. ASCHENAUER: declares the SD - Department III of the RSHA - to be a criminal organisation, I consider it proper, going beyond the range of tasks of Department III under Ohlendorf's direction, to clarify several organizational mistakes which are contained in the IMT verdict and which according to general opinion are open to attack as individual findings among the reasons given in support of the verdict.

In the reasons in support of the verdict it says:

"The Gestapo and the SD were coordinated for the first time on 26 June 1936 by having Heydrich, Chief of the SD, appointed Chief of the Security Police, which was intended to comprise both the Gestapo and the Criminal Police."

(The Nuernberg Verdict, p. 102).

"Himmler.....in his capacity as Reichsfuehrer SS and Chief of the German Police, issued......his decree of 26 June 1936, which enrolled both the Criminal Police or Kripo and the Gestapo in the Security Police and placed the Security Police as well as the SD under Heydrich's orders."

Concerning this the following must be said :

1. The SD was not placed under Heydrich for the first time by Himmler's decree of 26 June 1936, but on the contrary Heydrich had already been in charge of the SD since 1932. He held this command without interruption from 1932 until his death in 1942.

2. Heydrich did not take charge of the Gestapo for the first time on 26 June 1936, but had already become Leader of the Secret State Police Department in April 1934.

3. Heydrich's appointment as Chief of the Fain Office Security Police on 26 June 1936, therefore, was not a transfer of the business of the Security Police to the Chief of the SD, but merely a further extension of the position he had held up to then as Leader of the Secret Police Department. The Main Office Security Police was merely the new organizational form of an already existing condition. Since, of course, the State Police force of the provinces had been under the leadership of Himmler and Heydrich since 1934, the centralization and nationalization of the police forces, which had already been carried out in fact, also required a suitable outward form.

Nor were the Gestapo and the Kripo "enrolled" in the Security Police, but rather the term "Security Police" was invented as a common, inclusive term for the Gestapo and the Kripo, which besides that also retained their old names of Gestapo and Kripo, independently. In spite of the newly created Main Office Security Police, the Secret State Police Department and the Reich Criminal Police Department were also kept as central executive heads for the Gestapo and Criminal Police respectively.

purely a matter concerning the police, as a result of Himmler's appointment as Chief of the German Police in the Reich Ministry of the Interior.

The SD was not affected by this. The SD Main Office had already existed since 1933; it remained independent as before. The reorganization produced no new situation for the SD with respect to the --- Gestapo or the Security Police, since the SD Main Office and the Secret State Police Department had already been directed simultaneously by Heydrich in person since 1934.

In particular, however, no "coordination" whatsoever of the tasks of the Security Police and the SD, was now effected, nor was any attempt made to secure this by decree. Nothing was changed in 1936 in the SD's work as the Party's information service.

4. Likewise erroneous is the view of the IMT that the consolidation of the Security Police and the SD was in every way confirmed through the foundation of the RSHA by the decree of 27 September 1939 and that both were merged together in a single administrative unit. Also erroneous is the conclusion drawn from the foundation of the RSHA that the SD was now definitely established and active as counter-intelligence organization for the Security Police. which the IMT believed it was able to declare about the development of the SD in connection with the Security Police. the creation of the Main Office Security Police under Heydrich in 1936 the SD drew constantly farther apart from the work of the Gestapo in its range of tasks. To be sure, the SD retained its independent office in the SD Main Office; as representative of its Chief, Heydrich, it also had its own Staff Director who for all practical purposes was the chief superior of the members of the SD Main Office.

(Heydrich himself personally saw only a few members of the SD Main Office on official business, since after 1934 he had his offices in the building of the State Police.) Thus, the SD was also independent in its range of tasks, which were specified by a decree of the Deputy of the Fuehrer in 1934. But for the SD the legitimization of the Party applied only to an information service employed against the Party's enemies. And since in the meantime enemies of the Party and enemies of the State had for all practical purposes been placed on the same footing by the political and constitutional development of the Third Reich and by the creation of the Gestapo, whose principle task and purpose was to combat them, the State police naturally now endeavored, after its organization was definitely established, to concentrate in its own hands the informational aspect of its work on political enemies as well. The justification for this claim is easily discernable. To every investigating service it is obvious that cases to be prosecuted or investigated and its own informational work of investigation and prosecution cannot be separated from each other and that a competing information service is only harmful to its own work. Thus, during the period from 1936 to 1939 things develop to such a point in the SD that through the initiative of the leading State Police officials, Best and Mueller, the SD's original task, which was set for it by the Party as that of collecting information against its political enemies, is first limited and then finally taken away from it. In 1938/39 every tangible enemy information service in the SD comes to an end. A Central Department II/I of the SD Main Office, which up to that time, had done the work of collecting information about the opposition, is dissolved and, insofar as this had not already been done before, its work is transferred to the Gestapo. In the meantime, however, along with the SD's Party work of collecting information about the opposition, a service for collecting information about the various occupational classes had developed in Central Department II/II. It was a miniature copy of what I have described above concerning Department III, Domestic SD, of the RSHA. Its aim, purpose and activity were concen trated exclusively on a service for obtaining factual information of a political and critical nature.

ties and business relationships -- and these things alone are under discussion in this trial -- the founding of the RSHA by the decree of 27.9.1939, contrary to the opinion of the IMT, was not the final arrangement for a coordination, but rather the final arrangement for a partition between the respective tasks and activities of the Gestapo and the SD, which were definitely separated from each other. Henceforth the Domestic SD has sole possession of political and critical business assignments and the Gestapo has sole possession of the intelligence service and executive authority for combatting tangible political and criminal enemies of the State. And neither does the henceforth definitely fixed business assignment and activity of the Domestic SD offer any reason for the assumption that it was definitely established as a counter-intelligence organization for the Security Police by the foundation of the RSHA, nor is any attempt ever made to verify this pure allegation with documentary material. However,the allegation that the Sipo and SD were merged into an organizational, administrative unit by the RSHA cannot be brought into harmony with the actual situation, either.

Himmler's plan was actually to use the RSHA as an opening wedge towards a unified State Police Corps (SS, Sipo and SD). However, in actual fact, apart from the so-called assimulation of ranks the transfer of SS ranks to police officials, this plan remained more wishful thinking on Himmler's part, and the essential reason for this lay in the fact that the Party refused to permit any consolidation of Party and state functions, the supervision of Party tasks by state agencies or even the consolidation of State organizations and Party organizations, and did not abandon this opposition up to the time of the collapse. agency, nor even one which was known to the general public. It remained an internal, administrative structure of the Chief of the Security Police and the SD, which was recognized neither by the Party nor by the State, that is, the organizations of the Security Police and the SD were not merged into one unit; contrary to the assumption of the IMT the RSHA at no time became a department of the Reich Ministry of the Interior.

The Main Office Security Police remained the department in the Reich Ministry of the Interior for the Gestapo and Kripo, and the Secret State Police Department and the Reich Criminal Police Department were retained as before as structures of the Gestapo and the Kripo. Both signed letters to the general public and both drew up their orders within the Reich Ministry of the Interior under these official names.

separately dinanced by the Party, and just as before every position on the SD's TO sheet had to be approved by the Party. The pensions which were also fixed for SD members were not pensions of the RSHA but those of the Party. The founding of the RSHA brought no changes for the Party in its relations with the organizational structure of the SD. For the Party, just as before, the SD Main Office was the only Party organization of the SD. The RSHA did not exist for the Party. Neither should this fact be misconstrued, that the administrative business of the Gestapo, Kripo and SD appeared to be jointly managed in Departments I and II of the RSHA, for in reality separate groups were employed for each of the three branches in Departments I and II, which were staffed by men from these branches. Indeed, in the case of the Criminal Police, not even all personnal and administrative matters were included in the business calendar of Departments I and II of the RSHA. property and was managed separately. The RSHA was not a property holder at all. For example, the buildings and automobiles of Department III, Domestic SD, and of the SD Sections out in the country were Party property and not in any way property of the RSHA. different basic structure of the offices of the Security Police and the SD as irrelevant by referring to the Law for safeguarding the Unity of Party and State of 1. December 1933, then it must be pointed out that contrary to its programmatic title this law in reality only regulates the legal position in the State of the NSDAP, itsformations and its attached units. On the other hand, the law offers no reason for permitting separate agencies of the Party and of the State to become one unit. The presidency of a province does not become one and the same unit with the office of the Gauleiter through the fact that it is usually directed by the local Gauleiter in his capacity as Provincial President.

Likewise, the fact that young candidates for higher administrative positions in the Ministry of Justice, the internal administration and the Party were secured jointly from the ranks of law graduates entering government service as a profession does not make those offices become one unified authority or bring about a coordination of their respective tasks any morethan the partially joint training of the candidates for higher career positions in the Security Police and the SD offers any reason for unification of the Security Police and SD. Nor is this picture changed by the organization of the Security Police and the SD in the regional sphere and in the occupied territories. The IMT itself must admit that for Germany and the territories which were incorporated within the civilian administration of the Reich "the local Gestapo, Criminal Police and SD offices took separate forms". ("The Nuernberg Verdict", p. 103.) If it attempts to discount this actual,territorial and business separation by declaring that the separate officesswere nevertheless subject to the supervision of Security Police and SD inspectors attached to the staffs of the local Higher SS and Police Leaders, then in reply to this it must be said that, first, the inspectors did not belong to the staffs of the Higher SS and Police Leaders and, secondly had no real right whatsoever to issue orders to the offices of the Security Police and the SD. They did not even have any knowledge of the actual work of the local offices. Therefore, they were not able to coordinate the latter in their work, either, apart from the fact that they did not have any orders to do so. Police and the SD in the occupied territories too performed only a Security Service activity, receiving from Office III only such tasks as were in conformity with the area of jurisdiction of Office III. They too were not co-ordinated with the tasks of the Security Police. And if, as a measure of transition to independent offices of the State Police, Criminal Police and Security, only subordinate departments for the tasks of the Reich Main Security agencies were created, the reasons for this have been explained in the WANNINGER document, in every detail.

In no event one of these reasons may lead to considering a co-ordination of the activities of Security Police and Security Service an established fact. The question of the organization of the Einsatzgruppen in connection with the offices of the Reich Main Security Office will be dealt with later on, when the problems of the organization and the activities of the Einsatzgruppen will be broached, in as far as that question has not been dealt with already above. Here I only point out that the Einsatzgruppen must be treated as military units of a peculiar kind, apart from the other organization of the Reich Main Security Office, and are not apt to contribute to the support of the assertion that the Security Police and the security Service were co-ordinated within the offices III and IV of the Reich Main Security Office. Reich Main Security Office was working independently, autonomously, without consideration to, and co-ordination with, the Gestapo or Kripo. While Office III as a party office was busy with technical questions, with an intelligence service concerning the problems of the spheres of life, the task of the Gestapo was investigation into, and fight against, persons dangerous for the state in Germany and the occupied territories. Apart from that, the criminal police had the task of searching for the civilian offender -- as opposed to the political one -and of bringing him to punishment. after 1936, but especially by the year 1939, had the result of coordinating the tasks of the Security Police and Security Service. same chief. This fact of a personal union, however, was no peculiarity in Germany, but could be found in numerous places.

I need only point to GOERING as an example to make this plain. Now, as little as the simultaneous direction of the Reich Air Ministry, the Reich Forestry Office, the 4 Year Plan, and the Reichsjaegermeister Office by GOERING made for a co-ordination of the spheres of these offices, as little did that happen as between Security Police and Security Service by the fact of their joint direction by HEYDRICH. The "Chief of the Security Police and the SD" was only a letter heading of HEYDRICH's, but no authority or co-ordinated agency. The Reich Main Security Office, however, was no uniform authority of the Security Police and SD, which might have co-ordinated their activities, but rather a faction devoid of all reality, and devoid of all power of reformation for the independent structure and the spheres of tasks of Gestapo, Kripo and Security Service which in each case remained independent from other.

I have attempted to give the Court a picture of Ohlendorf's work and goals in the SD, as well as his attitude to human existence. I do not believe that anyone believes this man, who in spite of brusque rejection of his proposals by Himmler and Heydrich repeatedly insisted on a just trial for every last person in protective custody and on establishing the basic rights of the Jews, was capable of any intentions of racial extermination. For exactly this reason the question becomes urgent: under what conditions was the defendant Ohlendorf connected with the events in the East?

The main Counts of the indictment are Counts I and II (indictment pg. 5 and pg. 14ff), i.e. the charges that the defendants committed war crimes and crimes against humanity. of systematic murder of peoples and races.

In the questioning of the individual defendants the "Fuehrer Order" which initiated the measures against certain parts of the Soviet population on which the charges are based was mentioned repeatedly. Reference was made to the repeated defense and acknowledgement of this order by Himmler, Streckenbach. man troops all Jews, Gypsies, Communist officials, active Communists and all other persons who could endanger the security, were to be killed.

The only motive for this order, the "danger to security", was not only expounded in detail by Streckenbach in Pretsch and Heydrich in Berlin before the Einsatzgruppen left for Russia, but was also repeated by Himmler in Nikolajew in October 1941, when he again demanded the strict execution of this order.

When the defendant was asked in the witness box "Did you know of plans or intentions that sought extermination for racial or other reasons?" he answered:

"I expressly assure you that I neither knew of such plans nor was I called on to cooperate in any such plans.

The Obergruppen ted for the Russian campaign.

This is not only true for the were arranged; financial funds even were formed in order to help aid the poorer Jews to make this emigration possible.

Until representatives of the I. G. Farben approached me in order to overcome difficulties with the State Police.

It was then their intention to let so-called bearers of secrets emigrate.

Up to the very end I succeeded in giving such aid.

Thus at the begin the fine cooperation with the Russian population.

They were never objected to.

When Himmler was in Nikolajev, in the begin nor did he give me any other directives.

I am rather convinced it was the work of individual people."

This statement of Ohlendorf's is confirmed in many ways. The witness Wisliczeny, one of the closest collaborators of Eichmann, who was assigned to handle the Jewish questions by Heydrich, said before the I.M.T. that the order for the extermination of Jews was only issued in April 1942 (Doc. bk. Ohlendorf Ia, exhibit 58, doc. No. 37). foreign populations in the East, which were issued in 1940 and expressly approved by the Fuehrer, also speaks against the thought that an extermination of Jews or of other races was planned at that time. (Doc. Ohlendorf No. 63, 64, exh. no. 63).

The letter from Goering to Heydrich dated 31 July 1941 - Doc. PS 710) - which the Prosecution also has presented, still sees the allover solution to the Jewish question in German-dominated Europe, contrary to the conception of the I.M.T., expressly in emigration or evacuation. When in the last part of the letter the word "final solution" is used, it can be seen from the unmistakable meaning of the letter that at that time this word was not a code word for execution.

Ohlendorf's statement that he personally helped Jews to emigrate until 1941, is confirmed by document Ohlendorf No. 31, doc. ing to the Fuehrer order were not sent to Referat IV B 2 (Jews), but to the Referat department IV A 1 (Communism). The Einsatzgruppen were not connected with the Jewish Referat under Eichmann in any way (see the various statements of the defendants on the witness stand and the affidavit of Rudolf Fumy (Doc. Ohlendorf No. 32, doc. bk. Ia,) In my exposition on Ohlendorf's work with the SD I have supported the claim sufficiently that he did not personally think of or strive for an extermination of the Jewish race.

had a knowledge of plans or measures that were designed to exterminate the Jews.

in their closing statement against Otto Ohlendorf, that the executions in the Soviet Union resulting from the Fuehrer order actually were carried out for the "present and permanent security" by the Einsatzgruppen. I quote:

"These executions were carried out for the purpose of "present and permanent security" in the theater of operations of the this defendant."

Prosecution, another error which weakens their position has crept in. For it says in the record, as a quotation of Ohlendorf's statement:

". . . that these Jews are to be killed, and for the reason that German Reich."

while word for the word the quotation is used, on page 634 of the German record, goes like this:

small extent in the Crimes, was based on the same point of view. of an extension of the Fuehrer Order to goals which were to serve a "permanent" (i.e. future) securing of the territory, has been elaborated, I do not have to go into this question any further because it does not go beyond the problems covered by the Fuehrer Order. Ohlendorf himself has made a statement on the witness stand concerning the fact that after this war other nations themselves were faced with difficult decisions which pertained to a permanent securing of a territory or to a hostile population.

(Record pg. 544, pg. 755). In support of his statement I would like to refer the Tribunal to the speech of the U. S. Senator William Langer, held in the U. S. Senate in April 1946, and to the publication "The Land of the Dead", a study of the deportation from eastern Germany, Committee against Mass Expulsion, New York City. ethnic groups. Insofar as charges might be made in this connection from Document No. 2894 - doc. bk. V-D (Affidavit of Erwin Lahousen), I will discuss them when I come to the charge of "Segregation from Prisoner of War Camps". Fuehrer Order, the decree of the Fuehrer and Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces of 13 May 1941 (Doc. Ohlendorf No. 44), the "Decree for the Administration of Military Jurisdiction in the "Barbarossa" Territory and for Special Measures of the Troops", or according to the Special Decrees of the Commander in Chief of the Army as bearer of the Executive Power in his Army territory, are designated as "murder" by the Prosecution because the guilt was established without a formal trial. At this point I would only like to say that on account of the above quoted decree of the Fuehrer and Supreme Commander of the Wehrmacht of 13 May 1941 all the Armed Forces in the Russian campaign were directed not to have courts martial for the cases that the Prosecution has cited. Over and above the procedure ordered in the decree (bringing suspicious elements before an officer, to see whether they should be shot) the Einsatzgruppen made thorough investigations, held hearings etc.

and only then decided on the question of guilty or not guilty. Concerning this, the defendant Ohlendorf directed, through special orders, that in determining guilt a suspicion was not sufficient, but that the suspect must be proved to have committed an act or to be a real danger to security. made in the above quoted Decree of the Fuehrer and Supreme Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of 13 May 1941 for the Einsatzgruppen working in the theater of operations. This, therefore, was outside of the authority of Ohlendorf and his subordinates. This side of the operating methods of the Einsatzgruppen must also be considered in connection with the circumstances of international law in the territory of the Soviet Union, as I shall show later. grounds against Ohlendorf. Prosecution's cross examination of Ohlendorf. For the representative of the Prosecution argued here against Ohlendorf with the contention that the Kraimen on the Crimea were not killed although they were Jewish by religion. But their execution was stayed in agreement with the Fuehrer Order and due to the directives from Berlin which Ohlendorf received in regard to the Karaimen. nor attempts to bring proof that would show any act or intention of religious persecution by Einsatzgruppe D. not only made repeatedly in the indictment, but also played a big part in the examinations of the defendants on the witness stand. This charge and these questions can only be understood if one does not take into consideration that, in connection with Bolshevism, the political activist and the political official or the active carrier of Communist ideology are equal to extreme danger to the security of the "hostile non-Communists", class enemies or enemies of the Soviet Union who oppose them.

The Court is presented with a series of documents (Stalin Order, etc) which show how, according to the teachings and orders of the Soviet State and Army leaders a Communist official and a Communist activist are put on an equal footing with leading Partisans, saboteurs and terrorists. the witness stand have shown, simple Communist party members were not persecuted as such, and local officials also remained further in the administration, and only the active Communist was persecuted for his activity against the occupation force, then this shows, to what extent the persecution for political and ideological reasons corresponded here with the persecution that was motivated by a real danger to the security of the occupation force. According to the directions of the Einsatzgruppe D no one was to be persecuted or executed who was not guilty of a deed or action which was punishable by death under the law in force. But this method of operating is not a persecution for political or ideological reasons as usually understood, but a persecution which all occupying powers use in their own interest.

Segregation of prisoners of war. Apart from that, the defendant Ohlendorf has been charged by the Prosecution , particular in the Closing Brief, with the screening of Prisoner of War and transit camps for Communists and Party functionaries by his units. It refers to an Operational Order No. 8, issued on 17 July 1941 (Doc. Book I, Exh. No. 14) and its enclosures, in which directions were said to have been "given to the Einsatzgruppen chiefs." It then draws special attention to the Operational Order No. 14, dated 29 October 1941 which it calls a "supplementary direction" (Pros. Exh. 19). Furthermore, it is asserted that these screening kommandos could operate in the prisoner camps independently of the Army and the camp commandants.

(page 9 Closing Brief against Otto Ohlendorf). To this point I have to make the following statements: 1) Contrary to the assertions of the Prosecution, Order No. 8 of 17 July 1941 has not been given to the Einsatzgruppen in order to be carried out, but rather, as is clearly shown by page 4 of the original, only for the purpose of information which means, in the German usage "to the attention" rather than for action. That the said order was not forwarded to the Einsatzgruppen for action should not have escaped the Prosecution also, for on p. 2/3 of the original it says:

"With regard to the screening of the transit camps in the newly occupied territories (which means Russia) a separate direction will be issued to the chiefs of the Einsatzgruppen and the Security Police." "the Reichsfuehrer SS makes available Einsatzkommandos of the Security Police and the Security Service", which are "under the direct command of the Chief of the Security Police and the Security Service." of the Einsatzgruppen A-D which are being dealt with in this trial . They were instead, as shown by order of 17 July 1941, to be organized by the offices in Cracow, Radow, Warsaw, Lublin, as well as at Koenigsberg, Tilsit, Ziechenau, Allenstein and Stettin, i.e., only by the offices in the Eastern part of the Reich, and/or in the conquered Polish towns rather than in the occupied Russian gerritories. 2.) To support its assertions, the Prosecution has further submitted the Doc. NO-2894 Exh. 228, Pros. Doc. Book V-D, p. 16, an affidavit by Erwin Lahousen. In this affidavit Lahousen states that he took part in a conference in summer 1941, soon after the start of the Russian campaign. Interrogated before the IMT he makes this additional statement: (I quote) ".... approximately in July". During that conference at the Headquarters of the OKW he says, he opposed among other things the way the Einsatzgruppen used to sort out the Russian prisoners of war according to quite peculiar and arbitrary principles. The probative value of this deposition is, I think, best shown by the fact that the first order for the screening of the prisoner of war camps, issued to the Einsatzgruppen, was not sent to the Einsatzgruppen previous to the 29 October 1941, so that it reached the Einsatzgruppen as late as November.

This was the Operational Order No. 14, in Document Book III D, page 93 ff., Doc. NO-3422. This order was directed only to the Einsatzgruppen and Kommandos, as the distribution list shows on pages 1 and 2. The fact that this was the first operational order directed to the Einsatzgruppen, is shown on page 1 where it says:

"The Einsatzgruppen,will immediately detail Sonderkommando in appropriate strength in relation to the size of the camps located in their operational area under the command of an SS officer." gruppen had been ordered to do the screening before. So it cannot be explained, where Herr Lahousen might have got to know as early as in summer 1941 that the Einsatzgruppen made their selection according to peculiar and arbitrary principles, if the order, as I just proved, was really issued to the Einsatzgruppen as late as November 1941. 3.) Contrary to the statement of the Prosecution in its Closing Brief against my client that the Sonderkommandos "could operate independently from the Army and camp commandants", the Operational Order No. 14 of 29 October 1941 reads:

"Close cooperation with the camp commandants and intelligence officers is obligatory", and enclosure 1 to this order says:

"It is a matter of course that the Kommandos remain in close contact with the camp commandants and intelligence officers"; and, "Outstanding conduct on duty and off duty, best cooperation with the camp commanders is, above all, obligatory for the chief of the Sonderkommandos." 4.) Apart from the fact that the order was issued to the Einsatzgruppen not in July, but rather as late as on 29 October 1941, the defendant Ohlendorf stated as early as in his direct examination with regard to that order that in his area of command there were no such camps, which had its reasons in the fact that his Kommandos had their quarters only in the immediate combat zonem and that there no camps with a view to a longer duration were established.

Then he goes on:

"But I am positive about the fact that I had never before me a list of segregated persons, and that I never approved or rejected such lists in accordance with the direction provided for in this document. I have never seen such lists." necessarily have known of it, for he would have had to set them up according to the order, the members of these screening Kommandos would have had to send him weekly reports and he would have had to decide about the suggestions for executions, giving the screening Kommandos corresponding directions. Beginning from November, when Special Order No. 14 was issued the Einsatzgruppe of the defendant was in the Crimea. There were no prisoner of war camps here, and therefore no screening. The Prosecution has proved nothing to that effect. vit of 1 April 1947, who said:

"I had never the order to segregate Communists in Russian prisoner of war camps, but I know of the fact that members of the Security Police and the SD received the order to interrogate inmates of those camps and to carry out executive measures." interrogations, nor whether or not they became at any time practical in the area of the Einsatzgruppe D. On the other hand, Seibert elucidated the facts in an unequivocal way both in his direct and in his cross-examination. In his direct interrogation Seibert answers the question: "Do you know whether such orders were carried out?"

During his cross examination Seibert says:

Einsatzgruppe D."

"I did not got acquainted with any screening Kommandos at all within the Einsatzgruppe D." received the Operational Order No. 14 for his information when serving with the Einsatzgruppen, or whether he had heard of it subsequently in Berlin. But he had told Mr. Wartenberg that he was unable to give any details. Seibert also gave the explanations for that, he said:

"To my knowledge suggestions arrived for executions of such prisoners of war from the individual prisoner of war camps. Koenigshaus then had to prepare the execution orders and submitted them to the Office Chief IV, Mueller, for his signature." of segregations within the area of the Einsatzgruppen A-D, for there the Einsatzgruppen chief had to decide, rather than Mueller. Lindow's statements, therefore, can only refer to the activity of the Kommandos mentioned in the Operational Order No. 8 in the Eastern part of the Reich and in Poland.

the affidavit of Erwin Lahousen with the allegation that Tartars from the Crimea were segregated from prisoner of war camps and subjected to special treatment. I pointed already to the probative value of this document. Lahousen pretends to have pointed to such a case in summer 1941, whereas it has been ascertained that the Einsatzgruppen received the segregation order as late as November 1941. Beyond that, the document does not say when and where that segregation or special treatment is alleged to have taken place. It cannot possibly have occurred in the Crimea in summer 1941, for the Crimea was conquered only by the end of October 1941. Thus, no special treatment could have been employed of a kind Lahousen was able to discuss in a conference at the OKW headquarters in Berlin as early as summer 1941. This statement does not explain in what sector of a length of 2000 kilometers of the Eastern front that segregation might have occured. Thus, it cannot incriminate my client. I believe, the documents presented by the Prosecution as well as the testimonies of my client, of Seibert, Braune, and Schubert have shown sufficiently clearly the treatment the Tartars of the Crimea received by the Einsatzgruppe D. It ought to be obvious to everyone that an Einsatzgruppe and Einsatzkommando which recruited 10,000 Tartar volunteers for the fight against Bolshevism , which organize 16 voluntary Tartar Self-Defense companies, arming and training them for the fight against their own partisans, do not sort out Tartars from prisoner of war camps and shoot them. This allegation of the Prosecution is too absurd to be worth refuting.

Insane Persons. Furthermore, the Prosecution charges my client with having taken part in the euthanasia program and quotes as an evidence the operational situation report of 23 March 1942, according to which in the area to the south of Karasubasar more that 800 gypsies and insane people were shot. Apart from that it draws the attention to the execution of an insane person by the name of Romanenko by the Einsatzkommando 11 a in September 1941. stand: incriminate him, since he had gone on leave into the Reich as early as the beginning of March, together with the defendant Braune, as stated repeatedly by the Prosecution itself, so that he was not in the Crimea at all at that time. Ohlendorf stated at the witness stand:

"The report to this operational situation report refers to a period in which I myself was not in the Crimea. Nevertheless I am in a position to state firmly that no executions by shooting of insane people were carried out by my Kommandos. I had expressly forbidden this, and repeatedly issued now prohibitions for the reason that the army had on various occasions approached us with the request to shoot insane people. For this reason alone it can be ruled out that that report refers to the actions of one of my Kommandos. Incidentally, I regard this report as a false statement, as the area "to the south of Karasubasar" means woods and clay-hut where there were neither any large size villages nor asylums for insane persons".

To the Remanenko case the following nay be stated: The Prosecution Document, a letter of the Sonderkommando 11a of 10 September 1941, shows that the Commander-in-Chief of the Army had personally ordered to hand Romanenko over to Sonderkommando 11a, adding that he desired an exemplary punishment -- if possible a public execution by hanging."

executed as an insane person, who had been placed as often as three times in an asylum, for hereditary biological reasons. The letter does not show to whom it was addressed, whether or not it came to Ohlendorf's knowledge, just as the whole case. Ohlendorf said on the witness st and: directly interrogated, under oath:

"I do not know whether or not I ever saw the report. since the Commander-in-Chief had given the order direct to this commando." document in view of these circumstances. property, founding it on the confiscation of money, valuables and other property of the persons executed. done out of any private interest. On the contrary, evidence has shown that the Einsatzkommandos registered the confiscated objects in an orderly way and remitted them through the Einsatzgruppen, or directly to the Reichsbank, or the Reich Ministry of Finance, that is to the German Reich. Objects of daily use were handed over by request of the Wehrmacht to be used for war essential purposes or for the interests of the occupation, or were turned over the the representative of the National Socialist People's Welfare Organization in the Staff of the Army, in an orderly way. relating to the seizure and confiscation of the property of persons hostile to the state, which had been extended to the occupied Eastern territories. If the property of the executed persons had not been seized and confiscated, it would have become unclaimed property, or would have devolved to the Russian state, so that it would have fallen to the share of the occupation power even by virtue of the general laws of war.

It would hardly be juristically tenable to subsume such an incident under the notion of spoliation. happening in the Soviet Union, means to ignore the facts of history in view of the fact that e.g., with regard to more than 10 millions of Germans expelled from the East, the afore-mentioned "Land of the Dead", it says:

"....and yet those people expelled from Eastern Germany and the frontier". acts of violence after the truce of arms.

atrocities have not been substantiated or proved by the Prosecution. Therefore, I need not go into details as far as those charges are concerned.

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor, this would be a suitable occasion to take a recess.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. The Tribunal will be in recess fifteen minutes.

(A recess was taken.)

in the Soviet Union, in as far as the activities of the Einsatzgruppen are included therein, would leave out important matters without taking into consideration the actual organizational connection, the incorporation of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos into the military machinery, the command situation connected with this, the power of command and the free latitude of command within thsi command situation. Only after these prerequisites have been taken into consideration can the acts of the defendants be avaluated. The contention in the indictment, that the Einsatzgruppen, with respect to command and organization, had already been set up in the spring of 1941, is correct. At that time the Fuehrer, considering the campaign against Russia, ordered the establishment of Einsatzgruppen to be organized by the Chief of the Security Police and SF in agreement with the Wehrmacht for use within the compas of the operating army units. Quatermaster General Wagner, who was acting for Keitel, negotiated with the Chief of the Security Police and the SD, Heydrich, about the form and nature of these now joint organizations (Transcript page 10, and page 5ff, of the indictment). A temporary result of these negotiations about the so-called "Barbarossa Decree " and a draft of the decree was submitted by the Prosecution as Document NOKW 256, Prosecution Exhibit No. 174. fundamentally new task for the operational area of the army? The Prosecution itself calls this task justified if it states in its opening statement:

"It was the task of the Einsatzgruppen to guarantee the political not directly under civil administration". (Page 11) This was not a new task.

This function (contrary to other armies) was up till that time taken care of by the German army itself. The Chief of the Security Police and SD, in order to enable the army to carry out this task, had so far provided the Wehrmacht with the necessary technical personnel, taken in particular from the criminal police.

With the help of this technical personnel as a skeleton staff the Army formed now units in the secret field police which were to ensure the political (police) security in the army area. as it had to be expected now that the enemy, namely, Russian Communism, would find allies in the rear areas, including the German home area; in the form of the illegal Communist cadres in these territories. Thus, the security of the immediate area of operation could not be separated from that of the rear and home area. The fight against the Communist acts of sabotage and terror was therefore to be carried cut in the same manner as it would be conducted by the Communists chiefs themselves, namely in accordance with a well-connected plan and in close observation of the entire area threatened by Communism. That alone explains the organization of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos by the Chief of the Security Police and SD who, as previously, provides these units with their technical personnel, with the reservation, however, that he be able, contrary to the former regulation, to give them technical instructions and require from them a regular reporting which makes a concentrated fight against Communism possible from a point in Central Germany. The fact that the Chief of the Security Police and SD, as the technically competent expert, organizes the Einsatzgruppen does not alter the fact that they are organized in support of the army, that they are attached to the army groups or armies and are not units under the command of the Chief of the Security Police and SD. It is not by accident that the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos do not carry the secondary designation "Office of the Chief of the Security Police and SD", as it is otherwise customary with the authorities of the Chief of the Security Police and SD. Although Heydrich would have liked to make these units his own, he nevertheless had to consider the fact that his own personnel in these units represented only a minority, that closed units of the regular police and the Waffen-SS were strong components of the Einsatzgruppen and that neither the Waffen-SS, nor the regular police were willing to renounce the placing of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos under the command of the Commander in Chief of the army groups or armies.

and Einsatzkommandos had possibly been units of the Reich Security Main Office. Besides that, I refer in this connection to my statements concerning the situation as to the organization of the RSHA, which show that the RSHA itself was not a genuine agency or authority; consequently could net have its own branch organization. Nor has any proof been advanced that the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos might have been the agencies, authorities or parts of offices IV or V, in other words of the Main Office Security Police or Office III, VI, or VII, which is the SD Main Office. Not even an attempt was made to prove such an allegation. Therefore the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos have actually never been the authroties, agencies or parts of the security police or SD. already been established in several verdicts (compare, among ethers, the verdict against Pohl and others, page 21, the Einsatzgruppen, actually were military units of police character which, as it is asserted in the I.M.T. verdict (Nuernberg Verdict, page 104), were subordinated in front areas to the operational control of the permanent army commander. Since the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos were only used in the operational areas of the army, it becomes evident that they actually were separately organized units to function within the compass of the operating army under the command and control of the supreme authority in this area namely, the commander in chief. Their sole particularly can be seen in the fact that, for the same reasons as mentioned above, they were also subordinated at the same time, as a matter of principle and in technical respect, to the power of directive of the Chief of the Security Police and the SD.

be given special emphasis because of the fact that the designation "Security Police and SD" is only used by the Commissioners of the Chief of the Security Police and the SD as a person, who as such was assigned in an advisory capacity to the staff of the commander in chief of the army group of army. The military units of the Einsatzgruppe were at the disposal of this commissioner in order to enable him to carry out the tasks of the army units in cooperation with those military, units which were assigned to the armies, corps and divisions, in each case in accordance with the orders of the army groups of the armies. Consequently, the Commissioner of the Chief of the Security Police and the SD was at the same time chief of the Einsatzgruppe.

If it is mentioned in the excerpt from the "Manual for General Staff Officers" -submitted in Document Book III Sandberger - that the G-2 of the army gives orders to the Gestapo then this is the simplest establishment for the tasks and the position of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos within the compass of the army organizations. They were auxiliary organizations of the G-2 machinery in those units. The defendant Ohlendorf, testifying as a witness in his own defense, has given a detailed explanation to this effect. The difficulties he described during the period of his activity with the 11th Army showed clearly that he was regarded as a subordinated battalion commander. The Prosecution has repeatedly brought forward (among others also in its opening statement) that Hitler himself informed the commanders in chief of the army groups and armies about all measures for the Russian campaign which he deemed necessary and in which the activities of the Einsatzgruppen were also included. The documents submitted have shown, and in this connection I especially refer to my Trial-Brief in which part of the Prosecution documents from Case 12 against the generals has been utilized, that just the particular Fuehrer order, about the killing of elements endangering the security of the Army, was given as a whole.

I repeat: which was given concerning the killing of elements endangering the a security of the Wehrmacht. the responsibility of the Army and received by the latter specific orders to this effect, but the very units of the army have carried out this order in the same way as the Einsatzgruppen.

defendant Ohlendorf, the Prosecution attempts to make it appear as though all orders for killings, in theactual areas, even in individual cases, were given by Himmler or Heydrich exclusively, while parallel to that the commanders in chief of the army groups or armies just arranged for the tactical employment of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos, this will not do the trick. The evidence has produced a different impression and nothing can conceal the fact that, whereever the defendant Ohlendorf has given a description of the issuing of the command and of the personal purging in the Soviet territories for reasons of security, he meant in this connection the initial fundamental issue of orders which, as is undisputed, were given to the Einsatzgruppen by way of Himmler andHeydrich. The very fact that, as the Prosecution asserts, the orders of purging were given directly to the Einsatzkommandos, according to Ohlendorf's testimony, shows this best and at no time during the entire evidence has a situation ever been discussed in which an Einsatzkommando of the Einsatzgruppe D had received an order through Heydrich for acting on its own initiative in carrying out the order of cleaning up a specific area. On the other hand it is correct, and that is what Ohlendorf meant with regard to such a statement of facts, that the announcement of the Fuehrer order in Pretsch in June 1941 which explicitly continued the order for killings, was given directly to the chiefs of the Einsatzkommandos. In so far as in the course of the evidence concrete orders for acting on their own initiative with respect to executions have been discussed, this rather concerned only those orders which were given to the Einsatzkommandos by the army. (Compare among others the case Simferopol and Romanenko). their organizational setup by stating as follows: Security Police and SD and provided with skilled personnel. However, they were organized in order to be subordinated to the army units in Carrying out their tasks.

During the period of their activity they were actually under the command of the commander-in-chief of the army groups or the armies, and in the case of the Einsatzkommandos, under the command of the armies, corps or divisions. The basic order for killing was given by the Fuehrer to the Einsatzgruppen by way of Himmler and Heydrich, but the army had the same order with the special directive to support the Einsatzgruppen and the Einsatzkommandos in carrying out this order. And this actually happened. Beyond this, however, it was the sole responsibility the commander-in-chief of the army, if, where, and when the basic order for killing waste be carried out by the Einsatzkommandos. Moreover, the command situation resulted in the fact that the Einsatzgruppen regularly received orders from the army units and carried then out, which includes the orders for massexecutions. The position of the chief of the Einsatzgruppen was not an independent one but it was part of the machinery of the army hierarchy and its rank was below the position of the G-2 or G-2/A0 of the army of army group. defendants, especially the defendant Ohlendorf in the machinery of the Army Units, the only thing that must be grasped is the "power", the "authority to give orders" and the "freedom of personal opinion" and therefore the actual responsibility of the defendant.

The defendant Ohlendorf was subject to a dual command. First to the basic order of the German Chief of State and Supreme Commander of the German Armed Forces, the so frequently mentioned Fuehrer Order given to him via Himmler and Heydrich. Additional and individual orders were received from the Commander in Chief of the Army to whose Staff he was assigned. He was a soldier, an Officer in the service rank of a Battalion Commander at the front in the war. Prosecution accuses him of having contributed to, contained the instruct ion to kill, so as to maintain security in his sphere of operations, the Jews, Gipsies, Communistic Functionaries and active Communists, as well as all persons who represented a danger to the security for German forces.

was given once and for all to the Chiefs of Einsatzgruppen and Kommando Chiefs in Pretsch and was not cancelled during the tine of Ohlendorf's Einsatz. Without, in this connection, going into the individual problems posed by this Order, the question of legality of such an Order with the authority of a law or its relation to International Law or Morality here, the only thing to be grasped is that Ohlendorf received it as a soldier in a subordinate position and with the knowledge that his highest Disciplinary Superiors Himmler and Heydrich were inexorably behind this Order. material, including the sketch of his career submitted by the Prosecution as a Document, that he did not get into this Order situation voluntarily, guiltily, frivelously, or for his own ends, but that he was sent to the Einsatzgruppe on Himmler's Order after having twice refused. It is all the more astonishing thatthe prosecution now in its final statement makes assertions against Otto Ohlendorf of which they know, according to the contents of their own presentation of evidence, that the pre-requisites, of th*se assertions do not apply to Ohlendorf. Referring to promotion regulations of Himmler for members of the Security Police and SD it reads in the above-mentioned place, on page 15a to 16, and I quote: "All Germans in this trial insist that they are drafted for service with the Einsatzgruppen and that they had no option other than to obey. It may be remarked most respectfully that all these defendants including Ohlendorf were highly trained Police Officers, who wanted to rise in the profession of their own choice. Therefore, there aversion to serve with the Einsatzgruppen which they have sworn on oath now, cannot be recognised as true where everyone was trying so eagerly to advance in the career he had chosen for himself."

prosecution that Ohlendorf prior to or at the time of the assignment in Russia was a "highly placed Police Officer". The career submitted by the Prosecution as a Document proves the contrary. So that he cannot have wished either to rise in this "profession of his choice". His profession at this time was undisputedly Business Manager of the Reich Group Trade.

the position of "possibility for advancement" through HIMMLER. It is just as undisputed that at this time he had no material income in the SD nor did he expect it.

If therefore from these arguments is to be gathered the "implied" consent or consent of OHLENDORF, inferred at the close of the letter of the Prosecution, to the activities of the Einsatzgruppen in question in this trial, then these arguments, to begin with, must prove the contrary since the opposite of what they state is an established fact. consequences, not even tacitly, the hearing of witnesses has shown unequivocally. OHLENDORF's statement that at the issuing of orders in Pretsch he protested loudly and clearly against the Fuehrer Order was confirmed by the defendant BLUME in Cross Examination by the Prosecution. The Prosecution has not disputed the fact either that in Nikolajew in October 1941 he tried personally with HIMMLER to undermine the execution of the Order. The defendants BRAUNE, SEIBERT and SCHUBERT have repeatedly demonstrated in the Cross Examination that 0, never agreed to the Fuehrer Order. OHLENDORF himself gave neither a general nor an individual order for killing nor over killed anyone himself.

each of the defendants had a position of responsibility or a command post in an Extermination Unit. By virtue of this position the defendants, in this case OHLENDORF, had had at all time the competency to order executions independently. The defendants were bound by law if not by their consciences to refrain from such activities and in so far as they had had power, to prevent crimeson the part of those subordinate to them. It is a legal and moral duty to prevent the execution of innocent people, to limit it, and condemn it, a duty which all the defendants had obviously violated. The rank and position of these defendants had conferred the competency and the duty to exercise a control over their subordinates and they had violated this duty.

The "duty" of the defendant was to obey as a soldier to see to it that ordersgiven by his supreme superior and the undisputed supreme representative of his State, with their contents, were carried out, in doing which the inexorable will behind them was supposed to have been the motive of his own action.

"The"competency" of the defendant was to carry through this order with all available means. That alone was the extent of his scope in deciding and judging. Anyone who should state otherwise, struggles consciously or unconsciously against the reality of the situation. Carrying out this duty laid down and observance of this competency ordered could never be made the subject of an accusation directed against the defendant in his subordinate position.

What, then, has the defendant actually done? Has he actually reaped the consequences of his inner and outward attitude to the HITLER Order? in Document No. NO 5866 (Interrogation of Dr. Roman LOOS) submitted in their Document Book 5 D: In how far do possibilities exist for avoiding a military order in general.

This Document refers, it is true, to the possibility of avoiding, that one of the highest Officers with rank of Field Marshal or General is supposed to have. If however in spite of that I consider briefly the result of interrogation of Dr. Roman LOOS undertaken by the Prosecution through Herr RAPP then the witness says, in substance the following:

1.) Possibility, and I quote: "If the scrutiny (of the order) revealed that it concerned an order of an illegal and immoral character then the possibility existed to achieve the revocation or alteration of the order by the higher office by stating all considerations. If his point of view was not shared by his superiors the military leader was placed in a position either of being elevated to historical greatness by his refusal to comply with the order or else of becoming the instrument of a criminal clique by complying with the given order." I quote further: "He would have had the possibility to reject the order. The consequence would have been self- annihilation and indirectly a certain historical rise. It was obvious that for refusing a fundamental order he would have been tried by a Court or as we know today would have been sent to a concentration camp. But if someone after having recognized the immorality and illegality of an order, rejects, and takes the consequences upon himself, he is to be regarded as a hero from a historical point of view".

2.) Possibility - I quote: (p. 27).

"It is reasonable to expect from an Army Commander who solved the conflict in his favour by passing on the order recognized as illegal and immoral that he will at least do everything to cut down to a minimum the stringency, of the order thus restricting its disastrous consequences to a minimum".

I quote further: (p. 28).

"1.) Corresponding formulation of the executory orders, especially accurate definitions and exact limitations with regard to subordinate units.

"2.) Corresponding verbal instructions during official meetings or tours of inspection to the junior commanders who have to execute the order. In particular to inform subordinates confidentially about one's own interpretation of the order.

3.) Corresponding directives to the G-2 to supervise the execution of the order which was passed on, especially not to insist on its strict execution and to inform the subordinate G-2 of this.

4.) Report to the High Command of the Armed Forces.

a) References to previous unfavorable experiences after execution of the order, with the aim of achieving the revocation or amendment of the order.

b) Faked reports about measures taken.

A comparison between OHLENDORF's method of acting and the Prosecution's discussion shows that O. although he did not hold the rank of a Field Marshal or General but that of a Battalion Commander subordinated to the Army, did everything, after failing to achieve the revocation of the order in spite of his protest in Pretsch and his later attempt in Nikolajew, to exhaust the second possibility completely, without support of the Army or other authoritative circles. possibility. The defendant OHLENDORF did everything in his power to limit the effects of the orders issued to his Einsatzgruppe and the Einsatzkommandos under him. It has been established by his own statement and the statement of those co-defendants who worked in his Einsatzgruppe that O. issued supplementary orders the sole purpose of which was to limit the scope for judgment in interpretation of the fundamental orders for the Kommando chiefs and to exclude their extensive effect; thus he prevented by prohibiting the pogrom ordered, the wild and uncontrollable killing and ordered strictly that the killing arranged for might only be undertaken according to military principles in an orderly and con trolled manner.

He forbade all killings in fulfilment of the Fuehrer Order on foreign sovereign territory (Roumanian Sovereign Territory), (compare statements of BRAUNE, RUEHL, OHLENDORF), he saw to it that in the case of the Jewish Group comprising several thousands of people who had been driven by the Roumanians into German sovereign territory everything was done to get these people back to Roumanian territory on their way home. From the same motives he had agreed with his subordinates not to pick out Jewish children. His only partially successful effort to save the Carmanians and Crimtschaks too, the order to sort out the non-partisans in the case of the retaliatory action of the Army in Eupatoria and protect them against the shooting, prove likewise that OHLENDORF exhausted every possibility of limiting the scope of the Fuehrer Order. By supplementary orders concerning registration and transport he tried to curtail inso far aspossible and eliminate the mental and physical agencies and sufferings of the unfortunate victims; the prohibition of the undressing of the victim served the same purpose too. O. issued instructions to prevent all possibility of enrichment from the estates of these killed, so as to afford no incentive to killing. Also the directive to individual Kommandos to keep secret the number of executions reported to avoid the inciting of false ambition in other Kommandos, not to give rise to the impression that Einsatzgruppe D placed any value on the greatness of the reported numbers, served the sane end. filled the requirements of the Prosecution doing all in his power to prevent, limit and condemn the effect of the orders issued. In many respects even he exceeded his authority, took upon himself, as shown by HIMMLER's personal intervention in October, 1941, obviously limiting and delaying contravention of the orders given. OHLENDORF's activity as guilty, that is, intentional favoring of crimes I must leave to the court to decide.

At all events in considering his method of acting the fact must not be overlooked that all this interference on the part of OHLENDORF in the course of the events was not an activity which furthered the deeds but as demonstrated a restrictive activity which limited, delayed, and, insofar as possible, prevented the ffect of the actions ordered.

This kind of aiding and abetting is however in accordance with general legal principles not genuinely in the sense of a punishable action. This kind of activity refeals rather the distinct desire and clear intention to obstruct the course of the actions ordered in so far as that is possible. In this sense Ohlendorf's approach to Himmler himself in the end must be valuated too, when the latter inspected him in October 1941 in Nikolajew. He knew Himmler, and had heard scarcely an hour before his speech to all men assembled in which Himmler renewed the Fuehrer Order and ordered its strictest execution. Ohlendorf approached Himmler inspite of that. The fact that no answer was ever vouchsafed by Himmler was an indication of the dangerous way in which he had ventured forward and exposed himself. It is obvious that Ohlendorf's so doing had already exceeded the limits of his possibilities. Amendment of the Fuehrer Order was not within his power and still much less in his sphere of command. He was given no scope for judgment either, not to carry out this order. immediately clearly recognisable if one followed his activity as Head of Office III SD after he returned from the Einsatz. Here he was not in a military machine under military command but was relatively independent in his work, that is, the tactical situation within the German heirarchy made relatively independent action through circumvention of his highest superiors possible for him. In the chapter concerning Ohlendorf's membership of the SD I have adequately proved this fact. And with this his behavior, the attested inner attitude of Ohlendor and his behavior concerning the Fuehrer Order and the compulsory events of the Einsatzgruppe must always be compared. An unbiased consideration of Ohlendorf's behavior and activity during the Russian Einsatz can only result in showing that he acted from the same sentiment which characterized him both before and after the Russian campaign. accuses the defendants, I must now ask the Tribunal to listen for a few minutes to the consideration of the probative value of the Documents submitted by the Prosecution to support its accusations.

The evidence of the Prosecution is documentary. In the course of the examinations of the defendants on the witness stand mistakes and inconsistencies were continually mentioned in connection with the discussion of the documents submitted by the Prosecution not only in the "Operational Situation Reports from the USSR" and in the "Reports from the Occupied Eastern Territories" which replaced them after 1 May 1942, but also in the discussion of the affidavits and personnel records of the defendants submitted by the Prosecution. I shall limit myself to the "Operational Situation Reports from the USSR" and the "Reports from the Occupied Eastern Territories", since the defendants' affidavits and the personnel records have been discussed in detail during the interrogations and, on each occasion have been subject to sufficient individual elucidation to give the Tribunal a thorough insight into their probative value. Moreover, they are discussed in the individual final pleas for the defendants. Regarded as individual cases the mistakes and inconsistencies in the "Operational Situation Reports from the USSR" and the "Reports from the Occupied Eastern Territories" might often appear unimportant, as for example, confusion in places, wrong dates, cases of the same figures being counted twice, and other accounting errors concerning liquidation figures mentioned in the reports. Nevertheless, as a whole they are of considerable importance for the question of probative value. In view of the serious nature of the charges brought against the defendants in the indictment there is not only a well-founded reason but also a need and a duty to subject the probative value of the reports submitted by the Prosecution to a careful, objective examination, for in the case of such all-inclusive charges, which as a rule the Prosecution did not advance against the separate defendants in an individual and well substantiated way, shades of meaning and individual wordings in the documents can be regarded as relevant evidence for the mental attitude or individual conduct of the defendants.

Here the examination must not only concern itself with the general probative value of the reports, but especially with the question of to what extent individual sentences or phrases can be regarded beyond any reasonable doubt as indentical with the reports originally issued by the defendants. Only by such an examination can be decided as to what extent the documents give a real impression of the actual happenings in Russia from which relevant evidence can be derived incriminating the individual defendants even in its individual findings. The greater part of the documents submitted by the Prosecution are not eye-witness reports or original operational and situation reports. Of the total number of about 200 documents which have been submitted there are only about 10 items which can be described as original reports, namely, scattered reports to or from offices of the army. Apart from these original documents, which numerically are hardly of any importance and the contents of which are dubious at least, -although even they are not free from errors of carelessness and deliberate misrepresentations -- they consist mainly of operational situation reports by the Chief of the Security Police and the SD, that is, reports which were prepared and summarized from various other reports. document books of the Prosecution only in extracts and excerpts. In preparing them those parts which were not relevant for the Prosecution were left out; it has been the general experience that such excerpts have always have a distorting effect in some way or other; they give a false impression of the nature of the document and disconnect Concrete statements contained in it -- even if they are true -from the context. operational situation report executions are shown as an insolated phenomenon, that is, taken out of the context of the actual events 4 Feb 1948_A_MSD_23_4_Hoxsie (Lea) and situations which were the reasons behind them and magnified into the sole basis of the activity of theEinsatzgruppen.

This fails to show the background conditions, what was happening at the front, the constant danger to which the members of the Kommandos, the German army and the peaceful Russian population were exposed by partisans, terrorists and sabotuers, the observation made on repeated occasions of the dominant part played by Jews among Soviet leaders and the partisan organization, the knowledge, constantly passed on by the members of the Kommandos, of the dominant part of the Jews in the ruthless establishment of Communism in Russia and in the mass liquidations of kulaks, property owners and members of the intelligentsia. It likewise fails to show the actual picture of the over_all activity of the Einsatzkommandos which, predominantly directed toward an enlightened pacification of the Russian areas, included constructive and progressive measures for the benefit of the population. Thus, these documents, which are presented in excerpt from, therefore frequently distort the basic subject in the original report and also prevent one from recognizing mistakes in details from the total context. In an affidavit presented by the Prosecution of the former Criminal Director Kurt Lindow, for a time Special Section Chief in RSHA, IV A 1, has confirmed the fact that the USSR Operational Situation Reports, which were published by the Chief of the Security Police and the SD under the file mark IV A 1, were, as a whole, compiled from the original reports of the Einsatzgruppen "which, were received in my Special Section by radio or written message." Einsatz reports were made; on the contrary, it only confirms their authenticity, which, besides, nobody has doubted. The way in which they were prepared, however, has been established with sufficient clarity by various statements made by witnesses for the defendants, but has also been especially shown in the affidavit submitted in Ohlendorf Document Book la as Document 32, Exh. No. 53, which was given by former Police Councillor Rudolf Fumy.

Fumy is to be adjudged the best specialist for this question, since as an official in special Section IV A 1 he collaborated personally from the very beginning in the compilation of the Einsatz reports and possesses a far more accurate knowledge than Lindow of the way and manner in which the reports were made. That the Operational Situation Reports "were compiled from the original reports of the Einsatzgruppen" must, therefore, be supplemented by the Fumy affidavit to the effect that, to be sure, the detailed original reports of the Einsatzkommandos etc. necessarily proveded the foundation, but that the Einsatz reports are not "moreover only to be regarded to a limited extent as a literal repetition of the original reports". According to Fumy's statement the Einsatz reports were free revisions of the original material received in Special Section IV A 1 of the RSHA. ly the case that the separate Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos reported to the authorized Einsatzgruppen and that the latter then, in entirely different ways, summarized the reports and forwarded them to the Berlin central office. It is to be gathered from the various statements made by witnesses before this Tribunal that these original reports offered the first opportunity for errors to arise. When one of the defendants testified on the witness Stand concerning cessively high figures for the executions which had been carried out, in order to please Heydrich and "was not very exact with his zeros", this fact does not represent an isolated case, but was also applicable to Stahlegger, the chief of Einsatzgruppe A, and Thomas, the leader of Einsatzgruppe C. The defendant Ohlendorf has already called attention to this in his interrogation before the IMT.

(During this trial the uncontested statement was also made that this incorrect reporting originated already with the Kommandos in their reports to the Einsatzgruppen. Therefore, with respect to the figures in the documents submitted the defendant Ohlendorf, judging from his own experience has doubted if even half of the figures cited there come near to the truth. stand and by comparing reports to or from various offices concerning the same period of time (for example, from an Einsatzkommando to the army) that "tactical reports" were constantly made, that is, deliberately false reports which a unit made to protect itself against some other government office. or in the Einsatzgruppen either intentionally or unintentionally for personal or tactical reasons, which are considerable and therefore can in no way be ignored or belittled, were forwarded along the regular message chanel by radio, courier, or military mail to the office in Berlin which rewrote these reports, lacking any possibility of correcting them, or desiring to do so. In the very channelling of the report further errors would occur in radio transmission, which must also be taken into account. Anybody who is familiar with radio procedure knows well enough that mutilations or distortions which are not readily apparent are constantly creeping in. In many cases,then, inquiries are made concerning the correct text. However, wherever, apart from technical deficiencies, there is no compelling need to investigate the correct text or there is not enough time to do this, the receiving office will be satisfied if it can make the text understandable to some extent.

This latter situation actually existed in the RSHA. As must also be explained, they were always pressed for time and there was no authority for checking such things. Here, therefore, is one of the possibilities of explaining why obviously false place names and figures have been repeatedly pointed out in the Operational Situation Reports by witnesses. rewritten with a downright frivolous disregard for the facts, as has been explained and proved with sufficient clarity in the Fumy affidavit already mentioned. The RSHA received collective reports from the Einsatzgruppen, as well as from the agencies of the Wehrmacht, the Higher SS and Police Leaders, for revision. At the same time, however, it also received reports about individual occurrences. By reason of their varied natures and varied purpose these reports naturally covered periods of time, but in spite of over-lapping time periods, place and subject matter they had to be rewritten immediately as Einsatz reports in order to prevent an over-accumulation of material. The working apparatus for this purpose was improvised; an inadequate number of employees with insufficient technical training were swamped by a mass of material which had to be digested in a few hours almost every day in reports of up to 50 pages in length. Fumy employs the expression "nerve-racking" for this. The material could not be compared, there was no time for any further inquiries about it. The fact that it was not possible to do any reliable work in this way was known not only to those directly concerned in it but also to the superior offices in the department. The rewrite men became increasingly reconciled to this and let things slide. The desire for accuracy, as Fumy testifies, was still further decreased by the fact that Mueller, the Chief of Office IV, taking into account the political tensions at any given time, undertook to make changes which were not unimportant", and added or deleted things as he saw fit.

In summing up, therefore, concerning the probative value of the "Opera tional Situation Reports from the USSR" and the "Reports from the Occupied Eastern Territories," which have been submitted by the Prosecution as incriminating documents.

I can state that their probative value with respect to individual conditions and figures listed has not been proved. Insofar as the individual defendants are said to be directly incriminated by the reports, the Prosecution must offer more than merely a reference to an individual statement or an individual quotation from the reports which have been submitted.

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor, I think this would be an appropriate place to adjourn.

PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess until tomorrow morning at 9:30.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 5 February 1948 at 0930 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: Persons in the Courtroom will please find their seats.

Military Tribunal II is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed.

DR. ASCHENAUER: The questions which are circumscribed by the term "order" belong to the most difficult problems of jurisprudence. This has also been acknowledged by the Allied side. Professor Sheldon Glueck of Harvard University, defines this complex of questions in his book "War Criminals, Their Prosecution and Punishment", as definitely controversial and nebulous. "One of the most intricate technical problems which occurs at the trial of war criminals of the Axis, is contained in the protective assertion that the defendant in committing the prohibited action did so only in carrying out orders of his military superiors." The man who makes this statement is not a run-of-the-mill author, but the foremost American authority in the field of criminal law and criminology and the book in which he makes this judgment has prepared the theoretical basis for all the war crimes trials which we witness today in Germany and in Japan. The book by Professor Glueck has its counterpart in British literature in the essay from the pen of Professor Lauterpacht of the University of Cambridge regarding "The law of Nations and the Punishment of War Crimes" in the British Year Bookof International Law, 1944, page 58 ff. Professor Lauterpacht writes there in quite a similar manner. He defines the problem as opaque, intricate and contradictory in itself and states that the question to what degree consideration should be given to the claim of having acted upon superior orders, represents practically the most significant problem of the war criminal trials.

He writes: "The problem which has been raised by the claim of having acted upon superior orders is, as commonly admitted, a problem of great difficulties, not only in view of international but also of national law. How confused it is may be inferred from the fact that the solution accepted by British and American Military handbooks concerning war crimes are contradictory to those valid in both countries in the field of the constitutional and penal law. Beyond this, the law concerning this subject in those and in other countries in the field of national law is not free of ambiguities and apparent inconsistencies." tribunal in deciding such questions and advise urgently, to act with prudence. Therefore, the following question has to be examined in an especially calm, dispassionate and politically unbiased manner. Can the claim, of haying acted upon superior orders, in the case in question exclude the liability or only mitigate it?

Paragraph II 4 b of Control Council Law no. 10 implies that a total exclusion of responsibility cannot be considered under any circumstances. Because this regulation states: "The fact that any person acted pursuant to the order of his Government or of a superior does not free him from responsibility for a crime but may be considered in mitigation." This regulation must surprise everyone familiar with the pertinent American and British Military Jurisdiction. To wit, it is diametrically opposed to it. A universal exclusion of a claim of having acted upon superior orders was never considered legal in the Anglo-Saxon countries and is not considered to be legal even today with regard to its own citizens. the stipulation of such a strikingly biased point of view against the former adversaries of the Allies. I do not think that I err if I consider Professor Sheldon Glueck to be the spiritual originator.

Referring to section 347 of the American Rules of Land Warfare, Glueck states on page 157 of his book: "The complete and absolute protection of those below the status of 'Commander' in section 347 of the American Rules was probably adopted because the farmers had primarily in mind our own soldiers and the aim was to relieve them entirely of liability in war time in order to encourage greater discipline and obedience.

However, the principle in the rules applies also to any enemy soldiers it may be desirable to prosecute; and in that respect the Anglo-American standard may prove to be troublesome. The matter thus boils down to a question of policy, whether it is more desirable, all around, to retain the principle now in the military manuals or to modify it along the lined suggested. So far as it concerns proceedings in American military commissions the President as Commander-in-Chief can clarify the matter by revision of the American Rules of Warfare through the War Department. In the convention or executive agreement for establishing an International Criminal Court to try certain serious classes of war crimes, a rule of the kind proposed, if Implemented by a sound sentencing policy ought to furnish a satisfactory solution of the superior orders problem." a far-reaching and decisive legal effect. Professor Glueck's intentions are to bring about the unilateral sentencing of merely groups of persons, former war enemies, whom he considers to be punishable, in contrast to the former administration of law of his country.

He states verbatim: "Since the application of the principle of absolute non-liability found in the English and American Rules would render impossible many convictions of Axis war criminals, and since there are differences among the various member States of the United Nations in respect to the regulations and decisions governing the subject of superior orders, a new and realistic rule is necessary both for prosecutions in domestic courts (especially English and American) and those in the proposed International Criminal Court."

and ignore legal principles of long standing, such a manner of unabashed prejudiced jurisprudence is bound to cause particular astonishment if these are made by a scholar whose name belongs to the most renowned members of American jurisprudence.

Terms like "troublesome", "desirable", "question of policy", "realistic" are used in order to make inapplicable legal maxims, hallowed by decades of usage. All those points of view employed by Professor Glueck are such that every jurist must view them with distrust! In note 48 to chapter IX of his book, Professor Glueck refers as further justification of his opinion, to the legislative practice and jurisdiction of Nazi Germany, where such expost facto punishment was customary. It is unnecessary to touch upon this assertion any further, because if such kind of legislature and administration of justice has to be considered as reprehensible, since it is communis opinion of the entire Western civilized world then it ill suits the victors to abuse their own ideals by acting in the same spirit and to sacrifice the idea of right to the point of view of political expediency and practical considerations. as a matter of fact up to now, shall not remain unmentioned. The actions of the defendants would have to be judged pursuant to German law, according to the judicial interpretation of all European States. They were subject to German law and acted under German law; it was the law to which they had to turn for advice in cases of doubt and which decided as to the limits of their authority. Also, this principle of international law hallowed by long years of use is sacrificed by Professor Glueck to considerations of political expediency and practical considerations, by writing about it in the following way:

"Normally in law and in justice, it would have to be that law of the accused, since he could not justly be expected to know the law of the enemy nation that prosecutes him." However, Professor Glueck continues this would give the most lawless nations the possibility to whitewash militarists for the most flagrant violations of the laws of warfare. The Nazi law is so contrary to the most elementary principles of civilized justice tha t it may legitimately be ignored as "pathological". the absolute relinquishing of century old principles of personal liability, unacceptable to every progressive legal system. The Nazi jurisprudence has been charged with having sacrificed the idea of law and justice without hesitation always at a time when it was opportune for the necessities of political considerations. If, therefore those who have made it their bussiness to combat such abuses, now themselves put aside the postulates of progressive and fair legal thinking in order to realize a certain political aim, then one feels deeply disappointed in one's belief and hope of coming of a better world - a world a a world of law and order!

It seems also that the prosecution feels that way. Therefore, it attempts to refer to Article 47 of the German Military Penal Code. Thereto the following must be stated: in the East are regulated and outlined by orders, that is by Fuehrer orders. There is no doubt about it that the orders of Hitler, in his capacity as Chief of State, were of a special nature. All his orders enjoyed a particular obligation to obey them in view of the constitutional legal status of the Third Reich, which was bound by his authority as Chief of the State. Professor Jahrreiss stated in this respect during his questioning in the trial against the jurists, the following:

"In a state in which all power of decision is concentrated in the hands of one man, the orders of this one man are absolutely binding for the members of the hierarchy of officials.

This individual is their sovereign, their legibus solutus". (Truanscript, page 4243). Reich, insofar as it related to the constitutional law of the Greater German Reich, and the defendant Ohlendorf carried on his law studies and all other defendants grew up and lived in the knowledge and application of this literature. I quote verbatim from the book "The constitutional Law of the Greater German Reich" by Ernst Rudolf Huber:

"The Fuehrer combines in himself all sovereign power of the Reich; every public power in the state as well as in the Party is derived from the power of the leadership".

"He is the holder of all political power."

"The leadership authority is extensive and total; it comprises in itself all means of political organization; it extends to all spheres of public life; it includes all compatriets who are bound to loyalty and obedience toward the Fuehrer".

"He is" - thus it goes on "holder of the legislative power" in addition, however, also "holder of judicial sovereignty and power" in a word "supreme holder of all common functions." the years to such an extent that by the resolution of the Reichstag of 26 April 1942 (Reich Law Gazette I, page 247) he was given carte blache of an extent unparalleled in constitutional history, which must be regarded as a mere certification of a situation that had already existed for years. The Fuehrer received the power to issue ordinances on every subject possible having legal force. He received the power "as chief of state and supreme holder of the executive power, as supreme judge and Party leader at any given time - "if necessary to urge, every German -- be he a simple soldier or an officer, minor or high official or judge, directing or subordinate functionary of the Party, worker or employee - to fulfil his duties, with all means he regards as appropriate and in the case of a violation of these duties after conscientious examination, without regard to so-called traditional preregatives, to inflict on him due punishment, especially to remove him from his office rank and position without instituting the "prescribed proceedings". law, beginning about the middle of the 19th century, no member of the German people was entitled to refuse obedience to these announcements of the will of the head of the state, which had legal force.

The principles which Richard Thoma, the liberal democratic teacher of constitutional law had formulated already prior to the seizure of power by National Socialism in his manual of German criminal law, 2nd volume, page 137 applied: not change entirely, "no other principle may be taught than the one that the entire legal system valid in the state by law is placed at the disposal of the state authority or authorities to which the constitution deed transfers the legislative power." "It is conceivable that a legal maxim may seem to me to be simply unjustified, be it, because I am convinced, it was issued for arbitrary reasons (e.g. party hatred), be it that I feel it to be objectionable because of its contents which seems monstrous to me. Even in the case of such a rule I must admit, as long as the state authority regards it as being valid, that in the formal sense of the term it is a legal maxim, although I in foro interno.

.... give it the name of a rule of force or an ordinance of injustice." National Socialist but one of the very first representatives of the liberal -- democratic, political science. His opinion was not an individual opinion but the prevailing doctrine.It was thus the foundation of juridical ideology which OHLENDORF -- like many others among the defendants had been taught at German universities to be valid legal conception. By way of substantiating this, I mention one author who at present teaches at a university in the United States and various times has expressed his opinion with regard to the question of war criminals: Professor Hans KELSEN, the one-time leading authority on Austrian constitutional law. In his "Main Problems of Political Science" 2nd edition, 1923, page 56, he declares literally:

"The legal binding force of an legal maxim is not in the law."

And as late as 1927 the German Supreme Court emphasized:

"The legislator is autocratic and not bound by an in the constitution or in other ordinances."

(Decision of the Decisions of the German Supreme Court in civil law cases) I wish to emphasize once more that those doctrines and legal maxims were expressed with regard to the constitutional law of the Weimer democrary.

There can be no doubt that they had to be valid all the more in the National Socialist state which thereby neither violated the most elementary principles of civilized conception of law nor developed "pathological" law.

by the constitution connected with the duty of absolute obedience, may often appear incomprehensible to a foreigner. Any one being familiar with history will however have to admit that this by no means without precedent. I beg to point out the following: opinion of subordination and obedience in a letter which he sent to the members of the order in 1555 as follows (this being one of the most remarkable documents of world history):

"On the whole, I must not belong to myself by to my creator and mediator; I must permit myself to be led and moved as a little piece of was permits itself to be kneaded;......like he wishes and where he can use me best;.....I must behave like a dead man who has neither will nor insight.

Thus I must always can use me for whatever it wishes mo to do."

Collected and translated into German by Otto KARRER, Society of Jesus, 1922 page 255.

In a singular way this conception of obedience in its formal basic structure is affiliated to that of Calvinism. To the question as to what was to be done if kings and princes spurned the rights of the people, disregarded the laws of morality and acted as tyrants, the reformer gave the unmistakable answer: The sovereigns of this world may claim, the obedience of their subjects, even if they are the most villainous tyrants (nequissimus tyrannus). The sufferings afflicted to the subjects by an undutiful sovereign must be borne in humble patience and the subjectsmust be self-contemplation and a deeper consciousness of built be induced to all the more eager supplications for divine assistance.

The subjects have to do their duty and leave all the rest to God.

With regard to this Josef Behatec: Calvin and the Law (1934) page 135 ff. past two years against Luther's doctrine of the subject's obedience to the state completes the picture of the European religious views with regard to the duty of obedience without my having to go into detail in this respect. nearly half a century -- under the Stuart Kings Charles II and James II -as a dogma which was especially upheld by the Tories and Oxford University. Thomas Babington Macaulay, the great British historian, devoted an extensive elaboration to this remarkable fact in his "History of England since the ascendance of James II to the throne." especially with regard to military orders and obedience, which are under discussion in the present trial, still fully applies, is shown in the well-known speech of the British Field marshal Montgomery concerning Army and Nation of the year 1946 in which he says: "No matter how intelligent the soldier is -- the Army would leave the nation in the lurch, if it were not accustomed to obey commands immediately. It is the soldier's duty unquestioningly to obey all orders given to him by the Army -- that is, by the Nation." obeyed HITLER'S order as an order issued by the German chief of State having the unlimited authority and powers described above, they were not only backed up by all German authorities on constitutional international law in the reign of HITLER but also by themost renowned representatives of jurisprudence of the former democratic Germany and foreign countries, especially of the United States of America, as well as by the incontestable principlesof all armies of the world.

This unquestioned legal situation and the binding force of an order is in no respect changed by Art. 47 of the German Military Penal Code.

They did not act in violation of Art. 47 of the German Military penal Code simply because an order by HITLER had legal force and thus being a newer law had precedence over the earlier Military Penal Code. Above all, Art. 47, according to its context does not intend to, and connot, give the opportunity and require it as one's duty to offer resistance to the legislator himself. Its prerequisite is a military superior of the one who issues the order to whom appeals can be made made. Fuehrer order was known to OHLENDORF and his co-defendants. OHLENDORF was fully aware of it. For to the question of the Presiding Judge as to whether he had deliberated about the questions coming up in connection with the execution of the order (page 686 of the Transcript) and, in addition, as to whether he had ever felt that the Fuehrer decreeswas an unlawful order, OHLENDORF unequivocally answered: "No". As he himself several times assorted, the defendant lacked the consciousness of illegality. As has been shown, he can in this respect place himself on the same level with domestic and foreign jurisprudence. In this connection and corresponding to the Anglo-Saxon conception that the consciousness of the unlawfulness of a deed, the Tribunal tried during OHLENDORF's interrogation to find out his reaction to the Fuehrer decree in a moral respect. OHLENDORF strictly rejected a moral evaluation of the Fuehrer Order. No regarded the order as unwise from a political viewpoint and as wrong because of itspossible consequences from a standpoint of international law and general political aspects. As OHLENDORF declared, he, however, never undertook a moral appraisal since HITLER as German chief of State had issued it with legal binding force and compulsory effect for him as receiver of the order and since HITLER himself had to take the responsibility for the moral side of his order.

The further detailed interrogation by the Tribunal has proved unequivocally that OHLENDORF during the -- execution of the order had no consciousness of moral wrong. one would uphold a legal obligation of investigating the Fuehrer order with regard to its lawfulness and its capability of being uphold from a moral viewpoint, there are further viewpoints which preclude a punishment of the defendant. He justly cites the legal institutions an emergency caused by orders and "Unexpectability" the application of which Central Council Law No. 10 obviously does not preclude.

Thus already the IMT has established (Chapter V at the end): "The actually decisive point, which is to be found in various gradations in the penal code of most nations, is not the existence of such an order, but the question as to whether a corresponding alternative (resistance) to moral law actually was possible." and the Presiding Judge of this Tribunal in the MILCH decision emphasized himself (Tribunal II, Case 2, page 96 German, in the reasons given by Judge Musamnno)" It was never our intention and never has been urged that he (MULCH) should have ever chosen any way which would have resulted in the loss of his life". With regard to the same problem the US military Tribunal states in Case 5 in discussing Art. 4, par. B of Section 11 of the Central Council Law No. 10 (Transcript of session of 22 December 1947, page 18 ff):

"In our opinion these regulations are not meant to deprive which has here been claimed for them.

This legal principle Wharton's "Criminal Law", Vol.

I, Chapter VII, section 126, as substantiation:

"The fact of a state of emergency may be used as protective threatening legal prejudice".In a footnote to sub-section 384 in Chapter XIII of Wharton's "Criminal Law", Vol I the fundamental definition of the protective assertion of a state of emergency isdescribed as follows:

"A state of ermergency is a reason for justification, since The question of unexpectability is closely connected with this question of state of emergency.

Even before 1933, the German Supreme Court and scholars have had to deal with the question of the unexpectability of an action and have repeatedly recognized this unexpectability as a basis for excluding guilt. Unexpectability is present "with reference to the situation as a whole" it may not be expected that "the idea of the criminal result and its injurious social effect becomes a decisive counter-motive, thus motivating the perpetrator to act in accordance with the law." (from Liszt-Schmidt,"Manual of Criminal Law" , 26th ed., p. 283). On this basis, the German Supreme Court also made its decision. Thus in the decision of the 1st chamber of the Reich Court (Justizwesen, 32, p. 2280, No. 14). In this case, a witness, committed perjury in a trial against Communists because he was afraid that if he made a true statement, he would be mistreated by the Communists. In the decision of the 1st. chamber, the Reich Supreme Court argues, among other things, that at the basis of Art. 52 and 54 is the idea that as a basis for exclusion of guilt "an abnormal encroachment upon the free will caused by special external circumstances may also be considered," which in "normal" conduct seem "not to be expected." That is, in other words, that a criminal act committed under such circumstances is still objectively illegal for lack of a basis for justification, but owing to the unusual psychical pressure burdening the perpetrator does not appear subjectively contrary to duty and therefore provides no basis for accusation of guilt. The decision of the Reich Supreme Court (3rd chamber) in the decision 66, p. 98 is similar to this. Corresponding decisions are to be found in decisions 58, p. 97 end p. 226. defendant Ohlendorf found himself from these viewpoints. Ohlendorf has described in the witness stand how he loudly and clearly protested against the order when Streckenbach announced it to the assembled officers in Pretsch. The defendant, Dr. Blume, expressly confirmed this description in his statement of 4 November 1947, p. 1915. The presentation of evidence has, furthermore, clearly brought to light the fact that the protest was immediately silenced by the implication that this was a Fuehrer order against which there could be no further objections.

Under these circumstances, could any one expect from the defendant Ohlendorf that he undertake further steps against the order? For a non-German court, this question will be very difficult to decide in any case, because it presupposes the knowledge and the ability to understand the ideas and conceptions of that time of the Germans, as well as the knowledge of the possibilities which the individual holders of various ranks of the National Socialist officers Corps had of influencing Fuehrer Orders. Ohlendorf knew that his direct superiors Heydrich and Himmler had identified themselves with the Fuehrer Order. He knew that his views would find no support of any sort from those quarters. In spite of this, however, he later made a further attempt in Nikolajew and turned to Himmler. The latter, in an insulting and emphatic manner, did not even grant him an answer. The defendant Seibert reported this scene in detail and in so far confirms Ohlendorf's statement. The Commanders-in-Chief and Generals of the German Army, to whom the Einsatzgruppen were assigned and subordinate, were above Ohlendorf, in his capacity as Chief of an Einsatzgruppe and in his rank at that time as Colonel. Apart from Himmler and the heads of the Ministries only they h ad the possibility of contradicting the Fuehrer and to attempt to have him rescind the order. That possibility obviously had been exhausted unsuccessfully, since that order was in force. In addition the situation was especially difficult for Ohlendorf, because already at that time he had incurred the gravest displeasure on the part of Heydrich and Himmler, and because his transfer to Russia must be considered a punishment (see testimony Ohlendorf and affidavit Dr. Hauschke in Document Book No. I, Doc. No. 8 , Exh. No. 31). Thus there remains merely the question, whether or not Ohlendorf had the possibility on the basis of his position to approach the Fuehrer him self and to insist on the order being changed.

Anyone who knows the conditions with National Socialist Germany will have to answer that question in the negative. In this connection I refer to the affidavit of the former Chief of the Reich Chancellery, Dr. Lammers, contained in Document Book I, Doc. No. 3, Exh. No. 24, p. 12 in the German text, to which I have nothing further to add. Because of its special importance in this decisive question I request that the Court take cognizance of it in its entirety. That there can be no expert witness against this affidavit on this question, despite the objections of the prosecution, is proven by the former position and experience of the witness.

In summarizing the following may be said: Ohlendorf had no means at all to change the course of events. He merely was enabled to carry out the execution of that order in such a way as to spare the unfortunate victims of this order and the troops commissioned with the execution as much of the mental anguish as possible and to prevent any possible outrages. I believe that I do not have to describe to what extent the defendant Ohlendorf fulfilled his duty in that respect. His own and the other defendants' testimony has proven that unequivocally without being disproven by the prosecution. Are there any other aspects or possibilities, the disregarding of which could be considered as a legally tenable charge against the defendant? Above all, could he legally be expected to resist actively the orders or to commit insubordination? It certainly requires no special explanation to show that there exists no legal duty for an open rebellion against an order by the Chief of a State. Because otherwise all the laws of obedience of the State, which govern the special life of human beings would be rendered superfluous and would be dependent only on the arbitrary interpretation of the individual. However,even plain insubordination was completely out of the question in the case of the defendant. Ohlendorf was subject to military law. The order was a military order, given in wartime. The consequences of insubordination would plainly have been a trial before the SS and Police court and a subsequent death sentence (see Blume Document No. I, pages 1-13, German, and transcript of the session of 4 November 1947, pages 1899-1902). Nowhere and at no time however has the duty to become a martyr been decreed as a legal duty quite apart from the fact that thereby the entire situation would not have been changed at all.

Someone else would have stepped into Ohlendorf's place and it would have merely raised the question whether or not the other man would have been prepared to mitigate and ease the consequences of this terrible order both for the victims as well as for the men of the Einsatzkommando in whatever way possible out of the same deep sense of responsibility. During the interrogation of the defendant, the question also arose whether or not Ohlendorf could not have evaded his assignment to the East by feigning sickness. Ohlendorf stated in this connection that he had declined to make such an attempt for reasons of his ethics and character and because it would have helped neither the unfortunate victims affected by the Fuehrer Order nor his comrades. abovementioned laws the simulation of an illness would have been considered as undermining the fighting morale and would have been punished with death. Thus there was no escape for Ohlendorf from this dilemma except for one - certain death, and it would have been too much to expect him to choose that. Neither Ohlendorf nor his fellowdefendants were placed in that position through any fault of their own. After all, they did not volunteer for the assignment to the East in full knowledge of the orders to be expected, but they obeyed governmental compulsion. They were drafted for military service and were assigned there. In the case of Ohlendorf it was done even in the way of a penal measure - though it was not discernible as such on the outside - after he twice unsuccessfully resisted Heydrich's plans by which he was menacingly accused of being a coward.

The question of an emergency caused by orders * of unexpectability cannot be disposed of without showing to what an extent the interpreta tions of International Law had become inconsistent in the Europe of former times already during and after the first world War, as well as through the establishment of the Soviet State.

For the uncertainty of the conceptions valid until then, was undoubtedly eO-decisive for the degree of inner or outer resistance shown or not shown by the individual offices or officials of the Third Reich depending on the position which they held in relation to the Fuehrer at any given time. The situation of International law at that time showed the following picture: During the first World War the Rules of Warfare drawn up by the Hague Conferences had become fluid (gas warfare, hunger blockade). In spite of that it had been neglected in the period following to obviate in any way the dangers to the civilian population inherent in the possibility of a total war. Above all it had been neglected to introduce any kind of limitation for aerial bombardment, even though the experts never grew weary of pointing out these dangerous points. An additional proof for the inconsistency of international law is the fact that a plan could be created during the war on the Allied side, which was - in the words of the American Senator Langer - and I quote: "a plan for the systematic annihilation of the German speaking people" , it was the so-called Morgenthay Plan. Not without reason did Langer formulate his opinion as follows: "No matter how cruel England might have been at any time during its history - and I do not exclude even the Black Hell of Calcutta - there has never been a more savage plan than the one proposed by Mr. Morgenthau". a uniform International Law. It overlooks however, intentionally or unintentionally, the fact that the world has been divided both politically and from the standpoint of law into two parts, and that not just since the beginning of the last war, but de facto already since the creation of the Soviet Union in 1917/18. According to the claims of that state which it put forth itself, the Soviet Union cannot be a loyal partner in the community of nations.

That is made conclusively impossible by its irrevocable aim for world revolution. Beyond that it strives to use International Law and its recognized rules as a weapon against the non-Communist environments, as I shall prove yet. Professor Korovin, the well-known Soviet-Russian expert on Internatio nal Law writes in his Manual of International Law, which he has published under the title "An International Law of the Period of Transition": "The Soviet Union represents the world of tomorrow, it does not fit into a world of yesterday."

situation, that acts are being condemned in Nuernberg as a crime, which are quite common for a power, which has signed the basis for the indictment - i.e. the Control Council Law. In this connection a collection of documents deserve a special interest, i.e. "The Land of the Dead", study of the deportations from Eastern Germany, Committee against Mass Expulsions. In that book the slave labor by Germans and their expulsion from their home-country are being publicly exposed, as follows: centage of the missing persons (expelled Eastern Germans was put to death by their tormentors, or have perished because of lack of food and housing. According to the Congressional Report of 5 February 1946, Senator Capehart estimated that no fewer than 3 Million human beings had lost their lives in the course of this "resettlement". held as slave-labor in Russia, Poland, Czechoslovakia and the Balkan countries. The January edition of the Review of World Affairs (London) reports that it is a well known fact that thousands of German women are working as slaves in the mines around Sverdlovsk. Tens of thousands of civilian slaves work in the mine of Upper Silesia; Czechoslovakia still retains about 300,000 Sudeten Germans as slave labor." Slav workers by Germany during the war, the book concludes:

"If we substitute the words 'Slav' for 'German' and 'Millions' for 'Thousands', then we have an accurate description of the occurrences in Eastern Europe under Allied blessing. It is unbelievable that the Government "of the United States should be a party to a policy for which the Nazi Leaders have been put on trial and have been hanged under American suspices."

new International Law, the persons responsible for all the misery described above would have to be on trial now. And how many persons will have been connected with the execution of these horrible decrees, who, like these defendants, base their defense on the fact that they had to obey their national laws? Unlike these defendants they do not even receive comfort from the excuse to have obeyed a military order before the enemy. They could have, at any time as civilians given up their work for the government, which asked them to do such things. Until the present time no case has become known, in which an Allied citizen would have declined co-responsibility for the above mentioned horrible events through a pretest, which would have dissolved his relations to the state as the letter's employee. did not act, while conscious of illegality of his acts and of moral injustice. In addition he acted in a personal emergency caused by orders and he did everything in his power to show that he was not satisfied with the protest raised against the proclamation of the Fuehrer Decree and the attempt towards the Reichsfuehrer in Nikolajev, but beyond that, to do at least everything in order to minimize and to limit the effects of Hitler's order. He could not be expected to do more, as I have shown in detail. selves an exceptional and compulsory situation for Germany and insofar refer to the legal institution of national emergency aid and national emergency. It is not certain whether or not the prerequisites were present objectively.

As I shall explain in detail, the defendants at any rate had to assume them to be present subjectively, due to the special situation according to International Law, into which they, as Germans and soldiers, had been placed. basic question whether and to what degree the legal principle of falsely assumed national emergency aid and falsely assumed national emergency may influence the question of guilt in this case. Due to the fundamental importance of that question it is necessary to discuss it thoroughly. sitated the clarification of a few preliminary questions. its conclusion is Control Council Law No. 10. It deviates from all of the known criminal laws of all legal systems insofar as it does not contain a so-called "general section" and apparently is limited solely to the establishment of criminal facts. Every criminal code of all countries however contains -- either in the form of a specific order by law or in the form of customary law systematized by the courts or by the legal profession -- a large number of detailed rules, which determine the general prerequisites of culpability, which are substantially the same for all criminal acts. They include for example -- to name only a few -- the regulations concerning the connection between cause and effect, premeditation and negligence attempts, statute of limitations, responsibility for one's actions and finally also self-defense and state of emergency, including the falsely assumed self-defense and falsely assumed state of emergency.

Thus, Control Council Law No. 10 does not deal with all of these questions of the general section of a criminal code, and is limited to the definition of a few points.

that all the other fundamental principles of the "general section" of a criminal code which are in part mentioned above, should not be applicable to Control Council Law No. 10. The observance of these general criminal regulations is so completely covered in all nations and their application is so selfevident all over the world also by law or customary law, that on the one hand without them a law could not be imagined, and that on the other hand all legal thinking would be considerably impeded. Individual Military Courts have therefore already stated that these fundamental principles would have to be taken into consideration also in the application of Control Council Law No. 10. It remains only to answer the question as to which legal sources can be considered the source of the problems not regulated by Law No. 10. Law No. 10 is not a national specical law. If that were the case the general regulations of that state which has issued that special law would have to be applied. Law No. 10 however is an inter-national agreement concluded by the four signatory powers for the detailed execution of the Moscow declaration of 30 October 1945 and the London Declaration of 8 August 1945. participated in its creation, of which each one has its own national system of criminal law. four states cannot simply be used as legal foundation and the less so since at present no international tribunal is sitting whose judges could represent the peculiarities of the systems of criminal law of their respective countries.

Dr. Reinhard Maurach, professor of criminal law and Eastern European law, has examined this question with a view to the present case (legal opinion of Dr. R. Maurach in Document Book II Ohlendorf p. 4 and following) and subjected the possibilities which might be considered to a scientific scholarly examination. This question was dealt with also in my opening statement so that I may be allowed to refer thereto, in order to save time. tribunal called up to decide in the present case can appraise the defense of the defendant exhaustively only if making a so-called continental "cross-section" of the laws on legitimate self-defense and the state of emergency the basis of its judgment. tain doubts as to the application of this continental "cross-section", the Soviet criminal law in any case must be applied as supplementing Law No. 10 in preference to the lex fori, and that on the following considerations: 1947 concerning the abolition of capital punishment in the beginning of my final plea I have expounded how the American Tribunal is acting by way of trustee of the State which has the primary right to punish, namely the Soviet Union. Consequently, an attorneyship under public law has been established for which according to the prerequisites of international law the law of the State having the primary right to punish must be considered.

should still hesitate before applying the continental "cross section". This would be appropriate especially for this reason that according to this Russian Law legitimate self-defense and the state of emergency as legal conceptions, including the assumed self-defense and the assumed state of emergency, are the subjects of general rules so that the Tribunal could only in this way on a far-reaching scale deal justly with the defense presented by the defendant. permit the application of the aforesaid legal conceptions from the laws on legitimate self-defense. With reference to the expert opinion of Professor Maurach I intend to do this as far as the legal prerequisites are concerned in the form of references to my opening statement and to the expert opinion of Professor Maurach. In the examination whether the se prerequisites can be actually claimed to exist, the problem of the war against the Soviet Union as war not following normal military precepts must be made the first object of consideration. national emergency as legal institutions are considered it appears at once obvious that normal actions of war as such do not in themselves justify the application of these legal conceptions. If that were the case at least one of the billigerent parties could always claim to act in legitimate self-defense, and both parties could plead to be in a state of emergency. Actions of war can therefore lead to the application of these legal conceptions only when they exceed the limit of normal war operations, i.e. if the war aims and war methods to be expected with certainty from the enemy are "extraordinary" to such extent that the traditional ideas and limits of international law are inapplicable.

In this case it would not be possible to refuse the opponent of such a state even for the duration of the war to plead legitimate self-defense and state of emergency. The establishment of this fact must be the cornerstone of the whole consideration of the question whether in view of the nature of the Soviet Russian war methods and altogether the Soviet Russian interpretation of international law and laws of war the Eastern war conducted from 1941 on was a war as defined by existing international law. Therefore the question is: Can the Soviet Union in this respect be considered in a way that will permit her opponent to plead a legitimate self-defense practiced in a time of war which can be recognized by international law? ples and doctrines represented most clearly in the following thesis proposed by Stalin: "The aim of our foreign policy will always remain the same: 'Establishment of communist dictatorship in the whole world'." No particular comments are required to prove that this guiding principle stated by Stalin himself forms a radical contrast to the idea of international law. This idea acknowledges the right to live for every state belonging to the international community of nations. Contrary thereto the Soviet Union will eliminate all non-Soviet, i.e. capitalistic nations. Therefore it cannot on principle acknowledge the law of nations and does not acknowledge it either as I shall explain later. But since the Soviet Union -- even though it be only for a certain "transition period" - has been placed within the community of non-Soviet states, the result must be the necessity of the reluctant and revocable acknowledgement for the duration of this transitory period of certain conventional rules as applicable also to the Soviet Union.

Professor Korovin, today considered the leading specialist of international law and the spokesman of the views of the Kremlin says hereto: "Since other state organizations are still in existance in addition to the Soviet Russua the relations of Soviet Russia to these states must unevitably be based on this or that legal foundation of the 'transitory period'. Only the nature of this foundation is questionable." The nature, however, is disclosed by Soviet attitudes and publications proving that the Soviets use international law and its rules as weapons in the service of the class war against the non-communist world. In his "International Law of the Transitory Period" and in other essays some of which have appeared also later than 1945, Professor Korovin has expressed opinions, to this effect. From these publications the following overall picture can be deduced as regards the laws of war: sovereignty since it is itself -- even after 1945 -- in an isolated position and for reasons of self-preservation cannot impose any chains of convention on its own sovereignty. This reasoning is the basis of its extensive use of the veto power in the UN and also of the aspect under which the entire law of treaties is viewed. On the strength of this attitude the Soviet Union accents obligations to concluded treaties only so far as they do not "delay" the world revolution. This applies in particular to the case of war, in which the Soviet Union believes to be right in simply stripping off such obligations because it expects nothing else from the bourgeois states. On this professor Korovin says: "On one hand we know better than anybody else that the loyalty towards accepted obligations is not "being observed either generally or towards Socialistic states by virtue of the signature of a bourgeois government or by the motives deduced from normal scholasticism.

.. however... the relative value (of such war conventions) must be acknowledged also for Soviet Russia, but with the 'unavoidable improvement with reference to the social revolution in the form of the clausula rebus sic stantibus'." In the opinion of the Soviet Union every war is fighting a defensive war because it is fought only for the sake of "class self-defense". The same basic attitude is found again in the laws on prisoners of war. It is true that official Russian authorities have not disclosed any opinion on the question as to whether the USSR is bound by the rules established by the laws on prisoners of war and Korovin, too, has left that question open. However, it is emphasized that even in the treatment of prisoners a considerable discrimination must be practiced according to "whether the prisoners are politicians or class enemies (officers and other responsible leaders); in the interest of the propaganda for the world revolution it would be attempted to influence the former "in a friendly way" whereas the latter category could hardly be "re-educated" (Korovin p. 124); but then the Soviet doctrine is prepared to accept the discriminatory treatment of the members of its own army as unavoidable retaliation.

In such cases a general display a hostile attitude towards the USSR. In all such cases it is imperative according to Soviet ideology to render them harmless. The system of hostages, it is true, is repudiated "in principle" (Korovin p. 129), but it is here stressed that the particular circumstances under which the Red Army must fight justify also the arrest of innocent persons according to the hostage principle "even though it is in pursuance not of legal ethics but of actual expediency". It is also mentioned that certain groups will be preferably considered in the selection of hostages (such as mayors, notories, public teachers, ecclesiastics) who as "spiritual supporters" of the enemy are particularly tied up with the ruling (capitalist) class of the enemy state. bound by conventions under international law as little does it regard the principles of the administration of occupied enemy territories as binding with respect to itself. The official opinion of the Soviet Union does not leave any doubt as to this official opinion. Korovin writes: ("In this connection . . . ) the question arises whether the fact can be considered unlawful that the Soviet Power does not in the least feel itself obligated to protect the inviolability of exploitation and the impertubability of the capitalistic order within the borders of the occupied territory, but, on the contrary, fighting for its socialist existence it lends any possible assistance (Finland, Poland, Esthonia, Latvia) to the efforts of the local working masses towards organizing the society on a socialist basis.

The revolutionary committees, the support of the rise of national Soviet republics, and other working principles of the so-called "Sovietizing" are the consequences thereof." recess.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. The Tribunal will be in recess fifteen minutes.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. ASCHENAUER: The principles which I have here quoted must be considered the quintessence of the Soviet theory of international law. They have been published by the only spokesman of this doctrine in the USSR and, finally, were approved of by the Soviet federal censorship. It must be beyond doubt that these proclamations coincide with the official opinions of the Kremlin. The conjectures inferred from these doctrines of the Soviet Union as to the conduct to be expected in a possible war were on a considerable scale confirmed by the experiences of the Finnish winter war (Blue-White Book of the Finnish Government I). Also in taking over the Baltic States the Soviet Union displayed towards the civilian population of the occupied countries the aforesaid principles contrary to international law as it is generally known and besides was explained in detail e.g. by the witness Dr. Maw in the Sandberger case. Indeed even in 1913 the Soviet Union officially notified the German Reich Government through its diplomatic representatives at that time that the Russian Government denounced all treaties formerly concluded by the Russian State among which also the Hague Convention on the Laws and Customs of Land Warfare and the Geneva Convention. That means that already when the war with Germany started the Soviet basic thesis had received corroboration that the USSR would acknowledge the rules of international law in a certain sense only for the so-called "transitory period" during which it actually decisive clash with another power it would on principle reserve for itself the right to free action. In the eyes of the Soviet Union, however, international law is just not the modus vivendi between states for mutual restriction of their respective rights to existence but a diplomatic weapon to be used for realization of its world-revolutionary aims. Therefore the Soviet Union was also prepared to acknowledge certain theses of international law only if they did not run contrary to its revolutionary plans. The entire development of the foreign policy of the Soviet Union discloses the tactics of openly sacrificing the rules of international law if this will be in accordance with the alleged "dialectic evolution" i.e. the interests of the "coming unavoidable" world revolution.

In all such cases international law must he superseded by the requirements of class warfare. During the time of existence of the Soviet Union - as already mentioned - this was proved unmistakably in particular by the numerous Soviet interventions. These interventions in themselves made it clear that the war going on from 1941 had to be fought by Germany not only against the Stte of the USSR but against world Bolshevism as such, in other words against the entire political Communist movement threatening the non-Soviet world. The part played by the Comintern - or Cominform as it is called at present - is so well-known throughout the world and in consideration of the political development of recent years so undisputed also by Americans that I may be allowed to abstain from dealing with this question in detail. Therefore many psychological conditions which are not relevant as far as other wars are concerned namely the imperative idea based on factual knowledge that under the circumstances collective security measures might not be avoidable even though they were reprehensible from an ethical point of view, became rightly a subject of discussion among the defendants. should like to invite the attention also to the selection of war conventions to which the Soviet Union has acceded. These are most significantly the Geneva Protocol of 17 June 1925 concerning prohibition of chemical and bacteriological warfare (with a few qualifications) and the London Protocol of 6 November 1936 concerning the rules of submarines warfare. hesitation because its incomplete preparations in the field of chemical and submarine warfare made restrictions expedient whereas the far more essential treaties, the Hague Convention, and the Geneva Convention on prisoners of war, threatened to restrict the totality of the war which by the Soviet Union would be carried on according to principles of civil war.

Therefore such rules must be eliminated for a war against "capitalistic states". This applied in particular to the incitement of partisan warfare for which valuable strategical experience had already been gained through the civil war from 1917 to 1920. All this is no theoretical discussion, on the contrary this rather led perforce to the expected behavior of the Soviet Union in a war with a "capitalistic power", which then also materialized in the war with Germany. In accordance with the views it had repeatedly announced, the USSR in this war in which it did not consider itself bound by the rules of the Hague Conventions on the Laws and Customs of Landwarfare, disregarded also the unwritten basic rules of generally acknowledge customs of war although to the observation of which it would also have been bound. The leaders of the German State who, because of the National Socialist ideology and the geographic position of the Reich had concerned themselves with the Communist world of ideas more than the rest of Europe anticipated this behavior with certainty. The defendants were of the same opinion by virtue of their political and professional experience. All these circumstances must be taken into account when examining the charge of the Prosecution that the defendants are responsible of the elamination of "politically undesirable elements for ideologica reasons". I have already eleborately expounded my view that the Defendant Ohlendorf could not and was not entitled either to undertake an examination of the question whether these groups of persons were rightly designated to be included in the extermination action. These persons were by the official authorities of the German State described as an actual and potential danger to military operations and the planned permanent occupation of Soviet territory. For the danger rose from their ideology which they were bound to annihilate all opponents in order to realize the Bolshevist world revolution. From this it appears that obviously it was a question of forestalling or defeating a typically Soviet method. of carrying on war in Soviet partisan warfare. This partisan war is contrary to all principles of martial law, as already mentioned.

A more detailed examination of its specific strategical nature in this case will confirm this allegation. Accordingly, under no circumstances can partisan warfare still be considered a permissible kind of warfare, not even by an only analogous application of the rules of war. The USSR here acted according to the principles adopted in 1918 and taken over from the atmosphere of civil war in which they had proved their effiency in an in glorious way. to know translated into practice is briefly recapitulated as follows: Military operations are subject to no obligations established by international law. Any means which injures the enemy is permissible. An object of particular importance is the disorganization of the troops by all means and through utilization of the entire population. The organization of partisan bands therefore is determined solely by the purpose to be served at any time. In the first place, bands existed carrying weapons openly and for which the most part were composed of elements wanting to evade the discipline of the regular army, e.g. released convicts and forced larorers who were frequently under the command of notorious prostitutes. In this category also the undisguised robber gangs came socalled "Machno". Large groups of the population were forcibly bound to perform scounting service for these partisan bands, to feed and to hide the partisans, and finally to serve as leaders and agents. Behind the front-lines active soldiers were parachuted from planes who were supposed to terrorize the population in the territories occupied by the Germans, to force them to intelligence and scouting service, and to instigate assaults and murers of individual German soldiers. It was their duty to force the population to carry out the Stalin order dated 3 July 1941 in which it says: "The war against Fascist Germany cannot be considered an ordinary war. It is not only a war between two armies, it is at the same time the great war of the entire Soviet people against the Fascist German troops.....

5 Feb 1948_M_MSD_9_3_Hoxsie (Hildesheimer) In the occupied territories intolerable conditions must be created for the enemy and his accomplices, their every step must be doggedly followed, they must be destroyed and their acts must be thwarted. "And in this way the so-called "Vernichtungs-Battallione" (Destruction Batallions) came into being, of which the tribuanl has heard again and again from the testimonies of the defendants, and the activities of which made up a great part of the defensive assignments of the defendants. forcing of the entire population of the hinterland into the service of the resistance movement - as was actually experienced by the defendants and described by them on the witness stand. Not only men, but also women and children were drawn into the net of the organization under coercion and forced to carry on acts of scouting and intelligence work. For this reason, total war was conducted by the Soviet Union from the very beginning through the compulsory, in disriminate use of other parts of the population. This corresponds to the picture shown by the excerpts from the "Russian Encyclopedia" in (Ohlendorf Document II a, No. 42.) There it speaks about the fact that "the Partisan is not only a fighter, but also a political agitator, an organizer of the masses" (Page 4 of Ohlendorf Document No. 42.) It is his taks to "create a hatred of national indignation" and not only to call on the adult mases of the population but also women, old men and boys." (Page 6.) The Partisan war must "take on savage and manifeld forms." It must "join the revolutionary struggle of the exploited classes against their exploiters as well the struggle of the people against interventionist troops". In these case "the acts of armed units from the local population took on a particularly audacious and bitter character." was possible in the history of European warfare. Not only does it transgress the modified laws of international law, consciously unrecognized by the Soviet Union, but to the same extent transgresses all the unwritten customs of the conduct of war of civilized nations. The defendants have offered numerous examples in this connection.

The organized and extensive compulsory utilization of women and children, the poisoning of wells, the spreading of typhoid fever bacillae, the destruction of the harvest and the burning of entire cities are symptoms of a type of fighting which could in no way be countered with the weapons of the former European conduct of war. In this connection we see the peculiarities of the extensive virgin land, the immensity and expanse of Russian territory. Under these conditions security measures had to be taken which are unknown in the war conditions in the West and which do not permit of generalization. In many cases the liquidation of the male population of Partisan villages was found necessary, and often it was imperative to eliminate the instigators and "wire-pullers" of a cunning and cowardly conducted "war"., qualities recognized instinctively by the German soldier. The conclusion to recognize or at least suspect as such instigators certain classes or niveaus of the population is particularly evident under the conditions of such a total war. The Soviet doctrine as well holds no divergent point of view when it experminates the bourgeoisie and those opposed to its ideology, and does this in its own country and those nations under its domination without benefit of trial. occupied himself with the foundamentals of political events, and who not only was familiar with the theoritical writings of Communism but experienced the direct perilous threat to Germany of Communism and followed its practice in Finland and the Baltic countries, never entertained doubts for one minute that the Bolschewist leadership would not observe the rules and customs of international law and laws of war in the inpending war and possible defeat of German. Therefore it was self-evident to him that Germany as well could not observe these rules towards the Soviet Union, for this would have meant an unjustifiable disadvantage against thes adversary who was intent on his destruction.

of the German text, the prosecution attempts to tie up the attitude of Ohlendorf concerning the killing of civilians in the Soviet Union without benefit of trial and the affirmation of Ohlendorf daring the crossexamination of the prosecution that the killing of civilians in the occupied territories was regarded as pure and simple murder . However, such an interpretation, following the clear statements of Ohlendorf concerning the conduct of war according to international law of the Soviets, which he regarded as a state of emergency so far as Germany was concerned, is neither feasible, nor can such an interpretation be inferred from the connection of the passage from the cross-examination as quoted by the prosecution. For this question from Ohlendorf's point of view is not tied up with the questions concerning the killing of civilians in Russia. After all, "he did not admit anything", but rather he answered, without hesitation, with "of course", or "yes". It was clear to him that the prosecutor was questioning him for the purpose of collecting evidence against him with respect to his conduct in the Soviet Union. However, according to his own firm conviction that the German measures in Russia, including the ordered killing of civilians, should be held to be outside of every consideration of international law and beyond every recognition of the otherwise customary rules of war since the party of the second part, who would represent the prequisite for its consideration, is looking Ohlendorf cannot consider these questions of the prosecutor as being pertinent to the Soviet Union. He was able to hold this opinion for all the more reason that the two questions which proceed that quoted by the prosecution refer concretely to International Law and Conventions of War, which the Soviet Union never considered binding upon it.

The three questions and answers were as follows:

"Q: Have you ever heard of the Geneva Convention?

"A: Of course.

Q Have you ever heard of the Hague Convention? in the organization which was subject to Military Law, were you not aware that the killing of civilians in the occupied territories without benefit of trial was regarded as pure murder and nothing else according to International law as well as according to the Law and Customs of War?

A Yes. I have again brought those points before the High Tribunal in order thereby to illustrate what prerequisites bespeak the assumption of a mistaken belief of a state of emergency and self-defense on the mistaken belief of being attacked with respect to the defendant OHLENDORF and his co-defendants. This is a question of subjective prerequisites which can be induced at all only by objective conditions. The complete lack of any inhibitions with which the USSR conducted "total" war from the very beginning, and in particular the Partisan war which was fought with complete disregard of the laws of war, and their collective measures which were carried, out by the Soviet government in their intervention before 1940, also induced Germany to regard certain groups of the Russian population as a potential danger spot, and which had to be eliminated for the safety of the fighting troops. justified on the basis of the conditions described above need not be further discussed. However, one point must be examined, namely to what extent such measures were subjectively conceivable to the defendants, In this question the point must be discussed as to what the relationship of Bolschevism and Jewry was according to the ideology of National Socialism and also according to the personal conception of the defendants. I may forego a detailed description of the development of the NationalSocialist ideology in this respect. but its psychological effects upon the defendants must be considered.

defendants before the outbreak of war had conjured up a picture of the collaboration of Russian Jewry and Bolschevism, which was then confirmed in the course of their assignment in Russia. last decades by the historical-sociological research of Russia that the percentage of the Jewish population in political, cultural, and scientific key positions within the Soviet Union is unusually high. This is not based on German research but on data supplied by Russians and Jews. It is shown that the number of Jews in official positions amounts on the average to about 20%. In Party offices, this percentage was considerably larger, e.g. the Ministry for Foreign Trade with its offices abroad was a Jewish domain to a particularly great degree. The same applies for the Ministries of the Interior, for State Security, and for the great number of economic Ministries. The percentage of Jews within the army in the so-called political administration is particularly large. This percentage in higher top positions reaches 65%. These and similar facts made up a part of the daily reading matter in the German press many years before the war and thereby also formed a part of the convictions of the defendants. majority of offices, in particular the higher offices which enjoyed no great popularity among the great masses of people, such as the economic officials, and above all the Political Police (N.K.W.D.) were actually occupied to a high decree by Jews. In this connection it must be remarked that for these reasons, though it is true, conditions varied according to regions, an mistakable anti-Semitism became evidente in all parts of Russia. And finally it was learned quite soon that the Jews played a particularly important part in the resistance movement and especially in the underground organizations of the Partisan movement. This assertion is substantiated by such scenes as Jews going to their death with cries of STALIN on their lips and singing the Internationale.

Under these conditions one must see in the Jew the leader of the resistance and sabotage. This situation gave rise to the psychological prerequisites already mentioned for the fact that the liquidation order was accepted as a necessity conditioned by the war, about which the individual could think ashe pleased, which however in the framework of general events had to be recognized and carried out.

In its opening statement (page 5) the prosecution devoted only one section to the line of thought, which, according to its interpretation, forms the ideological basis of the case in chief, namely the "Nazi doctrine of master race and inferior races." At the opening it stated that this "Nazi ideology" was devoid of any humanitarianism and represented ruthless materialism. The defendants fell complete victims to this doctrine. They despised members of other races and this extremely criminal way of thinking led them to commit their deeds. The High Tribunal will recallthat on the witness stand OHLENDORF stated quite rightly that there existed no uniform interpretation of the racial question in the Third Reich at all, that rather these problems were viewed by the most diverse leading functionaries in the most diverse way. National Socialist literature as well was full of contradictions. I remember the books of Prof. GUENTHER and Prof. KLAUS. For this very reason it is misleading to wish to explain the obediency of the defendants to the order under discussion by the falsely stated "Nazi doctrine of master race and inferior races." As far as the particular case of the defendant OHLENDORF is concerned, I believe that the High Tribunal itself has gained an entirely different personal impression of OHLENDORF than that which the Prosecution has attempted to convey, OHLENDORF's entire life and pursuits were directed to ward the correcting of the aberrations and abuses of the conceptions of individual influential National Socialists and to abolish them in their effects. I wish to refer to my statements just made with respect to membership in criminal Court,2, Case 9 organizations.

The very humanitarian thinking of OHLENDORF in opposition to the cynical, autocratic and ruthless nature of LEY, BORMANN, GOEBBELS, KOCH, HIMMLER and HEYDRICH was the motivating factor that induced OHLENDORF to stand in constant opposition to these men. His conception of the state and his opinions concerning folk and race were diametrically opposed to these which individual authoritative leaders of the Third Reich proclaimed and in fact attempted to translate into action.

In this respect the High Tribunal stated quite clearly (see page 5038 of the German transcript):

".....whatever can be brought forth to show that his character excludes criminal intent is certainly of material importance."

Therefore, I may summarize: OHLENDORF strove for a constitutional state in which power was bound by constitution and law. OHLENDORF's conceptions concerning people and race were in sharp contrast to these which in this connection were actually translated into action. OHLENDORF sharply rejected the measures taken against the Jews during the years before the assumption of power and was not in agreement with the radical racial conceptions of the NSDAP. Remaining consistently loyal to his opinions, OHLENDORF went so far as to intervene personally through a minority statute for the Jews living in Germany. Beyond that he represented the principle of "Equality of all citizens before the law" and "Independence of the Judge." avail, to bring about an independent legal procedure in the pronouncing of protective custody within the framework of the Security Police, an attempt motivated by these his thoughts and his concern for the preservation of legal security in national life.

In the field of culture and education (OHLENDORF was constantly at odds with the authoritative offices in the Party and State, and stood up for freedom of the sciences and for a natural, healty education of German youth, just as he stood up in the field of economics for the independence of industry.

friends and even by his ideological adversaries is actually in contradiction to that man which the prosecution wishes to make of him. To characterize this man simply as a thousandfold murderer, whom one deems it necessary to deprive of any feeling of conscience or morals appears as a crass contradiction to the description of a disinterested observer. For this reason Frau Dr. KLEIN acknowledges in her affidavit already mentioned: "Following my confinement in prison I never saw Herr OHLENDORF again and heard nothing from him for many years. Then when I saw in the press the hints concerning his activitiesin the East, I was deeply shaken. I must admit that it is difficult for me in this connection to write about Herr (HLENDORF. Nevertheless, I consider it my duty to describe truthfully his conduct and nature based on my acquaintanceship with him. It was never clear to me from the press, neither can I believe that a man who conducted himself so courageously and tolerantly could have committed such unworthy acts. Whatever may have induced him not to refuse to carry out orders of a questionable nature, whatever that might have been, his fate in my opinion is tragic." a result of the purest desires, and because of his constant struggle against power and despotism, has come to this stage of finding himself in the prisoner's dock. obtaining for himself a limited basis as manager of the Reich Group Trade for the execution of oppositional thinking against the system of a LEY, BORMANN, HIMMLER and HEYDRICH, must be done away with for that reason and falls victim to the diabolical rule of National Socialist rulers, what indeed is the reason for OHLENDORF's transfer to his assignment in the East? The somewhat more independent attitude which OHLENDORF had achieved through tenacious efforts presents an untenable situation which HEYDRICH and others cannot permit.

Therefore, OHLENDORF must leave Berlin. The reason for his assignment for the anthroposophies made it possible to punish him by transferring him and in this assignment either to crush him morally through his conduct and thus deprive him of any power to resist or in the event of open insubordination stand him before the firing-squad. result of the danger which arose in the East and the familure of all the to-level authorities and of the Whermacht to act against the National Socialist hierrachy, the only constructive opponent of the system of power which had arisen only had the opportunity during his period of assignment to restrict and limit the extent of the Fuehrer order through supplementary orders and to obviate atrocities and, insofar as it was possible, to act in a positive manner. OHLENDORF completely exhausted this possibility. East, who opposed KOCH's and THOMAS' policy of power in the Ukraine, be considered a criminal because he acted in this way during his activity as Chief of the Einsatzgruppen? your pronouncement of judgment.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed, Dr. Gawlik.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed, Dr. Gawlik.

DR. GAWLIK: Gawlik for Naumann.

Your Honors, gentlemen of the Tribunal. The defendant Naumann is charged with responsibility for the killing of persons within the sphere of Einsatzgruppe B by units of Einsatzgruppe B in the occupied Russian territories. The Prosecution deduces Neumann's responsibility for these killings from the fact that Naumann was Chief of this Einsatzgruppe. justify the charge raised against Naumann. could only be held responsible for acts falling within the period of his actual leadership of the Einsatzgruppe. Naumann was not Chief of Einsatzgruppe B at the start of the Russian campaign. Rather did he take charge of Einsatzgruppe B only several months after the start of the Russian campaign. Also for these reasons he cannot, therefore, be held responsible for all executions which, according to the indictment, are supposed to have been committed by members of the Einsatzgruppe B. B on 1 Nov. 1941 and from this deduced his responsibility for executions which from that time on were carried out by units of Einsatzgruppe B. To prove this the Prosecution has submitted the following operational situation reports:

3.) of 22 Dec. 1941

4.) of 21 April 1942 gruppe B. However, it is incorrect to place these executions, except for those mentioned in the last document, within the period during which Naumann was Chief of Einsatzgruppe B.

this results quite obviously from the document itself. The exact dates of the executions are given in this report. All executions have taken place between 9 and 23 of October 1941. It therefore is impossible to connect Naumann in any way with these executions, for according to the Prosecution's own claim they have taken place at a time when Naumann did not yet lead the Einsatzgruppe. its trial brief. of 19 and 22 December 1941 within the sphere of Einsatzgruppe B do not fall within the period in which Naumann was Chief of the Einsatzgruppe. Naumann cannot be held responsible for these executions either.

The Operational Situation Report of 19 Dec. 1941 does not give any date at all for the executions mentioned there. The Operational Situation Report of 22 Dec. 1941 mentions the 18, and 21 November 1941 as only indication for the occurrences in Russia reported there. From this it follows necessarily that executions mentioned in the Operational Situation Report of 19 Dec. 1941 must have taken place prior to 18 November 1941. As these documents show, especially the report of 22 Dec. 1941, a period of more than one month on the average lies between the occurrences reported and their appearing in the Operational Situation Report, which was compiled at the Reich Security Main Office in Berlin. This becomes comprehensible by realizing the road which the reports had to travel before appearing in the Operational Situation Reports. As the evidence has shown (Record 832 and 829 of the German, pages 825 and 823 of the English) the road usually was such that at first the partial Commando concerned made up a report on the individual occurrences, which at the next best opportunity was transmitted to the competent Commando Leader, who compiled the reports of the partial Commandos for transmission to the Einsatzgruppe. On the basis of these reports the Einsatzgruppe prepared a compiled report for the whole group in order to transmit same to the Reichs Security Main Office, where the Operational Situation Reports, presented here now as documents ,were finally drafted on the basis of these compiled reports.

Considering the vast distances in the Russian area and the poor communications there, it becomes entirely understandable that much time elapsed before the reported occurrences appeared in the Operational Situation Reports issued by the Reichs Security Main Office. No transmission by radio was possible because of the size of these reports which contained among other matters long discourses on economic, cultural and other conditions. the reports of 19 and 22 December 1941 must have taken place prior to 21 of November. One could charge Naumann with responsibility for these executions only, if the allegation of the Prosecution would be correct that Naumann took over the Command of Einsatzgruppe B already on 1 November 1941. However, this allegation of the Prosecution is incorrect. The Prosecution, to be sure, bases this allegation on a personnel questionnaire filled out by Naumann in the year 1943, submitted in evidence as Doc. No. 2970, Exh. 113, Doc. Book III B, page 4 English and German. In this questionnaire Naumann filled in the date of his commissioning and not the date when he actually took over the Einsatzgruppe B. The time of commissioning did net, however, coincide with the time Naumann actually took over the leadership of Einsatzgruppe B. In regard to Naumann's criminal responsibility, however, only the time is relevant at which he actually took command of Einsatzgruppe B. questionnaire, filled in merely the date of the commissioning order, since at the time of handing in the questionnaire in 1943 it was irrelevant when the actual transfer of command took place. The time of the commissioning order was fixed and known to the personnel department of the Reichs Security Main Office.

from the date of actually assuming of command. Often there is a longer interval between both dates. So the appointment of Naumann as Inspector of the Security Police and the SD Nuernberg is dated 19 May 1944 which becomes evident from Document No. 2970, Exh. 113 Book III 3, page 16 German, Record P. 2079 Engl.). However, Naumann did not start service before 9 June 1944 (Record p. 860 German, 850 English). In addition the Prosecution bases its claim on the Operational Situation Report of 12 Nov. 1941, Doc. Book II C, page 23 German, page 20 English, Doc. No. 2830, Exh. 72), because there Naumann is listed in the register of Military Posts and communications as Chief of Einsatzgruppe B. To this it must be said at first that this document does not contain any report by Einsatzgruppe B at all. that the persons listed therein could be responsible for whatever occurrences are mentioned in the report; for these registers were not compiled on the basis of reports received from Russia, but independently by Office I of the Reichs Security Main Office in Berlin on the basis of personnel records there on file. This becomes evident on page 815 German, 808 English record. These personnel files contained only the date of the commissioning order, but no information concerning the actual begin of service on the basis of the commission. Thus it is to be explained why Naumann in the Military Posts reports compiled by the RSHA appeared as Chief of Einsatzgruppe B beginning 1 November 1941 automatically on the basis of the commissioning order of the same date, Which Office I of the RSHA issued and therefore knew, although the time of the actual start of service was relevant, which Office I did not know. Post reports did not correspond to the actual personnel situation with the Einsatzgruppen.

So in the Military Post register of the Operational Situation Report No. 126 of 29 Oct. 1941 (Doc. Book I, page 31, Doc. No. 4134, Exh. 7) the co-defendant Rasch is referred to as leader of Einsatzgruppe B, -

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I would suggest that when you refer to a document it is enough to indicate what report it is with the number, without reading the page number, Document Book, Exhibit Number, and so on, because that appears in your written summation and it will be enough merely to refer to the report by number. Don't you think that will be all right?

DR. GAWLIK: I would like you to rule, Your Honor, that it also appears in the record, however, because if I do not read it, it does not appear in the record, because the German court reporters have no copy of my plea. I didn't understand why that is because the English have been obtained, but there have been no German copies made. The German copies only will have to be copied, and the English on es have to be translated.

THE PRESIDENT: I cannot believe that the German reporters will not be furnished with the German text of your summation. Is the Secretary General informed about this? Certainly the German reporters should have a copy of the German speech.

SECRETARY GENERAL: I have not received any German copies at all,

DR. GAWLIK: I quite agree with Your Honor, if it can be secured that German copies are being made -- I am not sure they are made at all and whether or not only English copies are being made and if the German court reporters receive the English copies so that they can get them themselves, then it is no longer necessary, only for that reason I read the numbers.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed as you were reading before, and at recess time the Secretary General will obtain the necess ary information and transmit it to the Tribunal.

DR. GAWLIK -- however Rasch, as the evidence has disclosed, never did lead this Einsatzgruppe, for Naumann took over command of this Einsatzgruppe directly from N ebe, who at the start of the Russian campaign had been Chief of the Einsatzgruppe.

This can be seen still clearer from the Operational Situation Report No. 129 of 5 November 1941. Also in the Military Post register of this report Rasch still is listed as Chief of Einsatzgruppe B. If the opinion of the Prosecution were correct, then logically, it should have made Rasch also responsible for executions within the sphere of Einsatzgruppe B. But it did not do that, obviously in the conviction that the Military Post register was incorrect to that extent. To the same extent the Prosecution itself has admitted the unreliability of the Military Post registers contained in the operational situation reports.

But the presentation of evidence has shown other errors of this kind, which do not directly affect the defendant Naumann, to be sure, but which also show that the records of the base camp can't be given any value as evidence. In this way, Strauch is mentioned as Commander of the Sipo and the SD as early as February 1942, in the report of the RSHA dated 6 September 1943, although the evidence has shown that he didn't begin to serve in that capacity until 22 March, 1942. As proof of further errors of this sort, I refer to the statements of Steimle record, Braune, Haensch, Ott, and Schulz as well as Naumann. in command of Einsatzgruppe B since as early as 1 November 1941, cannot be considered as conclusive, on account of the documents presented for that purpose. the further taking of evidence, because this has shown beyond, doubt that Naumann did not assume command of Einsatzgruppe B until the end of November, probably not until 30, November 1941. given a detailed description of his appointment to Chief of the Einsatzgruppe. In this he showed convincingly that Streckenbach informed him by telephone in Berlin on 1 November 1941 about his appointment as Commander of an Einsatzgruppe. At the same time he had been told, however, that it had not been decided yet whether he would take over the command of Einsatzgruppe B. or C. Einsatzgruppe B. he then left Berlin on the 20th or 21st of November, 1941. After his arrival in Smolensk his predecessor Nebe continued to command the Einsatzgruppe for about one week and only then turned it over to him, so that he only assumed his duties as commander of the Einsatzgruppe on about the 30th of November 1941. During his examination on the witness stand, in direct as well as in cross examination, Naumann designated 30

November 1941 as about the day he began his duties and was also able to give valid reasons to support this date.

These are the same facts that Naumann has already declared to the Prosecution in his affidavit of 27 June 1947. These declarations are especially important because Naumann made them at a time when he could not have known the contents of the Operational Situation Reports with which he is charged, and therefore also could not know what importance would be attached to this date in this trial. evidence which was presented later. The Operational Situation Report of 5 November 1941 which has already been mentioned in a different connection, speaks for the correctness of these statements. the beginning of this document it can be seen that Rasch is mentioned as the Commander of Einsatzgruppe B, who, as has already been shown, has never been in Smolensk. From this must be concluded that it could not yet have been dtermined on 5 November 1941 that Naumann was to take over Einsatzgruppe B, for in that case Rasch would not have been mentioned as the leader of Einsatzgruppe B.

However, Naumann's statements are confirmed by Klingelhoefer. Klingelhoefer was already a member of Einsatzgruppe B when Naumann took over command. Klingelhoefer was able to say definitely on the witness stand that he saw Naumann in Smolensk for the first time between the 20th and 25th of November 1941 and that Nebe was still in Smolensk at that time. Klingelhoefer has exact information about these dates because he went on leave shortly afterwards, on 2 December 1941 to be exact; and remembers the beginning and the end of his leave very well. The end of the leave was the first Christmas holiday. Klingelhoefer can remember the beginning and end of his leave with certainty.

Steimle has also confirmed Naumann's statements; he also was a member of Einsatzgruppe B before Naumann assumed command. As Steimle said on the witness stand, he met Naumann for the first time on 25 November or 2 or 3 days earlier. In the case of Steimle's statement, however, it must be taken into consideration that he figured this date out long after the event and did not have such exact clues to go on as Klingelhoefer had, so that, as he admits himself, the meeting with Naumann referred to before could also have been a few days later.

Steimle has stated himself that he is unable to give an exact date. Exhibit 176, in this document Naumann told the defendant Klingelhoefer, before the beginning of this trial, while in the local prison, not to let himself be bluffed during the interrogations and to be careful. Furthermore, Naumann gave in this document the content of the interrogations he had had up to that time. This document also contains the information that Naumann only took over his job at the end of November. attempted to influence Klingelhoefer to state, contrary to the truth, that he (Naumann) only assumed command of Einsatzgruppe B at the end of November 1941.

This conclusion is incorrect for the following reasons:

1) As already brought out, the document was made some time before the beginning of this trial. At this time Naumann knew nothing as yet, about the documents which the Prosecution has presented in this trial. In particular he did not yet know of the Operational Situation Reports of 19 and 22 December 1941. For this reason he could not yet know at the time that the date he assumed command could be decisive.

2. The Prosecution has not brought proof of any kind that the far reaching statements in this document are incorrect in any particular. This, however, would be the presupposition for the assumption that the information concerning when he took over his duties was incorrect. The contents of this document correspond, moreover, completely with the evidence that has been heard. This shows that Naumann could not have attempted, with this document, to induce Klingelhoefer to make a false statement.

Under these conditions it must be regarded as proved that Naumann did not assume command of Einsatzgruppe B until the end of November 1941. Under no circumstances has it been proved that he was the responsible Commander of Einsatzgruppe B as early as the 1st of November 1941. But the evidence is particularly.not sufficient to show, beyond doubt, that Naumann had already assumed his duties in Smolensk on 1 November. According to all the recognized principles of the trial procedures of all the recognized principles of the trial procedures of all civilized nations, which are also in effect here, according to the decisions of these Military Tribunals, the declarations of Naumann concerning the date he assumed his duties in Russia cannot be considered as refuted, in view of these doubts. which were reported in the documents presented by the Prosecution as happening before the end Of November 1941.

Therefore, the executions reported in documents NO2824, exh. 62, book II B, pg. 30, and NO 2833, exh. 114, cannot be charged to Naumann. 1942, which was presented by the Proseuction in Doc. bk II, B. pg. 52 German pg. 60 English and which contains the references to the executions from 6 to 30 March, falls within the time that Naumann was Commander of the Einsatzgruppe.

To be sure, this document has been admitted as evidence. This admission as evidence, however, does not relieve the Court of the obligation of examining the value of this Operational Situation Report as evidence. It is true that according to Ordinance No. 7 the Military Tribunals are not bound to any rules governing the taking of evidence. By this, however, it was obviously not meant that the Military Tribunal can set itself above well established rules of taking evidence, well established rules which alone are a guaranty for an investigation of the truth, and with it for a just decision.

This was also expressed by Military Tribunal IV in the recent verdict against Flick et al on page 7 of this verdict.

1. This single document, which comes into consideration as evidence against Naumann insofar as executions within the territory of Einsatzgruppe B are mentioned therein, contains the following violations of the basic rules for the taking of evidence, which must be considered as well established and therefore must be observed if the truth is to be arrived at. observations of the author of the document. The author of this document belonged neither to the staff of Einsatzgruppe B nor to a Sonderkommando or Einsatzkommando. He was not even in Russia, but compiled the document in the document in Berlin, for, as I have already mentioned the Operational Situation Reports were prepared, in the form in which they are presented here, by members of Office IV of the RSHA in Berlin. It is not known from what records this document has been compiled. Furthermore, the identity of the author is not known, so that there is no knowledge about whether it was a reliable person who had compiled the operational Situation Reports with the requisite care. were made by persons who were reporting on things they had themselves observed. According to the evidence taken, this is even improbable. Therefore it is a matter of hearsay evidence, which is inadmissible according to the rules for taking evidence in all civilized countries, becaue hearsay evidence contains so many false sources that a just decision cannot be founded on it. Hearsay evidence itself is inadmissable according to all the recognized rules for the taking of evidence. But as we must assume, in this document it is a matter of hearsay evidence of the third, fourth or even a higher degree. Furthermore, the document is not signed.

according to the recognized rules of court procedure, and this by a witness who will be faced by the defendant and who then also states specirically under oath, where the document was found. This condition has also not been fulfilled. It is therefore more than doubtful whether the facts reported in the Operational Situation Reports have actually occurred. and a claim to a procedure in which all rules of the law of procedure are adhered to. It is in no way intended to disclaim the assertion that executions were carried out by the Einsatz and Sonderkommandos subordinate to the Einsatzgruppe while Naumann was Chief of Einsatzgruppe B. The defendant Naumann has not discalaimed this assertion during his interrogation as a witness. But on account of the explained violations against recognized rules of procedure the offered document does not give proof of the fact that executions were carried out to the extent stated in the Operational Situation Report, especially under the circumstances stated there. It can rather he merely considered as proven that executions took place in which the number of executed persons and the detailed circumstances have not been ascertained. Especially the numbers of executions appear much too high. This is shown by the fact that during the period covered by the report in the sphere of influence of Einsatzgruppe B, the Fuehrer order had been carried out for quite some time already under Nebe, the predecessor of Naumann as testified to by the defendants Blume and Steimle. It appears therefore as absolutely believable if Ott for instance, who in March 1941 was Commander of Sonderkommando 7b with Einsatzgruppe B, declares, that at the time he took over Sonderkommando 7b there was no further action to register any Jews. Operational Situation Report dated 21 April 1943 while in the witness stand. The soundness of the reasoning given in this respect is not to be rejected offhand.

Also Ohlendorf and Nosske have doubted the reporting. Worth mentioning in this respect is that Ohlendorf too, declared while in the witness stand, execution of Jews and Communists happened in the first part of the Campaign more often than in the year 1942. As evidence to the fact that the numbers mentioned in the Operational Situation Reports do not have an absolute value as evidence, reference may finally he made yet to the Affidavit of Fumy who is very well acquainted with the matter as he collaborated in the compilation of the Operational Situation Report, and who due to his own observations is best able to judge whether these reports are reliable. If Naumann states therefore in the witness stand, that according to its form the compilation of the Operational Situation Report dated 21 April 1942 is not at all familiar, then this appears credible? for this form originates obviously not from the report of the Einsatzgruppe B. In its rebuttal the Prosecution has offered as proff for the numbers mentioned in the Operational Situation Report dated 21 April 1942 regarding executions carried out, the documents USSR 48 and 56, Exh. No. 234 and 235.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Gawlik, do you think that this might be a good place in which to suspend for the luncheon recess?

DR. GAWLIK: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess until 1:45.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Gawlik, I want to make just a short announcement. We are informed by the Translation Section that the final summation plea in behalf of the Defendant Bluem has not yet been received there. Some word should be gotten to counsel for Blume to see to it that he immediately hands in his manuscript.

DR. GAWLIK (Attorney for the Defendant Naumann): Your Honor, as a preresentative for Dr. Aschenauer, I ask that you permit the Defendant Ohlendorf to be excused from tomorrow's session, because he is to be interrogated by Mr. Wolf.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant Ohlendorf will be excused from attendance in court tomorrow.

DR. GAWLIK: Before the recess I was discussing the report of the 21st of April, 1942. I shall continue my final plea: numbers listed in the Operational Situation Report, dated 21 April 1942, regarding executions carried out, the documents USSR 48 and 56. the documents were offered. First of all I point to the fact that the text of both documents corresponds in part word for word. The numbers mentioned also correspond exactly. Both documents are obviously parts of the same record. The contents of the documents have no connection at all with the acts of Naumann. There reference is rather made to how many dead were found in the mass-graves. The samll percentage of cases, that death was due to the gun shot wounds. The cause of death is unknown otherwise. One should not overlook the fact, that the less immediate vicinity of Smolensk in which the graves were found, was twice within two years the theatre of stubborn fighting. If one assumes that, in so far as gunshot wounds were the cause of death, these were due to executions, which is also not an established fact, then the further question arises, by whom and on whose orders these excutions took place.

I would also briefly like to mention in this respect that the victims of Katyn for instances were also mentioned in these reports, those, who according to German reports have always been designated as victims of executions carried out by Russian agencies. It has not been ascertained to this day who actually carried out these executions. Before the International Military Tribunal this question has also not been cleared despite the fact that three witnesses of the Russian Prosecution and three witnesses of the German defense have been interrogated in this respect. the mentioned documents are absolutely without value as proof of the act incriminating Naumann, I would like to mention addition that Naumann was active in Smolensk only during part of the period in which, according to the reports, the demise of the bodies found would fall. Besides, any connection between the crimes mentioned in the reports and Naumann's activity is missing. None of the persons mentioned in the reports with the exception of Naumann, was a member of the Einsatzgruppe Units. What Naumann is supposed to have done is also not mentioned in the reports. by the film offered by the Prosecution as evidence. That is why I objected at the time against the acceptance of the film as evidence and the Tribuanl sustained this objection too. Exhibits 234 and 235 have therefore no value at all as evidence in the proceedings against Naumann and are thus eliminated as evidence. mentioned by me, it has only insignificant value as evidence. Dure to statements made by Naumann it may only be considered as proven, that the Einsatzkommandos under his command carried out executions due to the Fuehrer order. No evidence has been offered in ragard to date, place, and detailed circumstances.

In evaluating this case from a criminal point of view, I took as a basis the legal principles already laid down by Military Tribunal II in the case against Milch, Naumann is, according to the principles laid down by this Tribunal, only criminally liable for the executions carried out by units of his group, if the following questions can be answered positively beyond any reasonable doubt:

1. Did the defendant Naumann take part in the executions personally?

2. Have these been carried out at his direction or order?

3. Had Naumann previous knowledge of the executions before they were carried out?

4. If this proves to be correct, did he have the power and opportunity to have them stopped?

5. If this also proves to be correct, did he fail to act and did he become thereby particeps criminis and accomplice?

As for 1: nor did he personally take part in any executions. The Prosecution has neither maintained this, nor offered any proof to this effect. It has especially not offered any proof to the effect that Naumann killed the persons mentioned in Document NO 3276, Exh. 66 (Volume II B, Page 66). It is shown by the Operational Situation Report that these persons were executed by the Einsatz and Sonderkommandos. This becomes evident also from the statements made by Naumann on the witness stand (Protocol Page 820 and 834 German, Page 814 and 128 English) according to which the Einsatzgruppe itself, i.e. the Staff, did not carry out any executions. stand, at least for the time when Naumann was Chief of the Einsatzgruppe (Protocol Page 4015 German Page 3950 English).

As for 2: orders to put these executions into effect.

In particular, Naumann did not pass on the (Fuehrer (rder) to the units under his command. As has been shown already, the executions were not carried out by the Einsatzgruppe itself, i.e. by the Group Staff, during the time when Naumann was Chief of the Einsatzgruppe. If, therefore, Naumann had given them to the Sonder-and Einsatz-Kommandos. But even to them Naumann did not give any execution orders, nor did he pass on to them the Fuehrer Order.

Of course, the Prosecution concludes from Naumann's position as Chief of the Einsatzgruppe that Naumann must have given such orders. Hosever, they were unable to prove this. Naumann, when in the witness box being directly examined and cross-examined, again and again asserted that he had given no such orders. (Transcript pages 834/35, 879, 880, 883, 887, 901 of the German verson; pages 828/29, 869, 871, 875, 889 of the English version.) The additionally adduced evidence only corroborated these statements of Naumann. of the ever having received from Naumann an order for execution or to the effect that the Fuehrer Order had been conveyed to him by Naumann. In particular was this affirmed by the co-defendants Steimel, Ott, and Klingelhoefer who held responsible positions in the Einsatz-and Sonder-Kommandos under the Command of the Einsatzgruppe B. If Naumann had given orders for execution or had passed on the Fuehrer Order these witnesses would have had to know it by all means, in particular Ott, who assumed his duties in Russia after Naumann was there. None of these witnesses, however, has confirmed this. Steimle, for instance, gave evidence that, indeed, he had discussed the Fuehrer Order with Naumann, but that Naumann had never given him any orders. In the cross-examination, too, Steimle stood by these his statements inspite of the fact that the Prosecution tried with all means at their disposal to shake the witness and extract from him a statement according to which Naumann was the one who gave or transmitted to him the Execution Order (Transcript pages 2073-2075, 2080-2085 of the German version, pages 2027-2029, 2034-2039 of the English version). Ott, too, repeatedly declared on the witness stand under direct and cross examination that he had never received from Naumann an order for execution, also he never had received from him the order that the Sender-Kommando 7 B under his command was to take stricter measures.

Ott particularly declared having heard only thrigh his predicessor Rausch about the existence of this order which Naumann had not even mentioned to him when introducing him to his duties (Transcript pages 3776-3778, 3828-3830, 3762/63, 3834/35 of the German version, pages 3715-17, 3766-3768, 3701/02,3370/71 of the English version.) These statements of Ott appear to us credible above all for the particular reason that they tally with the statements he made when he was subject to interrogation by Wartenberg. At that particular time Naumann had not yet been arrested and it was generally believed that Naumann was dead (Transcript page 3772 German, page 3711 English version.) he never had received any execution orders from Naumann (Transcript p. 3947 German, page 3884 English.) as they come from co-defendants who cannot count on being exonerated by such declarations. To doubt the credibility of those statements there is all the less cause for the simple reason that the Fuehrer Order was known to the Einsatz- and Sonder-Kommandos already a long time before Naumann took up duties in Russia. The evidence of the case in Chief shows beyond a doubt that the Fuehrer Order was issued not only to the Chiefs of the Einsatzgruppen, but also to the Leaders of the Einsatz- and Sonder-Kommandos already before the beginning of the Russian campaign and had since then existed continuously within the units of the Einsatzgruppen. (Transcript Naumann pages 819,823, 867, 883, 901, 906 German version, pages 813, 815/16,856 871, 889, 893 English version; Ohlendorf p. 524, 533; Blume p. 1811-12; Ott p.

3844 German, p. 3762 English; Jost p. 1273, 1198). Naumann was also advised of the existence of this order within the units under his command when he took up his duties in Russia. (Transcript p. 823, 864-65, German; 815/16, k54 English.) There was no occasion whatever for Naumann himself, therefore, to issue orders for execution, nor to transmit the Fuehrer Order again to the units under his command. dated 24 April 1947 (Dec. B. II B, p. 57, Doc. No. 2993, Exh. 67) that Naumann, himself, issued orders for executions. However, in this affidavit Ott only stated that Naumann gave the order to deposit the valuables, taken from the victims, with the Einsatzgruppe. Naumann --- 24 April 1947 by declaring that this order did not originate with Naumann, but with his predecessor Nebe (Transcript p. 3802, 3803 German, p. 3740/41 English.) Moreover, it is incomprehensible how one can deduce from such an order, had it been given, that this constitutes an order to effect executions. Quite to the contrary, this statement would clearly elucidate that the issue of this order pre-supposes that the Fuehrer Order was already in existence. This statement permits therefore only the deduction that Naumann's assertions as to the existence of the Fuehrer Order before his taking over of office are correct; for, if the existence of the Fuehrer Order before his taking over of office are correct; for, if the existence of the exeuction orders had not been assumed to be known by the subordinated units, the order in the question would have been altogether senseless. manner of execution. (Transcript p. 881 German, 870 English. In particular, he did not order the carrying out of executions by means of gas vans. The evidence obtained does not indicate that gas vans were used by Einsatzgruppe B for the purpose of executions. Naumann denied it, in the witness box, as well as at the time he gave his affidavit before the beginning of the trail (Doc.

Book III B, p. 1, Doc. No. 4150, Exh. 112). To be sure, he admitted the temporary presence of such vans in the territory of his Group. His statement that he had never requisitioned these vans, but that they were, in June 1942, put at his disposal by the Reich Main Security Office without his having anything to do with it, could not be refuted in any way. No witness testified, and no document showed that these gas vans were used for the intended purpose by units of the Einsatzgruppe B. Rather were these gas vans, as shown by the evidence, surrendered to other units after relatively short time (Transcript p. 825/26, 877/78 German, 818/19, 866 English.) Reports. If the Einsatzgruppe B had used gas vans reports would exist about it which the Prosecution would have introduced. for the vans because at the time of their arrival executions were hardly possible any more (Transcript p.877 German, p. 865, English.). This being the case, one cannot hold Naumann criminally responsible for the temporary presence of the vans in the territory of the Einsatzgruppe B. confronted the Defendant Naumann during cross-examination with Document NO 5444, Exh. 175. This deals with an incident on the estate of Wessokoje. This occurrence, however, is not a Count of the charge, and Naumann, therefore, could not be convicted of it, even if it were substantiated by proof. give any order to kill the 3 persons named in this document. (Transcript p. 883/884, 886/88 German, p. 872/73; 875/76 English.) proven guilty, because this document biolates, above all, several well founded rules of evidence which, under the principles of American procedural law, prejudice the admission of this document as evidence.

For the reasons I have stated above this violation of the rules governing the taking of evidence will have to be taken into consideration when examining the value of that evidence.

1.) The document is not complete. Only part of document has been submitted. But the documents must be submitted complete. Wharton Evidence in Criminal Cases, p. 666:)

2.) The authenticity of a document must be proved by a witness who is to be confronted with the defendant, and sworn in about where the document has been found, the Prosecution has not furnished that proof (Wharton, ibid, page 391)

3.) The very best means of evidence must be presented. In consequence, hearsay evidence is precluded. The document shows that Scharfuehrer Goebel got his information from Hauptsturmfuehrer Sachnaut. Thus, his statements are based upon information received by third persons, so that this is hearsay evidence.

4.) A person accused can only be convicted on the basis of a statement made under oath. (Whalton, ibid., p. 682.) To convict Naumann on the basis of this document would, therefore, be in contradiction to this main principle of evidnce.

Therefore, Naumann's assertion that he never gave an order for the killing of those people, may not be regarded as being refuted. In any case, there are well-founded doubts about the correctness of the facts stated in the document. These doubts have to be evaluated in favor of the defendant, according to the general principles governing the law of criminal procedure. such an order, because the persons allegedly killed were members of a German organization for the so-called operation "Zeppelin". This was an operation the members of which were to be employed by Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office together with the German Wehrmacht behind the Russian front.

Thus, Naumann had no power of command, no disciplinary power over the members of that operation. This is clearly shown also by the documents submitted by the Prosecution themselves. nor forwarded such orders to the units under his command, what matters is only the answer to the following questions: Did Naumann, before the executions were carried out, have any information about these measures? Did he have the power and the opportunity to prevent or to stop them? Did he fail to take action? presupposition for the basis of a penal responsibility on the part of Naumann.

As for question 3: to the carrying out of the individual executions, (Rec. p. 826, 834, German, p. 819, page 828 English.) Generally, it is true, Naumann knew, as he admits himself, that executions had been carried out by units of his Kommandos. Yet, he acquired this knowledge in all cases only through the reports of the Einsatz- and Sonderkommandos about the executions which had already been carried out. But he had no information beforehand about the individual executions. In this connection it must be taken into consideration that the Einsatz- and Sonderkommandos were to a large extent independent. (Rec. OHLENDORF, p. 694 /95, OTT p. 3804/05, NAUMANN 824, 869, 822, German, 818, 858, 815 English.) This independence with that the Kommando chiefs had received, previous to the Russian campaign, the Fuehrer order, and, to be precise, in the same way as the Einsatzgruppen Chiefs themselves. The meaning of this issuing the order to the Leaders of the Einsatzkommandos can only have been to authorize them to take action without special orders by the Einsatzgruppen chiefs. If this had not been so, the order would not have been given to the Kommandofuehrers, but it would rather have had to be given in each case first to the Einsatzgruppen Chiefs.

Since a special the individual execution was not necessary, no previous notification was, in consequence, necessary. Such, a procedure would, incidentally, have probably been much too cumbersome and impossible, considering the bad communications and transport conditions in the vast Russian area, the comparatively large territories of the individual Kommando areas, and the samll strength of personnel in the individual Kommandos. That the Einsatz- and Sonderkommandos were independent to a large extent, resulted, in particular from their proper task, namely, to secure the rear areas of the Army and to fight bands and partisans which might appear. (Rec. Naumann, p. 824, 835, 836 German, p. 816, 829, 830 Engl.) From this task there resulted the necessity of taking immediat action which was not allowed to suffer any delay by waiting for instructions from the Einsatzgruppen Chief.

to be carried out by units under his command on account of the order. But this general knowledge will hardly be deemed sufficient to give an affirmative answer to question 3,) But even if an affirmative answer were to be given to this question, the prerequisites would, in any event, be lacking for number 4 and 5.

A conviction would only be justified if the questions 3.), 4.) and 5.) were to be given affirmative answers, that is, all of them.

As to question 4: the execution of the orders issued by HITLER and forwarded by HIMMLER and HENDRICH, which had been given to the Einsatz-and Sonderkommandos before NAUMANN took over his position, and thus already existed, when he took over. execution of these orders? Could he be expected to issue instructions to the units under his command not to execute the Fuehrer order? This would have been impossible. But would he thereby really have prevented the execution of the order? Supposing that the units under his command had complied with NAUMANN's instructions, which is very doubtful, since NAUMANN could not cancel an order given by the Fuehrer, what would have happened? The only consequence would have been that NAUMANN would at once have been removed from his post and proceedings started against him for disobedience. But would he thereby have prevented the executions for the future? Certainly not. He would no doubt have been replaced by a successor, who would have shown the obedience required. Thus, NAUMANN would have achieved as little as if by feigning illness or other reasons he had succeeded in being relieved from his position. The Fuehrer order would have remained in existence and would have been carried out, even if NAUMANN had no longer been Chief of the Einsatzgruppe. Naumann's conduct would not have been able to change that. It would have been impossible to NAUMANN to prevent the execution of the Fuehrer order, and this is what only matters in this connection.

Thus NAUMANN cannot have had the power and the opportunity to prevent the execution of the Fuehrer order. executions carried out by the Einsatz and Sonderkommandos, he would surely have used then. In particular, he would never have given such orders himself, for the execution of these orders was not consistent with the spiritual attitude of NAUMANN (Rec. p. 866, German, 855/56, English.)

Besides, he never concealed this attitude of his in conversations with the Leaders of Einsatz-and Sonderkommandos. This too has been clearly shown by the evidence. The witnesses OTT and STEIMLE, for instance, have testified that in conversations he had with them, Naumann expressed a mental repudiation (Rec, Steinle, p. 2073/75 2082, German, 2028-2030, 2036, English, Ott, p. 3779, 3832, German, p. 3717, 3770, English.) Still, on these occasions Naumann always remarked that he saw no way of evading the Fuehrer order.

As to question 5: opportunity to prevent the execution of the Fuehrer order or to stop it, there is no basis for a criminal responsibility on the part of NAUMANN. But even if this question were to be answered in the affirmative, a criminal responsibility on the part of NAUMANN would be non-existent, because to have omitted to prevent such a thing does not constitute quilt. It is true, that even an omission can constitute a punishable offense. This is a general principle, both in the German as well as in the American Jurisprudence and practice of law. But, according to those principles the omission can only constitute a punishable offense, when a legal obligation existed to take action. In this connection I refer to Wharton's opinion in his book "Criminal Law" of 1932.

In vol. I, p. 222, Wharton explained that an omission must be based on a violation of duties, in order to be a punishable offense. Omissions are, in his opinion, no basis for a criminal proceeding, unless they constitute a failure in the execution of an obligation which had specially been imposed on the accused. This obligation to act must, as is also generally recognized, be founded upon the law. As to the correctness of this opinion, I refer likewise to the fundamental explanations of Wharton in the book quoted above, where on page 226 he explains that a simple negligence to give assistance is no punishable offense, unless it happened in the course of acting against an obligation specially assumed or imposed. On page 255 of the aforementioned book he amplified that idea by declaring that the failure to give assistance could constitute a punishable offense only if and when this giving of assistance was a legal obligation. Such an obligation, however, did not exist on the part of Naumann. Naumann had such an obligation neither by law nor by agreement, On the contrary, the obligation that had been imposed upon him, was not to prevent the execution of the orders issued by Hitler. In so far his conduct cannot be called guilty. general principles of humanity, Naumann would have been unable to act because he was in a state of emergency which made it impossible to carry out the obligations. Such a condition of constraint, however, rules out any guilt, This is in accordance with the generally recognized principles of jurisprudence. May I, in this connection refer again to the conclusive explanations of Wharton in the aore-mentioned book I), where the author explains that the defense may oppose the Prosecution with the contention that the crime has been committed under constraint and force, out of fear of immediate death. Wharton assumes rightly that in such cases, nobody may be found guilty of a crime unless he had the intent and will to commit it.

is presupposed in these explanations. As has been said above, he would only have been able to prevent the executions for a short time through an order which he would have had to give in opposition to the existing order of Hitler, the then chief of state. Apart from the fact that that measure, as I have stated above, would not have had the slightest effect, it would have had the consequence that Naumann would have been prosecuted for serious insubordination. (Rec. Naumann, p. 820 German, p. 813, English) There can be no doubt about the result of such criminal proceedings in view of the severe penalties the SS- and Police Courts used to inflict. Not only Naumann, but practically all the defendants have testified on the witness stand that the death penalty would have been the inexorable penalty for that insubordination. (Rec. Ohlendorf, p. 750, Braune p. 3103/04, 3098, Naumann, p. 820 German, p. 813 Engl.) to refuse the execution of the orders. (Rec. Ohlendorf, p. 563-65, Braune p. 3110, Sandberger, 2206, Nosske, p. 3480, Klingelhoefer, p. 3959, Steimle, p. 2088/2203.) able to refuse execution of the Fuehrer order, this does not refute the statements made by the afore-mentioned persons; for what matters in each case are the particular circumstances of the individual case. such a state of emergency that no possibility was left to him to act in a way different from what he actually has done. through of the Fuehrer Order and that he himself did not give orders for executions. proven, a punishment because of this would be impossible since Naumann's behaviour would be due to an order issued by Hitler.

That this order did exist and that it existed during the whole period in which Naumann was Chief of the Einsatzgruppe B, cannot be doubted according to the results of the evidence presented. As regards this I particularly refer to the testimony of Ohlendorf (Records pages 533, 524) Blume (Records p. 1811), Nosske (p. 3503-05), who gave a detailed description of the way in which the Fuehrer Order was given to the commanders of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos in Pretsch. degree, the plea of acting on higher orders precludes punishment, it is first of all of decisive importance according to which law this objection is to be judged. Tribunal IV declared that it wasnot a tribunal of the USA and therefore did not have to apply American principles, but that it was an international tribunal and that therefore the facts were to be judged according to International Law. (Page 3 of the decision of 22 December 1947). I must suppose that this principle applies generally to the Military Tribunals here and that therefore in this trial the plea of acting on superior orders is to be judged according to the International Law in force at the time of the action. thusfar admissible in International Law. This result cannot be altered either by the London Charter or the Control Council Law No. 10. Charter and Control Council Law No. 10 therefore can only be applied inasmuch as they coincided with the hitherto recognized rules of International Law. No new International Law could, however, be created by the Charter and the Control Council Law No. 10 since individual states cannot establish International Law, but only the community of nations can do so. This is a generally recognized principle of International Law which took root in practice as well as in theory. For the correctness of this conception I particularly mention the statements of the Professor for International Law, Norman J. Padelford, who, in an article published in April 1938, commented upon the Washington Agreement of 1922 and thereby came to the conclusion that, in spite of the consensus of opinion of the five powers present at the Conference, these were not entitled to establish new rules of International Law.

1) International Law can only be created:

1. by international agreement and 2. by a conception of law which is generally recognized by all International Law.

This conception is clearly expressed in a decision quoted by Gobbett according to which, in order to prove the existence of a rule of International Law, it must be set forth that this has either found the express sanction by international agreement or that it must have grown to be a part of international Law by the frequent practical recognition of States, in their dealings with each other.2 2) Cobbett, Leading Cases on International Law, volume I, page 5: community of nations, according to which a plea of superior orders is impossible. Such an agreement was not signed thus far. Conference to come to an international agreement to the effect that the plea of superior orders shall be impossible in International Law. However, this agreement did not come about. The Washington Agreement was not ratified. Especially France declined to ratify this Agreement just because of the provision in it that the plea of superior orders should not be admissible. With regard to this I refer to an article by the French teacher of International Law, Raoul Genet, of 1938, according to which France had objected at that time that, for example, the commanders of submarines could not be held personally responsible for orders which they had received from their hierarchic superiors.1 orders as laid down in the Washington Agreement of 6 February 1922 was rejected. This is shown by the fact that commanders of German submarines of the first World War were cordially welcomed by their English comrades,whereby they were assured that they would not be held responsible for the execution of orders received from their Admiralty.2 256. 1) Raoul Genet, Directeur de la Revue internationale francaise du droit, "The charge of piracy in the Spanish civil war", page 256:

"It was said that in order to prove an alleged rule of international law it must be shown "either to have received the express sanction of international agreement", or "it must have grown to a part of in their dealings with each other".(i)." 1) Norman J. Padelford, Prof.

ception of law by the States according to which the plea of superior orders would not be admissible. At all events, such a conception of law did not find its expression in the actions of the States. This can be seen a) from the declarations and decisions of international congresses, b) from the field manuals of the Armies and the criminal codes of the c) from the scholarly opinions of generally recognized teachers of In As for a: a) During the peace conference in 1919 a commission occupied itself with the problem whether or not a plea of superior orders frees from responsibility, and it laid down its opinion in a report.

1) This commission did not declare the plea of superior orders to be inadmissible, but left it to the judgment of the court whether or not the plea of superior orders frees the defendant from his responsibility. In this report it is expressly said that the court has to decide on the question whether a plea of superior orders is sufficient to acquit a person charged with responsibility. This regulation was the result of the following deliberations, which are shown in the forementioned book by Garner. son who acted in compliance with an order. For, if he had refused to comply with the order, the subordinate would probably have been shot. In such cases, therefore, justice requires the punishment of the person who is responsible for the order and not that of the one who executed the order. If the commission nevertheless declined to use this principle, which 1) Published in 46 Clunet (1919) pages 131 ff, excerpted from German, International Law in the World War (1920), volume II, page 490: "It will be for the court to decide whether a plea of superior orders is sufficient to acquit the person charged with responsibility."

could have arisen from this. It was feared that then every subordinate who committed a punishable action would plead to have acted on superior orders, and, since according to the general rules of the code of criminal procedure the State has to bear the onus probandi, it would then be impossible to punish subordinates for the perpetration of punishable actions. It was only for that reason that the plea of superior orders was not generally considered as admissible, but it was left to the court to decide whether the plea of superior orders is to be considered as admissible. From this results: The plea of superior orders is to be declared as admissible if the existence of such an order is incontestably to be considered as proven. ders would be admissible according to this report of the commission, since it is without doubt established that the defendants acted in compliance with an order issued by Hitler. As for b: b): The British military code, issued as early as 1715, already provided that every soldier had to obey every order given by his superiors regardless of whether the order was in accordance with the law or in violation of the law. To this effect I refer to the statements of Professor Lauterpacht in the essay in the British Year-Book for International Law issued in 1944.1) In the following period this conception became a principle in the armies of all nations. Moreover, since 1914 the field regulations of the armies of most nations have accepted this principle that the plea of acting on higher orders was admissible to be true, for the reason, that the admission of the plea of acting on higher orders had already become a common law. 2) 1) Lauterpacht, The Law of Nations in the Punishment of War Crimes-in the British Year Book of International Law, 1944, page 71: "The Military Code of 1715 provided that any officer or soldier who should refuse to obey the military orders of his superior officer" shall be liable to capital punishment. The code contains no qualifications as to the lawfulness of the command." 2) George Manner, Instructor in Political Science, University of Illinois, in the American Journal of International Law, No. 3, July 1943, page 417: "Since 1914, at least, the maxim has been incorporated in the war manuals of the powers as a rule of the customary laws of war."

the Rules of Land Warfare have explicitly declared the plea of acting on higher orders as admissible. Up till April 1944 the provision was contained in par. 443, Chapter XIV of the British Manual that soldiers cannot be considered war criminals if, by acts they were ordered to carry out by their governments or their superiors, they had violated recognized laws of war. This provision explicitly precluded a punishment by the enemy. To this effect I refer to the statements in Law Reports of Trials of War Criminals, Volume I, page 18, 1947, where, with reference to the fundamental statements made by Oppenheim in his book International Law (volume II, page 454, 5th edition), it is furthermore established that in such a case the enemy can only call to account the officials or commanders for the issue of such orders.1) Land Warfare corresponded with the provision of par. 4432) of the British manual. According to this provision, members of the American armed forces must not be punished if they had committed a punishable act on orders or even with the approval of their government or commanders. The commanders themselves rather could only be called to account. made between a lawful and an unlawful order and that the subordinate person did not even have the right and much less so the obligation to examine the lawfulness and legality of an order. L) Law Reports of Trials of War Criminals, Vol. I, 1947, S. 18: "Until April, 1944, Chapter XIV of the British Manual of Military Law contained the much discussed statement (Par. 443) that "members of the armed forces who commit such violations of the recognized rules of warfare as are ordered by their Government, or by their commander, are not war criminals and cannot therefore be punished by the enemy. He may punish the officials or commanders responsible for such orders if they fall into his hands, but otherwise he may only resort to other means of obtaining redress.."This statement was based on the 5th edition of Oppenheim's International Law, Vol II, page 454." 2) "Individuals of the armed forces will not be punished for these offenses in case they are committed under the order or sanction of their government or commanders. The commanders ordering the commission of such acts, or under whose authority they are committed by their troops, may be punished by the belligerent into whose hands they may fall."

The provision contained in par. 483 of the British Manual (British Manual of Military Law) was rescinded on 15 April 1944. Since that time the plea of acting on higher orders is no longer admissible. ed on 15 November 1944 through the Change No. 1 of the Rules of Land Warfare. idently made in view of the impending end of the war and the contemplated trials of war criminals.

DR. GAWLIK: Your Honors, after I wrote these lines and after I handed in my final plea I received the book by Sheldon Glueck, "War Criminals, their Prosecution and Punishment", 1944 and I found this opinion confirmed in the book. My colleague Aschenauer has already commented in detail on this book. Therefore, I shall not go into any detail but I call the attention of the Tribunal to several sentences from this book which I shall ask the interpreter to read.

INTERPRETER: From page 141 of Sheldon Glueck's book. "The provisions in the American rules quoted above seemingly protects them against punishment not only in the case of orders of their Government (and perhaps acts of State) but also as in doing the prohibited act, they obeyed the order of a military superior, even though they knew their acts to be contrary to the laws and customs of legitimate warfare."

DR. GAWLIK: Even Glueck who, as the book shows, is not at all proGerman and who attempts to establish a procedure for the trial of war criminals, cannot get over the exclusion of the plea of superior orders. If Neumann in 1943 or 1944 would have been put before an American Military Tribunal for the charges made against him now he could not, on the basis of this regulation 347, in the rules of land warfare, have been punished according to this rule. I emphasize expressly that this regulation also applies to enemy nationals. Through the change in this regulation this plea of acting on superior orders, could only be amended to refer to those actions committed after 15 November 1944 but not to those committed before that.

significance as one of the laws promulgated by the Nazi on the occasion of the burning of the Reichstag, namely the retroactive admissibility of the death penalty for arson. At that time the world raised a hullaballoo, they spoke of a violation of the law, they spoke of the beginning of the dissolution of the legal state and one could say that those people were right. I have too great a confidence in this Tribunal and, therefore, I do not believe that they will build up their judgment on such an insecure position.

I shall continue in the final plea: tary Penal Code and author of the book Military Law and Precedents, admits the plea of acting on higher orders and expresses the opinion that an order precludes the punishment.1) As a reason for this opinion, held by him, he asserts that obedience was the fundament of every army and that the subordinated person was therefore not under the obligation to decide by himself about the question whether an order given to him was lawful or unlawful. Such a conduct by the subordinated persons would, according to Winthrop's point of view, mean insubordination and would lead to undermining of military discipline.2) In this connection, Winthrop also refers to a decision by the Supreme Court which likewise comes to the same result. It is said in this decision that it would mean the end of every discipline if, for instance, sailors aboard a warship on the high seas would. on the basis of their personal sense of justice, have the 1) Winthrop, page 296: "That the act charged as an offence was done in obedience to the order - verbal or written - of a military superior, is, in general, a good defense at military law." 2) Winthrop, page 296: "But for the inferior to assume to determine the question of the lawfulness of an order given him by a superior, would in itself, as a general rule, amount to insubordination, and such an assumption carried into practice would subvert military discipline." possibility to shake off the power of command of their commander by reasoning that they considered the execution of the order an unlawful act.1) Law that the obligation for obedience on the part of the soldier, and such was Naumann during his time of duty in Russia, is not preceded by the obligation to examine whether the order is in violation of any law, especially the laws of war. especially the existing conditions in Germany, able to the Tribunal if defendants in this trial, interrogated as witnesses in their own defense, have again and again referred to the fact that it was their duty to carry out the order and that they had no authority to decide about the legality of the order. ed as the supreme duty of the citizen. The army and the civil servants were the pillars of the German state. It was the supreme duty of both to obey and unconditionally comply with the orders given by superior authorities. This is a fact which is based on the historical conditions of Germany, especially on the historical development of the past 150 years, a development which is completely different from that of the United States. was emphatically advocated especially in the National Socialist Fuehrer state. The individual citizen was not entitled to voice his own opinion. Neither was he permitted to express any criticism on measures taken by the state administration. 1) Supreme Court in leading case in the Navy, Dinsman von Wilkes, 7 Howard, 403, quoted by Winthrop, page 296: "There would be an and of all discipline if the seaman and marines on board a ship of war on a distant service were permitted to act upon their own opinion of their rights, and to throw off the authority of the commander whenever they supposed it to be unlawfully exercised."

those in a free democracy. To be true, it is correct that the provisions of the British Manual and the similar provision in the Rules of Land Warfare of the United States, with respect to the plea of acting on higher orders, have undergone a change in as far as the plea of acting on higher orders was no longer admitted to the extent as this was the case in the past. However, during the period in which Naumann was chief of the Einsatzgruppe B, namely from the end of November 1941 till March 1943, the old provisions of the aforementioned field regulations were still fully valid. of acting on higher orders, is not refuted either by Par. 47 of the German Military Penal Code which in this connection has been repeatedly mentioned in this court-room.

The provision of Par. 47 of the Military Penal Code cannot be applied if only for the reason that it is not applicable to orders given by the chief executive of the state. This interpretation results in particular from the meaning of this provision. The provision of Par. 47 of the Military Penal Code always presupposes the possibility to refuse obedience must have the possibility to complain to the superior officer of the person who had given the order so that he might find justice there. Only in this case can he make use of the provision of Par. 47 of the Military penal Code. If the soldier does not have this possibility, then his refusal to obey an order entails a severe punishment without examining the lawfulness of the order, and the unlawful act, as ordered, cannot be prevented. The provision of Par. 47 of the Military Penal Code therefore applies, for instance, to the common soldier who refuses to carry out an unlawful order given to him by his lieutenant, because he then has the possibility to complain to the superior officer of the lieutenant. Moreover, an unlawful order given by a general can be rejected since in this case the possibility is given that he who received the order can turn to the general's superior. This possibility, however, does not exist if any orders, which henceforth are found to be unlawful, have been decreed by the chief executive of the state. And this possibility by no means exists if the orders are issued by a dictator who combines in his hand all instruments of power of the state, as this was the case with Hitler, a dictator who, by use of all means at his disposal, would have actually executed the orders he decreed. What action should the defendants take against the orders given to them by Hitler? How could they have prevented the execution of these orders? Whom could they approach in order to find justice in respect to the unlawful orders given by Hitler? Under the present circumstances it is simple to assert that the defendants ought not to have carried out the order.

No answer, however, can be given to the question what action they ought to have taken, in the situation in which they were at that time, to prevent the execution of the order. Even according to the prevailing German law itself unlawful orders are effective.1* Also according to the French penal code the soldier is obligated to obey an order of the legitimate authorities, regardless of whether the order is lawful or not. The soldier solely has a right to complain after the execution of the order. In this connection I refer to the statement by Cobbett.2* Moreover Garner, who in his statements refers, among others, to the view of Professor Nast of the Nancy University and to the example mentioned by the latter, has come to the same result.3* 1* So binding, manual of the penal code (1885), page 804, furthermore Eberh.

Professor NAST of the University of Nancy has expressed courts.

1" Professor Nast has added further explanations to this question.

In this he comes to the conclusion that the sedes materiae of French law is Article 64 of the Penal Code, according to which an act committed under duress does not constitute a crome. Among these acts Prof. Nast also includes cases in which a soldier has to carry out orders. In this connection Nast also mentions the Belgian and Dutch Criminal Codes, which contain the same provisions. In this connection he refers particularly to Article 43 of the Dutch Criminal Code, according to which a defendant is expressly exonerated by orders from superior authorities.1) As for Authors' Hypotheses: The hypotheses adopted in legal literature are not sources of international law. This is generally recognized in international law. I particularly call attention to the explanations of Wharton, who refers to statements by Chief Justice Cockburn. There it is said that authors in the field of international law, no matter how valuable their efforts may always be with respect to the interpretation and definition of fundamental legal provisions, cannot make any laws, because laws, in order to be binding, require the agreement of the nations, which can take place by treaty or through suitable statements by the respective governments, or even through established tradition.2) A conviction, therefore, cannot be based on the fact that individual scholars of international law adopt the viewpoint that the appeal to a superior order is inadmissible. 1) Prof. Nast, Revue Generale de Droit International Public, 26 (1919, p. 123:

"The crucial sedes materiae in French law appears to be under duress (which apparently includes the case of a soldier bound to obey orders) is neither a crime nor a misdemeanor.

Art. 327 excludes liability in case of acts "ordonnes par la loi et commandes par l'authorite."

So does Article 190, Articles 70 and 71 of the the French Penal Code.

Article 43 of the Dutch Criminal Code re cognizes generally the defense of superior orders, while Art.

40 lays down the general exception of duress". 2) Wharton, Elements of International Law:

p. 23: "Writers on international law", says Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, "however, valuable their labors cannot make the law.

To be binding, the law must have received the assent of the nations who are to be bound by it.

This assent may be or may be implied from established usage". (e). Moreover, the question of the admissibility of the appeal to the superior order is very much contested in legal literature.

It is in no case rejected by the majority of authors. The appeal to a superior order is first declared admissible, as already mentioned, by Winthrop, who recognizes as a defense the fact that the incriminating act was committed in pursuance to an order by a superior.1) Likewise Garner, the well-known professor of international law at the University of Illinois, declares that it would be unjust to deny the right of a person under military orders to appeal to a superior order. Garner particularly emphasizes that it is not the task of a military subordinate to examine the lawfulness and legality of a military command.2) He is of the opinion that justice requires that that person be punished first of all who bears the responsibility for the order and not that person who acts under duress.3) Professor George Manner of the University of Illinois is also of the same opinion.4) Likewise Oppenheim, the 1) Winthrop, Military Law and Precedents, p. 296: "That the act fense at military law."

2) Garner, Vol. 11, p. 484: "He cannot discuss or question the commands that are given him; he is not the judge of their legality or il legality; and if he were, his ignorance of the laws of war would in many cases make him an incompetent judge."

the well-known British professor of international law, has adopted the view of his work "International Law" that the appeal to the superior order is admissible. In this work he declares that violations of the laws of war are only crimes if they have been committed without the order of the belligerent government. He is of the opinion that members of the Armed Forces who commit violations of law at the command of their government are not war criminals and therefore cannot be punished by the enemy. In such cases he grants the enemy only the right to resort to

1) reprisals. Lauterpacht, who brought out Oppenheim's work in 1940, after the latter's death, was the first to abandon this opinion. This view of Professor Lauterpacht, however, has found no concurrence elsewhere in legal literature. It has been particularly attacked by Professor Kelson in his work "Peace through Law", page 98, and described as more than questionable. From these statements it appears that accepted international law is solely and alone decisive in deciding the question whether the appeal to a superior order is admissible in this trial and that according to international law the appeal to the superior order is a reason for justification and exoneration from guilt. In this connection the mental attitude which the subordinate had toward the order would in the first place be irrelevant. This irrelevancy follows solely from the circumstance that the subordinate receives the order without any reasons being given for it and that therefore he usually judges the order from an entirely different point of view than this superior. His assenting mental attitude, therefore, could not signify 1) Oppenheim, International Law, Par. 253: "Violation of rules regarding warfare", writes this eminent jurist, "are crimes only when committed criminals and cannot be punished by the enemy; the latter may, how ever, resort to reprisals". any assent to the reasons for the act.

Therefore, in judging the action the decisive point is not the mental attitude of the person who executes the order any more than the question of whether he executes the order willingly or unwillingly on the contrary, the decisive point would be whether the order of the superior has been proved to exist. Naumann inwardly disapproved of the Fuehrer Order. In accordance with this he conducted himself in a passive way with respect to the order. If he had not done this his superior Kaltenbrunner would not have brought the charge of deficient activity against him, as his fellow defendant Ott has testified on the witness stand. (Transcript p. 3849-50, 3828-3830 German, p. 3787-88, 3766 English) If any circumstance can be of importance for the question whether the appeal to the Fuehrer Order is admissible in the present case it can only be the answer to the question whether Naumann would have committed the acts charged against him if the Fuehrer Order had not existed. However, there can be no doubt that the executions in the area of Einsatzgruppe B during Naumann's time would never have been carried out if they had not been ordered by supreme headquarters. I shall argue this point in detail in another connection. However, if in opposition to the conclusion of my legal arguments the Tribunal should base its decision on the provisions of Control Council Law No. 10, then the clause in mitigation of punishment of Art. 4 b of the Control Council Law is applicable to Naumann, for the condition required by this clause that the perpetrator must have acted under orders is fulfilled. The further conditions under which the clause in mitigation of punishment is to be applicable are, to be sure, not contained in the law. Therefore, it can only depend on the more immediate circumstances, especially on the perpetrator's attitude to the act which he has been ordered to do.

It can, therefore, only depend on whether Naumann obeyed the order only with reluctance or made the act his own through his concurrence. Naumann did not approve of the Fuehrer Order. As the testimony has shown, he definitely disapproved of the Fuehrer Order. Both in his direct examination and in his cross-examination he repeatedly declared with certainty that the execution of the order gave rise to serious conflicts between duty and conscience in his mind. (Transcript p. 881, 913 German, p. 870, 899 English). Naumann has declared again and again that he had considerable misgivings about this order and a mental aversion to it (Transcript p. 911 German, p. 897 English). He has asserted that he was gravely uneasy about the order because it seemed frightfully harsh to him, and that the order occasioned considerable worry and remorse in his mind (Transcript p. 866 , 898, 912 German, p. 855/56, 886, 898 English). He has expressly stated that he did not agree with the order because the killing of defenseless persons went against his feelings (Transcript p. 866, 911, 912 German, 855/56, 897, 899 English). These statements give an accurate reflection of Naumann's real attitude to the Fuehrer Order. There is no occasion to doubt the truth of these statements, all the more so as further testimony has shown that even during his service Naumann expressed these misgivings and this aversion to the order before the Kommando leaders under him. Concerning this I refer particularly to the statements of his fellow defendants Steimle and Ott on the witness stand, both of whom served under Naumann in Russia and reported that Naumann made no secret before them of his disapproval of the order. Steimle has repeatedly stated that Naumann expressed his misgivings to him and assured him that he had passed sleepless nights because of the order (Transcript p. 2073-74, 2082 German p. 2027-2029, 2036 English). Naumann also declared to Ott at the time that he was continuously very seriously worried about the order and mentally disapproved it (Transcript p. 3779, 3832 German, p. 3718, 3770 English). These accounts give an accurate reflection of Naumann's character and nature, that conflict between duty and conscience which is best described by the Dutch citizen, Mrs.

von der Schalk, as enemy of National Socialism, in her affidavit with the words: "I sometimes saw the conflict of conscience which he tried to master when having to choose between loyalty to his ideals and that which I would call 'international decency'." (Naumann Doc. No. 6, vol. 1, p. 5). Naumann was in no way a man who would have accepted the Fuehrer Order and brutally carried it out. Naumann was an enthusiastic soldier and is also described as such by Bach-Zelewski in the latter's affidavit. (Naumann Doc. No. 5, Exh. 4, vol. 1, p. 3). He earned his decorations in active fighting and in battles against the partisans. It was not in keeping with his views to have to tolerate the shooting of defenseless persons. The Prosecution, to be sure, has alleged the contrary and in support of this has referred to a few of Naumann's answers on the witness stand (Transcript p. 911, 913, 914 German, p. 897/896, 899, 900 English) which, taken completely out of context, must understandably give an entirely false picture of Naumann's attitude to the order. In particular, Naumann's last answer on the witness stand, which the Prosecution would like to take as its final word concerning Naumann's attitude, is based on this error. Naumann was repeatedly asked, and this was also put to him as a final question, whether he considered the order unlawful. Thus, in any case, did Naumann understand this question and had to understand it. Naumann replied to the negative and gave the same reason that almost all the other defendants have given to this question. (Ohlendorf, p. 526, 536, Blume p. 1815; Schulz p. 982/84; Steimle p. 1996; Sandberger p. 22, 2356; Seibert p. 2716; Braune p. 3094), namely that an act which is committed at the order of the Head of the State cannot be contrary to law but must be lawful and that therefore such an act cannot be an injustice (transcript p. 911-12 German, p. 897-98 English). As I have already emphasized, Naumann was a soldier and as such, as he has repeatedly asserted, considered himself obliged to obey the order because of the obedience he owed his Supreme War Lord at that time by virtue of his oath (transcript p. 866, 881, 898, 910 German, p. 856, 870, 886, 896 English). The circumstance that he attributed to the order the force of law and therefore did not regard it as an injustice cannot be taken to mean that he approved of it.

Any other interpretation of Naumann's statement than this would not only be contrary to the meaning and contents of his statements but would even be in opposition to them. The question whether the extenuating clause of Provision 4b of the Control Council Law is applicable will furthermore depend on how Naumann would have acted if this order had not existed. Here, too, it must be stated without hesitation on the basis of the previous arguments that Naumann would never have adopted on his own initiative such measures as were commanded by the order. The best proof for this is Naumann's conduct in Holland, where Naumann was sent on detached service in August 1943 as Commander of the Security Police and the SD. This comparison is of great significance for the reason that Holland, just like the area of Einsatzgruppe B in Russia, was territory occupied by Germany. There were Jews living in Holland too. What were Naumann's relations with the Jews in Holland?

and made no secret of this attitude towards NAUMANN, declared in lieu of an oath that she repeatedly intervened with NAUMANN in favor of Jews from among her acquaintances and succeeded by this in bringing in about that for instance Fral LEMBRUGGEN, Liesel HIJMANS, and Dr. FRENSDORF were discharged from the concentration camp and/or from prison. Frau van der SCHALK furthermore testified that NAUMANN was of a pronounced leniency towards Jews and that it was because of this indulgence that he was again transferred from Holland. (NAUMANN Doc. No. 6, Exh. 5, Vol. I, P. 5). Frau LEMBRUGGEN herself declared in a further affidavit that she owed her discharge from the concentration camp to NAUMANN (NAUMANN Doc. No. 8, Exh. 7, Vol. I, P. 8). affidavit by BENDELER, likewise a Dutchman, who stated that he owed to NAUMANN his discharge from the Vught Concentration Camp to which he had been committed because he had protected Jews (NAUMANN Doc. No. 11, Vol. II, P. 13). This attitude of NAUMANN clearly shows that in his heart he did not agree with the Fuehrer Order. But this attitude shows particularly that NAUMANN would never have issued orders against Jews on his own initiative, as it was made a duty by the Fuehrer Order. A contradictory statement was, it is true, made by RAUTER, the former Higher SS and Police Leader in Holland, who is still being held in custody in Holland because of war crimes committed during the time of occupation. (Doc. No. 5771, Exh. 236, Vol. V B . P. 149). This statement is, however, of no probative value. Apart from the fact that it is not regularly sworn to, it was made by a person who is himself called to account for measures against Jews and therefore endeavours to clear himself of this responsibility as far as possible.

But also in other respects NAUMANN's attitude towards the Dutch population was irreproachable. He always endeavoured, even in so far as this was not within his jurisdiction, to alleviate the fate which had befallen the Dutch population by the occupation. This is proven by Court No. II, Case No. IX.

numerous other affidavits from among the Dutch population. Particularly characteristic are the statements made by the representatives of the Dutch Red Cross in The Hague (NAUMANN Doc. No. 9 and 10, Vol. II, pages 9 and 11), who, as stated by themselves, had been opponents of National Socialism. They declared unanimously that NAUMANN had made it possible that the Dutch political prisoners in the concentration camps and in the prisons could be cared for by the Red Cross and that great quantities of foodstuffs could be supplied to them. In addition to this, NAUMANN threatened the guards with heavy punishment in the event of their appropriating such charitable gifts, as the witnesses von GENNEPP and van OVEREEM declared in agreement with the witnesses LAGES (NAUMANN Doc. No. 23, Vol. IV, P. 44) and WOELK (NAUMANN Doc. No. 24, Vol. IV, P. 46), NAUMANN effected, in order to alleviate the fate of the Dutch prisoners, although this did not come within his jurisdiction either, the improvement of the hospital facilities in the Vught concentration camp and made the erection of a new hospital in the Aamersfoort transit camp possible (NAUMANN Doc. No. 21 and 22, Volume IV, Pages 40 and 42). It is particularly to be emphasized that the discharge of 150 hostages was attained by the intervention of NAUMANN (see affidavits by van GENNEPP and van OVEREEM, NAUMANN Doc. 21 and 22, Vol. IV, Pages 40 and 42) and by van der SCHALK (NAUMANN Doc. No. 7, Exh. 6, Vol. I, P. 7). NAUMANN instigated and carried through the screening of the political prisoners in Holland so that a great number of prisoners whose guilt was not incontestably established were released from custody. (See affidavits by LAGES, NAUMANN Doc. No. 23, Vol. IV, P. 44) and by WOELK (NAUMANN Doc. 25, Vol. IV, P. 47). Frau van der SCHALK testified that the list of Dutchmen, for whom she successfully intervened with NAUMANN, was endless. She asserted that NAUMANN had done much good in Holland and even went so far that he endangered himself very much (NAUMANN Doc. No. 6, Exh. Vol. I, P. 5). Also the Dutchman Dr. FREDERIKS, the former Secretary General in the Dutch Home Ministry, testified that NAUMANN showed great obligingness, Upon his remonstrances he succeeded Court No. II, Case No. IX.

with NAUMANN's assistance in saving four Dutchmen who had already been sentenced to death and that some of a number of arrested Mayors were released from custody, and that pending proceedings against some of them were quashed. (Doc. NAUMANN No. 12, Vol. II P. 14) Particularly worth mentioning is the fact that NAUMANN brought about the punishment of the Commandant of the Wught Concentration Camp, GRUENEWALD, after having been informed by a man of confidence that 10 persons had died as a result, of his punishment measures, even though the administration of the concentration camps did not come within his jurisdiction. (See affidavits by van OVEREEM and van GENNEPP, NAUMANN Doc. No. 9 and 10, Vol. II, Pages 9 and 11, by LAGES, NAUMANN Doc. No. 23, Vol. IV, P. 44).

The incidents mentioned in the rebuttal document No. 5771, Exh. 236, Vol. V B, P. 149 are not suitable to question the validity of these testimonies. The action "Silbertanne" (Silver-fir") which is mentioned in the document has not started by NAUMANN, as is clearly shown by the depositions of WOELK and LAGES in the document, but by RAUTER. It can well be understood that RAUTER endeavours to clear himself of the responsibility for this, since he has to answer for this measure before a Dutch court. The numerous proofs for the irreproachable attitude of NAUMANN from Dutch circles show already that RAUTER's statements concerning the action "Silbertanne" cannot be correct. It is not only improbable, but even impossible that these Dutchmen would today make statements in favor of NAUMANN, if NAUMANN had not behaved in the manner they testified. The number of statements from among the Dutchmen could have been increased at will, if their procurement from abroad had not met difficulties. shows that he is not the brutal man the Prosecution tries to describe him. It especially shows that it was solely and wholly due to the existence of the Fuehrer Order that NAUMANN had to tolerate the execution of Jews in Russia. Should the opinion of the Prosecution be correct, then there would not have been any reason for NAUMANN to behave in Court No. II, Case No. IX.

Holland in another way than in Russia.

In Count 3) of the Indictment NAUMANN was furthermore charged with membership in criminal organizations, more precisely in the SS and the SD. must exist in order to justify a conviction because of membership in a criminal organization. I now wish to anticipate this result and to examine on the basis of this result whether a conviction of NAUMANN because of this is justified. According to the verdict of the International Military Tribunal the following would be required for this: 1) NAUMANN must have supported some criminal aims or other of the SS or the SD by co-operation with other members. 2) He must have had knowledge of criminal actions of these organizations. 3) The membership must have been on a voluntary basis. the decision of these three questions.

NAUMANN did not belong to the General SS after that date (Records p. 841 of the German, p. 834 of the English text). He was rather a member of the Waffen SS during the period from 29 April 1940 until 15 March 1941. This membership, however, was not a voluntary one, it was based on the contrary on a legal regulation, namely the Armed Forces Law (Records p. 841 of the German, p. 834 of the English text). the 1 September 1939. By such a way of acting he would have incurred most severe punishment. therefore be no justification for a conviction because of membership in a criminal organization. Reich Main Security Office after the 1 September 1939, as he conclusively Court No. II, Case No. IX.

testified during his interrogation in the stand. (Records page 842 of the German, page 835 the English text). made a withdrawal impossible. Already for this reason therefore he cannot be punished because of membership in a criminal organization. NAUMANN had any knowledge of the fact that the SD intelligence service was employed for the perpetration of any war crimes or crimes against humanity. This was also set forth by NAUMANN during his interrogation in the stand. (Records page 842 of the German, p. 835 of the English text).

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

PRESIDENT: You may proceed.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Durchholz for the defendant, Schulz.

May it please the High Tribunal! opinion as the greatest murder trial of all times. The prosecution declared right at the beginning of its opening statement that it intends to describe the intentional massacre of more than one million innocent and defenseless men, women and children. correct, according to the evidence, - facts have been submitted and it also has been proved from what sources the numbers mentioned in the reports of the prosecution, characterized by it as incriminating evidence, were arrived at, and why it is impossible that those numbers can be correct, besides all this, it has to be established whether murders actually were committed. of a human being for debased reasons, originating merely from the lust and desire to kill. them really constitute killing in this sense, that is murder? Generally speaking, what did the men of the Einsatzgruppen actually do?

All those men were committed to war service. They were soldiers, soldiers like other soldiers in every other country of the world. called upon to do so. The soldier is obliged not to evade this duty and has to be obedient to his superiors. The latter implies that he has to obey all orders and instructions of his superior. If he does not do so, he will be punished. If this happens even in war time, he has to suffer the most sevre penalty it is immaterial whether it is a war of defense or a war of aggression It is absolutely feasible and possible even necessary that an attack provides the best form of defense.

And old proverb states: "The best defense is attack." with which he is commissioned, especially as it is impossible for him as a soldier to realize what kind of a war is being conducted, especially since the modern means of propaganda of both belligerents are apt to confuse the issue. However, we do not have to examine, with regard to this one case as to whether or not the defendants here have made themselves guilty of having started or instigated a war of aggression.

As already stated, those men were engaged in war. Their activities, which constitute the subject of this trial, extended exclusi vely to war commitments against and in the Soviet Union.

It was a war which broke out ultimately in order to bring about a final settlement of the controversies of two indeologies, which were so contradictory that they never could be reconciled. It is not only the controversies between these ideologies of Germany and Russia which are concerned, because these controversies, these divergencies existed then and are still spreading today and, have now engulfed wider and wider circles, is clearly shown by the present world situation. gical controversies. It might be possible that the controversies originally were of an ideological nature. However, later on, they touched all spheres of life, both materially and ideologically. These controversies were not reconciled even after the last fatal war as may be soon by the various warlike conflicts going on in different parts of the world in spite of all efforts at peace and pacification moreover, they have now engulfed the entire world and divided it into two fronts which have become more and more clearly defined.

And in addition each party considers its concept the only right and only true one for the future welfare of all mankind.

to you. you will give. opposing ideologies in order to reach a general evaluation of the attitude of these men. You yourself, without being or becoming prejudiced, may give preference to one of the two ideologies. Communism. In this struggle the German soldiers had to fulfil their duties. Communism remains the crucial problem of our time. attitude is now assumed with regard to this problem, without having to discuss the basic points of view of leading politicians renowned and well known scholars of national and international law and without having to quote the opinion of the head of the supra-national Catholic Church, the Pope, who as a Prince of Peace always carefully tried to reconstruct and preserve world peace. I repeat only a few statements which have been published by the world press. The British Prime Minister Attlee made a speech over the British radio on 3 January 1948, in the course of which he sharply criticized Communism. He said other things, that the expansionist aims of the Soviets must be stopped. Soviet Communism endangers the welfare of the European countries by a new kind of ideological, economical and strategical imperialism. The history of the USSR is a warning example of the fact that political of the USSR is a warning example of the fact that political collectivism without political freedom can rapidly deteriorate and may lead to subjugation and uinjustice. Therefore it became necessary to contemplate measures against Communism in England.

Furthermore: at present books and memoirs are often published in the Western World, propagating tendencies inimical to the Soviet-Union. They represent; according to reports of the press, the consequences of the Soviet-Russian expansionist policy and the understandable reaction of those affected by the Soviet-Russian methods. Among others it is announced that also Farenzc Navy, Premier Minister of Hungary until last year, will also publish shortly a book at a New York publishing house concerning the condition in Hungary after the war and his enforced resignation. I may quote even now what Nagy has already stated, namely "Now after it is too late, I realize that I am a living example of the thesis, that no compromise is possible with Communism". (End of quotation.) from Washington of 9 January 1948, a sub-committee of the House of Representatives for the investigation of un-American Activities, resolved. To start on 9 February 19148 with the work on a bill which aims to outlaw the Communism Party of th e United States, by declaring that membership in the Communist Party can be termed an act of high treason.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Durchholz, I don't want to interrupt you, and I certainly don't want to cause you to present your case in any way different from which you wish to present it, but we can't help but comment at this very juncture that what you are now telling the Tribunal is entirely irrelevant and we don't want you to assume that it is having any effect on the Tribunal whatsoever in so far as the issue is concerned. What happens in 1948 has nothing to do with 1941.

I only said that, Dr. Durchholz, so that if there is anything you wish to omit in order to present your entire argument within the hour and a half which has been allotted you, you might omit such arguments as you are now presenting, because I am afraid with the sixty pages or more that you have that you can't read it all within that time anyway.

We, of course, will read the entire summation, regardless of its relevancy or irrelevancy, but this was so far afield that we couldn't help but make some comment on it, and we don't want you to believe that anything we say is in any way prejudicial to the merit of your case.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: There is only one more quotation, Your Honor and I would like to ask you whether I may read this quotation, and then the quotations are at an end.

THE PRESIDENT: You may.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: I may refer to the fact that according to a report from Washington, I quote:

"Italy's Communists are ready" According to this report, the American foreign policy and especially the European Relief Program was sharply criticized at a congres of the Italian Communist Party in which well-known international Communist leaders participated. Among others it had been declared that the USA together with the Holy see tries to attain world domination, that those two are the biggest war mongers. However, tens of thousands of Comminists, trained in guerilla warfare were said to be ready to resist this force of arms." (End of quotation.)

Now I come back to the methods of this struggle. Both parties have again announced that they will be locked in the most intensive struggle. at was like that also in the past-and there it came to open battle. It has been already proved by a series of defense documents and by other evidence how ruthlessly this fight was waged by the opposing camp. Men, women and even children were mobilized to participate in this fight and took part in it either openly or secretly- Is it then surprising that in such a fight for life fire was used to fight fire? Was not the old maximum valid and is it not still valid: "What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander"? If one party is to be condemned for that reason, then the other one must be tried with the same severity according to the commonly valid principles of justice.

If this concerned a measure applied only against the enemy in the East but not against the enemy in the West then it had and must have had its significant reasons. Regarding the reasons of those measures which were applied against the enemy in the East I have already made detailed statements. introduce the methods which are now termed criminal and damnable? As soldiers they received orders. The question of thebasix significance of an order, of whatever kind it might be, has already been discussed. an order is viewed, whether from the point of view of natural law, national or international criminal law, or from the point of view of constitutional or international law, it is a matter for the individual, to determine his personal views regarding an order, in this case the often discussed Fuehrer Order. In this connection I may state and presuppose that the killing of human beings demanded by the Fuehrer order should not mean the exterminations of human beings for political, racial or religious reasons and with it the systematic execution of a program of genocide - at any rate the defendants were not informed of this implication. order may have been shown unequivocally by the evidence. None of the defendants were confronted by this Fuehrer order without having to overcome inner conflicts. The evidence has also proved how different the solutions of these conflicts were. individual it is import for the facts which have to be established first to determine the so-called external facts, i.e. to establish the the acts which the individual committed or did not commit and then the so-called spiritual guilt, i.e. if he did commit an act, why he did so.

questions of this trial, which affect the interests of all defendants and therefore also those of my client. the related unfolding of problems, I now have to deal in my case, with the defendant Erwin Schulz. I wish to precede this with a few essential points. this frankly - so deeply affected by its contents that I had to deliberate profoundly whether I could reconcile with my conscience the taking over of a defense in the face of such grave charges. When going to my first confenrece, I believed I would find my future client to be at least - ruthless and relentless person. Here I had my first surprise, because I learned to know a man whom I soo liked on account of his str aight-forwardness and politeness. vity as a police official, extending over a period of almost 25 years I had my second surprise, because I hardly believed it possible that a man could be able to adhere to such an unblemished course in a difficult vocation and unless extremely difficult circumstances; a position whose heavy responsibilities were all known to me from my own experience. I must candidly confess in his presence, that I was unable to believe everything although he gave his explanations in every respect in anobjective and modest manner. I could irrefutably esyablish by virtue of the currently incoming affidavits of friend and foe, that everything without exceptions of what the defendant Schulz told me not only corresponded to the facts, but that he also explained ot ot me with an exaggerated modesty.

which the American Officer in Salzburg made out about this fact. It might be that this report also contains the sentence which the defendant spoke to that officer, convinced of the principle that every man should be aware of his own value, namely; "I was the same man before 1933 as after 1933 and if I remain now what I was before then even the discerning enemy will not refuse to pay me his respect." here in Nuernberg towards the prosecution. He voluntarily submitted a voluminous handwritten report of more than 50 pages, a fews days after his first interrogation by Mr. Wartenberg in the presence of

Mr. Walton, even before he was acquainted with the indictment and before he had knowledge of even one of the documents exhibited. And everything he submitted in his draft repeated almost verbatim on the witness stand. Not only that, his statements and data correspond in almost every detail to the documents although the latter have been given from memory after nearly 6 years. establish with it right at the start that the statements of the defendant Schulz have not been conceived for the specific purposes of to the truth, openly and honestly without adding any embellishments. Although his membership in the SS and Gestapo up to 1 September 1939 does not constitute a count of the indictment, I have to stress this period too, in a short and concise manner, in order to present a generally comprehensive picture. After the end of thefirst World War from which the defendant returned as a 17-year old soldier and fater passing examination (Abiturientexamen) Schulz had to face a situation which had destroyed his life ambition to become a Physician.

The sudy of law which he had taken up without any inward inclination also and to be interrupted. After a period of practical work in a bank and in a business enterprise he entered the Bremen police force on 5 November 1923. For this vocation he possessed three very essential qualifications: in the first place, his education in the home of his parents. His father was a soldier of long service and subsequently a civil servant. By him he was educated to a sense of duty, conscientiousness, and straigthforwardness of character. Secondly, his inward inclination and disposition towards helping in distress who need assistance, which had manifested itself in his wish to become a doctor and thirdly his study of law. Even though this study had not been completed it had taught him to think and reason along legal lines. These basic principles he always applied as the guide of his actions regardless of the situation in which he was placed. and activity during the first years since they are immaterial to this trial and were described in detail by the defendant on the witness stand. sents an important event which was to determine his life decisively. With reference to his activity here until 1933 Alfred Faust, at that time Social-Democratic member of the Reichstag and chief editor of the Social-Domocraticnewspaper "Bremer Volkszeitung", states in Exhibit no. 35, Scgulz Document No. 11.

I quote: "Long before HITLER'S usurpation of power under the Weimar Republic Schulz was an officer in the Bremen Political Police."

"During the period of my political activity in Bremen I knew Herr Erwin Schulz. I never knew him as a Nazi. He is the typical decent German officer". End of quotation.

On page 31 he continues: I quote:

"In my overall judgment I can only rmember Hauptmann Schulz with respect and gratitude. During his entire term of office in Bremen he always treated correctly and I have no cause whatsoever to bring accusations and charges against him." End of quotations. Reich Banner Black-Red-Gold," the militant organization of the Social-Democratic Party of Germany, and at present leader of all sports activities in Bremen, says in Schulz Exhibit No. 30, Schulz Document No. 2 Volume I, p.7: I quote:

"I know the subsequent official in charge of the State Police office Bremen, Erwin Schulz, already from the time before 1933. Herr Erwin Schulz was at that time First Lieutenant of the Police and was employed in the Polizeidirektion in the department political police. At that time I was the leader of the Reichsbanner (para-military organization of the democratic parties) Bremen and therefore I had to contact him several times when I was making preparations ofr political demonstrations and meetings. Already that time I came to know Herr Erwin Schulz as a quiet and prudent who always endeavoured to balance political emotions and to prevent clashes of a political nature". - End of quotation.

In his statement in Schulz Exhibit No. 21, Polizeisenator Theodor Laue explains as follows: I quote:

"I was known that Police Captain Schulz already before 1933 fulfilled his duties quite objectively assiting members of all political parties if he though it right and necessary out of human considerations." End of quotation.

Schulz did not change his attitude after 1933. Experiencing how for opportunistics reasons now many persons in responsible positions became obedient instruments of the Party outdoing each other in courting it and uncritically not only tolerating but even supporting what was considered right by ill-advised fanatics.

He on the contrary was opposed to all this ad because he was unable to reconcile such behavior with his inner attitude and with his relief in the purity of the National Socialist movement. Thus in indignation he approached the responsible Polizeisenator in Bremen with a public report ruthless disclosing to him the abuses going in the temporary concentration camp in Bremen established at the request of the Party of which he had been confidentially informed.

Here I again refer to the Schulz Exhibit No. 21 Schulz Document No. 60, where the witness Theoder Laue states: I quote:

"In 1933 Schulz submitted t me a report on his then chief Captain Kruse, concerning the temporarily protective custody camp in the Missler Halls in Bremen which had been established in Bremen and in which the SS-guards had resorted to exesses. His report enabled me to take immediate action and to stop the reported shortcomings. The SS-guards were immediately relieved of their duty and the Police first Lieutenant who was responsible was also, immediately transferred as a disciplinary measure. This incident proves, too, that Schulz did not approve of any incorrect actions, not even then as has been unfortunately noticed so frequently when it was a matter of "expediency considerations." -End of quotation. the consequences resulting thereform. Schulz took a heavy burden on himself, for he had to know that he made enemies with such behavior. But he accpeted this consequence without hesitation. already quoted, above says in Schulz Exhibit No. 35, as follows, and I quote:

"Thus it required a good deal of pluck to oppose the hatred of subordinate departments. "End of quotation.

As for sixteen years without any interruptions, Schulz owrked in the Bremen police force, I deliberately collected a great number of affidavits dating back to that period and submitted them to the court. I did this not only because it was a matter of course that I could obtain the greatest possible number from those sources, but also because I am of the opinion that the person who conducted himself unimpeachably and in an exemplary fashion for sixteen years in one and the same town will by necessity act in the same manner in thesubsequent years, which is also incontestably proved by the documents of that particular period. person as is the case here. In another part of my plea I shall refer to the essential points in those affidavits and proceed to summarize them. Oberlandses erischtsrat Dr. Stegemann as public prosecutor with the Hansatic Court of Appeals at Hamburg, Dr. Stegemann was in charge of the Bremen high treason cases. From those activities he knew the defendant in the period from 1934 to 1939. He states in Schulz Exhibit No. 28, and I quote:

"In the then Captain Schulz I found a man with a complete understanding of the requirements of justice who differed in a very advantageous way from many of the State Police Leaders likewise known to me though his always equitable, humane, and decent manner. Herr Schulz was free from any strict, narrow, fanatical disposition . He never took part in the war of the State Police against the department of justice which was waged by many State Police officers. At that time I learned to appreciate Herr Schulz especially for his frank, straightforward and decent character, his brave, fearless masculinely strong personality." End of quotation. friendly or intimate relations between Dr. Stegemann and the defendant Schulz, outside their official intercourse which could favorably influence the evaluation of the defendant.

During my client's stay in Bremen, he was appointed in the spring of 1938 to take up duties in Graz following the occupation in Austria. For this period, too, I have submitted a considerable number of affidavits which were mostly given by such persons as had been in protective custody, and which consitute a unanimous eulogy for the defendant, unreservedly praising his humane feelings, his chivalry, and his kindness. I deem these documents particularly important because they prove that even in the year 1938 the defendant did not change his attitude and never made nay concessions to the party for opportunistics reasons or even vain ambitions, which he could not reconcile with his conscience and his professional ideals. Apart from this humane a ttitude, the documents prove that his measures and decisions were definitely not favorably received by the Party.

5 Feb 1943_A_MSD_24_1_Gross (Hildesheimer) account who, as an official, parson or convinced Party follower, acted in accordance with the dictates of duty and conviction, and he applied this maxim to his own action. Only an offense against the existing laws or any preceding arbitrary actions could make it necessary to call a person to account. Whoever violated that principle acted, in the defendant's opinion, from reprehensible motives of revenge, which were to be rejected as unjust. mention in particular the testimony given by the Jewish professor, Professor Dr. Loewi, who is now working in New York as professor at the New York University College of Medicine. This is the Schulz Exh. No. 91, Professor Loewi says, and I quote:

"On 6 May 1938 Herr Schulz discharged me from protective custody. The discharge tood place in the kindest form in the presence of my wife whom Herr Schulz on his own initiative had invited to be present." dealing with Jewish persons, had no other guiding principles than that of justice. And quite determinedly he saw to it that his views prevailed although it was especially this release from detention which after a short time was responsible for its turning into a highly controversial matter. In this case, too, it required his personal intervention and all his skill to justify and motivate those measures. by Dr. Loewi's assistant, Dr. Hellauer, in Schulz Exh. No. 99. article in the "Tagespost", a Graz paper, dated 2 July 1938, which the witness Schmid had in her possession and the original of which has been submitted to the court. In this article, the defendant quite frankly announces his professional ideals by asking his officials and employees to allow humane feelings to assert themselves in thier particular 5 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_2_Gross (Hildesheimer) work, regardless of likes or dislikes.

This does not show sentimentality. If one was not sure that humane sentiments should be permitted expression in a particular job, one had better refrain from that job. Although applying strict rules in the execution of one's duties, this would not exclude a certain amount of chivalry. but also to all those present of whom many had critized the defendant's measures which were motivated by kindness and justice. I consider this newspaper article particularly important, because it proves which ideals guide the defendant, and that he cannot be swayed from this course. Openly defending his views; for there can be no more pronounced action than announcing one's views in the press in order to stamp them as one's beliefs. However, these declarations are really a profession of belief, because word and deed coincide quite difinitely, a fact which is again evidenced by the statements of the political opponents who, according to their positions in life, which they held at that time and are holding again today, must be considered persons whose judgment is both substantial and valuable, because they are excluded from all suspicion or superficiality or an unjustified favoritism. assigned to Assig in the former Sudeten province, which took place in the fall of 1938, and to Olmuetz in the former Protectorate in the spring of 1939. These events are important because the Einsa zgruppen for these assignments had already been activated, and Schulz had been commissioned to lead an Einsatzkommando. A I have only a limited amount of time at my disposla, I can only briefly deal with those periods. the Einsatzkommandos were merely assigned to the primary task of arranging for working space with its necessary billets and providing 5 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_3_Gross (Hildesheimer) technical means for the regular offices, which were to be set up subsequently, and securing the operations of the invading troops by establishing a communication service.

This is proved by the aforementioned article in the Graz "Tagespost" Schulz Exh. No. 74 in which reads, and I quote:

"He - the defendant - expressed his happiness that he was able to conclude his four months of building, which had created the outer form by being able to turn over this neat building to its function........ Now there follows the second part of the task, the development of the contents, which he unfortunately could not do himself." As in Graz, the same also applied in Olmuetz. And as in Graz, his arrival in Aussig and Olmuetz also meant the arrival of justice, humane feelings, and genuine friendship, which the documents of his former political opponents prove unanimously. include many tasks for the defendant, as the planned setting up of a state police branch office in Aussig had been dropped. Aussig became only a secondary branch of the Reichenberg State Police exactly according to the scheduled three stages, as provided by the Munich agreement, in which after the departure of the Czech troops and authorities, the German troops and administrative offices followed according to a mutual understanding. The whole operation rolled off smoothly under the supervision of Lord Runciman, who had been appointed for this task. That in this instance, too, the defendant Schulz proceeded according to his principles of chivalry is proved by the fact of his attitude towards the Czech Police Chief, Dr. Benda, whose planned arrest he not only prevented, but beyond this even initiated a certain release procedure for the public which had as its aim removing this sting from this action against Herr Dr. Benda. I refer to the affidavit by the defendant, 5 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_4_Gross (Hildeshimer) Schulz Exh.

No. 88 and the newspaper attached to this affidavit. This action on the part of the defendant could not have been achieved either if he had not personally intervened, for he was obliged to give a motive whenever he deviated from the given orders. As in this case, he never chose the convenient course of blindly obeying orders, but he wanted to be just. His efforts overcame the difficulties and were also successful for the simple reason that a well-meaning man backed them up. It should be obvious, however, that his attitude towards "the smaller fry" was not less well-meaning, even though he protected them "big-shots". The above mentioned newspaper article also proves, as it shows, that the Oberlandrat was the superior authority for Schulz in the Protectorate. Yet another action on the part of the defendant signifies his chivalrous attitude. Completely ignoring the wish of his superior authorities, he did not billet the men in his office in the city hall rooms of Olmuetz, but he allowed the Czech authorities to stay there without imposing any changes, and he soon established cordial relations with them on the basis of mutual respect. He himself only claimed two modest rooms, while members of his Kommando were billetted in the vacant floor of a nearby private house. He replied to the charges of authority and representation brought against him by stating that according to his opinion, authority and representation did not depend on external matters, but were based on behavior and results. After having taken over as ordered, he returned to Bremen in the following weeks, in order to hand over his office there to his successor and to his subordinates to whom he was for many years both a respected and much-liked leader. However, the actual transfer was delayed because hes successor was taken ill, so that he did not return to Reichenberg before July of 1939, approximately. The office he found there required a thoeough reorientation if it was to be in accordance with his views. As a primary measure, therefore, he introduced his 5 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_5_Gross (Hildesheimer) new subordinate to his professional ideals.

After that, he paid special attention to the task of definitely settling the irresponsible disorder that prevailed in the treatment of assets which were left behind by Jews, most of whom had escaped. For this purpose, he appointed two responsible officials. In this instance, too, he had to overcome the most difficult obstacles, as he had to proceed ruthlessly, in order to regain the property which had already been appropriated by others. To prove this, I refer to the statement by Kriminalrat Hasse, Schulz Exh. No. 78. However, this, his principal attitude, must also be considered as shown by this particular statement. Hasse states the following and I quote:

"He - the defendant - considered it his principal task to train his subordinate officials and clerks in such a way - and he devoted a large part of his time to this activity - that they would always act in a correct, honest, and above all decent and humane way. I shall never forget that he often said to me that true police officers should be only men of spiritual greatness, with an instinct for honesty, with heart and tactfulness. In this respect he was an example to me, and - this is no exaggeration - the one great teacher of my life. I owe him much. He frequently emphasized to me the need for waging a war on political opponents in a humane manner. In the question of protective custody, Herr Schulz was more than cautious. I also know very well that Herr Schulz frequently released prisoners after a personal warning." a policy no different from the one he had followed in all the preceding years. This is also confirmed by the statement of Polizeiobersekretaer Fritz Weise from the same office Schulz Exhibit No. 41, in which he says, among other things and I quote:

"On the contrary, he was an exemplary, modest and plain person, who looked after his officials like a father......Especially as far as morals were concerned, he demanded utmost decency, both of himself 5 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_6_Gross (Hildesheimer) and his subordinates.

his testimony on the witness stand (Eng. transcript. p. 1113/14; German transcript p. 1131), according to which he opposed the intention of the Gauleiter to arrest the leading Czechs at the beginning of the war and succeeded in imposing his conviction. me to discover character witnesses from the former areas of the Sudetengau and the Protectorate. However, I am convinced that I would have succeeded with little effort in locating witnesses for these areas who were credible in every respect and unobjectionalbe as to character and education - and my introduction of evidence is based solely upon such witnesses. But I firmly believe that the court has been given sufficient proof by the documents which have been submitted, in order to enable them to form a judgment concerning the defendant Schulz' attitude and character. I might even say that the documents have a double value as proof, insofar as documents from subordinates of my client are concerned, because they not only present a judgment of their former superior, but beyond that illustrate the decency, and sincerity of his policy of issuing orders. In my opinion this is important because I know from my experience that many times nowadays former subordinates try to hide their own weaknesses, mistakes and undependability behind the orders of their former superiors. tion, because the entire activity of my client in Aussig and Olmuotz and the greater part of his activity in Reichenberg falls outside the time under indictment, namely before 1 September 1939. However, in the Reichenberg period, there is only the campaign against Poland, which had no effects at all upon Reichenberg, especially since Schulz had prevented the arrest of Czech inhabitants which the Gauleiter had demanded. However, after the Polish campaign had come to an end, Schulz left Reichenberg in April 1940, before the campaign in the 5 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_7_Gross (Hildesheimer) West had begun.

inspector. This event is of far-reaching importance because from this time on until the capitulation. my client withdrew from his former subordinate position under the office of the Gestapo in Berlin and and or the office IV of the RSHA and belonged to Amt I, in the offices of which he was directly employed in the following period. sort. In this connection, I refer to his own statements on the witness stand and the testimony of Regierungsrat Broder in Schulz Exhibit No. 42. This witness, who knows the defendant not only from his own experience but also from the judgment of the widest circles of the Security Police and the SD, above and beyond the spheres of local activity, here draws such a comprehensive picture of the defendant as a person and as a superior in his official as well as in his private life, in his conception of his profession and in his concept of life, that I would like to call it especailly to the attention of the court. This description clearly shows that the complete harmony between word and deed is scared to the defendant when he sets his fundamental principle above all else: "The living example is the best training." because now I shall start the Russian Campaign.

THE MARSHAL: The Honorable, the Judges of Military Tribunal II.

Military Tribunal II is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed.

DR. DURCHHOLZ (Attorney for the defendant Schulz): Your Honor, I should like to proceed now in delivering my final plea. We proceed on page 23, paragraph 7:

As early as March 1941, my client was recalled from Hamburg. It is unusual to advance from inspector to Gruppenleiter in the RSHA. But Schulz acceded to the request of the Chief of Personnel at that time, who told him that because of his particular inclination and capacity for leading men, he urgently needed him. He became Gruppenleiter I B (training and education) and Commander of the Leadership School. With his inherent devotion, he dedicated himself to his new work, which he approached with all the greater happiness, as he believed that where he would be able to set the lofty duties of their profession before the eyes of the people. with moving from Hamburg to Berlin, he was taken completely by surprise by his transfer to Russia as Fuehrer of Einsatzkommando 5. tions and circumstantial details. My client has described the latter in detail on the witness stand, I have listed the former in detail in my trial brief submitted to the Court. Therefore I will limit myself - presupposing the totality of events so for as they affect my client - to dividing my subsequent statements into the following topics:

"Schulz, the man. in his relation to the events in Russia and the orders issued."

he knew nothing whatsoever about the comprehensive Fuehrer Order. He was only familiar with the statements of Heydrich in the Prinz Albrecht palace, in which not a word was mentioned concerning the shooting of the Jews and their wives and children, the Gypsies and functionaries. This is also to be regarded as proved by the fact that the co-defendant Ohlendorf likewise took part in this discussion, but together with other co-defendants clearly testifies that the Fuehrer Order was only made public by Streckenbach in Pretsch by order of Heydrich. Although Schulz was in the company of the defendant Rasch, the Chief of his Einsatzgruppe, for 2 days in Schmiedeberg and even took his meals with several officers, neither Rasch nor anyone else of those present spoke of this order made public by Streckenbach. The same statements were also made by the defendants von Radetzky, Graf and Fendler, who belonged to the same Einsatzgruppe. Further, this was nothing extraordinary, for the order was made known to only a very limited circle and the statements of several co-defendants have shown that they likewise were uninformed of this comprehensive order in their stations of Pretsch, Schmiedeberg and Dueben. Since by its very nature it was strictly confidential, it is also not surprising that news of this order did not reach Schmiedeberg, the station of the Einsatzgruppe Rasch; for even it if had been discussed in Dueben or Pretsch, it did not necessarily have to reach Schmiedeberg, which was located several kilometers from these places. Unfortunately the elimination of the defendant Rasch as a witness in the witness stand has deprived me of any possibility of clarifying these and several other points as well in favor of my client. However, from the opening statement of my colleague, Dr. Surholt, regarding his client Rasch, I must conclude that Dr. Rasch probably consciously refrained from making that particular Fuehrer Order public.

I refer to subsection 1 of this opening statement which I quote:

"The Einsatzgruppen were established in the early summer of 1941 in accordance with such principles as are generally recognized as admissible from the viewpoint of international law in the event of war..... a nature as the Prosecution is now quoting under the name of Crimes against Humanity and war Crimes was not given, neither could it be surmised. Thus the defendant Dr. Rasch had no reason to reject the command over Einsatzgruppe C with which he was charged." End of quotation. nor did it become known to him. important to me that he cannot remember ever again having seen Dr. Rasch after he had made his final report, before his departure on 24 September 1941. Without any knowledge of the indictment or the prosecution documents, he gave his testimony, which fully agrees with the statements in the above mentioned opening statement, to Herr Wartenberg orally already on 4 March 1947, and on 9 March 1947, in the presence of Dr. Walton gave Wartenberg this information in voluminous written form. However, this happened at a time in which he simply did not know where Dr. Rasch was. Since Dr. Rasch also was not transferred to the prison, but was completely isolated in the hospital, there was no possibility at all of a verbal agreement, quite apart from the fact that he would have had nothing to do with such a thing. ing route were discussed. Schulz personally took over the command of the convoy of his completely motorized Kommando. duties. But as long as everything was in flux and nothing at all was known of what would happen, these thoughts took no tangible form.

to have stood their ground and then a war of position would have to have been fought which would have made it necessary for the Kommando to have become active in the Reich area of even for the German troops to have been overwhelmed. Since my client holds the position that all tentative plans are out of place because they hinder or disturb decisions in unexpected developments, he always tried to let things develop first. He never once thought that he would have to undertake shootings, since up until that time in his entire career with the police he neither received nor issued an order to shoot a man. As he already stated on the witness stand, he pictured the course of his future activity to be similar to that which he had experienced in his previous assignments, although he probably realized that they would be of a far more serious and dangerous character. like change. In the foreground were the conditions already mentioned which suddenly and glaringly brought into focus all the difficulties of future events and the mercilessness of the coming war.

The announcement by Dr. Rasch of the first order concerning our own war measures in the East stood in direct connection with the thousands of dead, who were found, among whom were also m any German soldiers and officers. Those participants to whom this order was made public, completely overlooked the fact that that order - compiled from the so-called Commissar Order and the Barbarossa Order - had been published even before the beginning of the war with Russia, since they learned of this order only after the war had begun and had to consider it justified by the events which h ad taken place. The effect of the orders published, through the combination of circumstances, was different from what it would have been if they had learned of it before the beginning of the war. One could see from reports and stories that Lemberg was no exception.

witness stand , again agrees with the statements of my colleague Dr. Surholt, in his Opening Statement under Sub-Section 2 (Engl. transcript p. 311, German transcript p. 316), where it says, and I quote:

"Accordingly, the assignment of the Gruppen, or at any rate that of Gruppe C headed by Rasch, was motivated by military necessity. The orders he passed on to the subordin ate Kommandos were based on adequate prerequisites. Executions were only to be carried out if the actual facts of the crime were established, they had thus to be limited to cases involving persons who had participated in murders, looting, acts of sabotage, etc." End of quotation.

Rasch's order also contained the instructions that all political functionaries and agents were to be shot. Of course the partisans also fell under this heading. tion and the lack of a regular court martial, because in its consequence he saw the dangers of arbitrary action, especially since the decision according to the Keitel order was left to officers who lacked any sort of training in the field of law. However, as he testified, he was under the influence of the events of Lemberg. In spite of this his feelings struggled against it. He knew his tendency toward conciliation and his constant inclination toward the good, which have again and again been brought out in all the documents I have submitted and which have so often been falsely characterized as meekness and ascribed his conflict to his predisposition. According to the given facts, he believed that he had to force himself to a greater severity. When he conscientiously considered this with the exclusion of all emotion, he believed that he had to acknowledge the fact that right and emotion could differ, without right thereby becoming wrong. From this conflict however, he came to the conclusion that he would have to limit the not very closely limited order by requiring that the guilt of the political functionaries and agents be proved in advance.

ordered by the Fuehrer of the Jews guilty of and participating in the Lemberg murders. which followed in the wake of the Lemberg murders, in order to be able even to comprehend such a severe order. But from a purely legal point of view he was unable to produce any sound arguments against the order, especially since in addition the attention of the world had been focused on these events and representatives of foreign powers had appeared in Lemberg in order to convince themselves of what had happened. Everything was fully discussed before this public. The Fuehrer gave the order with the explicit reference that it was a matter of reprisals (retaliation). However, such reprisals are perfectly permissible according to international law. Perhaps in such circumstances, any other belligerent power would have done the same. It could appear thoroughly comprehensible that they were also carried out for the murdered Ikrainians, since Germany had placed the Government General under its protection and by so doing had to represent the interests of the Poles. However, those persons murdered in Lemberg were for the most part former Polish citizens. In addition, the population of Lemberg itself demanded these reprisals. According to Rasch's descriptions, the measures were executed by order of the competent Wehrmacht commander in chief in cooperation with the militia under its command. Schulz even endeavored to urge Dr. Rasch to leave these reprisal measures to the Wehrmacht itself. He did this, although Einsatzkommando 6 in connection with Sonderkommando Schoengarth was already commissioned with the investigations and the execution, and therefore he personally was not at all concerned and did not have to be concerned that his Kommando would participate. In spite of this, he further endeavored to advance with his Kommando in order to remove it from this entire event and the depressing experiences in Lemberg, but he did not receive marching orders.

Meanwhile the Jews were arrested, and hearings were constantly being conducted. In the course of time, from the approximately 2500 to 3000 persons arrested, a rather large number was singled out. Schulz saw all this, since he was satying in the same house. He had, therefore, to arrive at the convictions that a somewhat conscientious investigation was being carried out especially since men of the Lemberg authorities were included and Dr. Rasch took a personal interest in the events. that on the afternoon of the day of the shooting, his Kommando would have to carry out the executions. His efforts to have this order rescinded, since neither he nor his men were prepared for such a task, were without result. It would perhaps have been senseless to refuse, since they could not have changed anything in the execution of the order. Even Einsatzkommando 6 would prob ably not have understood if he had demanded of it what he refused himself. He therefore had to accede to the order given by Dr. Rasch. He did it, while conscientiously creating all the conditions under which the execution would be dignified and soldierly for those to be executed and for his men. He could do no more; one cannot in justice either demand or expect more from him. Here, too, I must repeat that the Einstatzkommando was acting only as a Peloton-Kommando. The guilty persons were led out and buried in that locale by Einsatzkommando 6, Sonderkommando Schoengarth and indigenous militia. He and his men performed their duty, more or less with clenched teeth, and in the clear knowledge that they were committing no injustice, since according to information which the group received, only those who were guilty and had participated in the murders were being executed. But the defendant Schulz was made all the more happy that on a day which was so bitter for him, he could free those who were still under arrest, almost 2,000 Jews, and could save the lives of several who were marked for execution. He is almost thankful for the excesses of the Wehrmacht because they m ade it possible for him to do this.

For without this as a basis, it would have been impossible to free these 2,000 men.

The next day, Einsatzkommando 5 went on. There were days of advancing with only occasional brief interruptions. But the Lemberg scenes were repeated. This was especially the case in Dubno, which my client also mentioned. I would like to direct the attentio n of the Court in this connection to Document NO-4525 in the possession of the Prosecution, report of events No. 29 of 21 July 1941, enclosure II of the same, in which the report of these events is contained.

It is not my intention to introduce it as an exhibit. I would only like to mention it in order to emphasize the truth of my client's testimony I did not find this document until after the testimony of my client, while looking through the existing documents of the trial. where it established its quarters for several weeks. During the time subsequent to Lemberg and in the following weeks as well, there were no mass shootings, no shootings of Jews for the sole reason that they were Jews. Inflexibly Schulz clung to his position, although he was reported to be lacking in initiative. He missed no opportunity of impressing upon his officers and men the lessons of decency and humanity. Where severe action was called for, it was to proceed according to the directives he had issued, in a clean and decent soldierly manner. No one could be shot unless he and the person performing the execution knew the exact reasons for the shooting. Acts punishable by death were published on posters. Whoever consciously violated this must have considered the consequences and calculated the risk.

In particular, I must now mention two important events. 1.) The shooting of partisans on the citadel in Berditschew. This was demanded of him because the Security Police was detailed for this according to the agreement between the Wehrmacht and RSHA. The leader of the Teilkommando postponed it. Schulz tacitly bore with the delay, hoping that the Wehrmacht itself would take action or that the matter would be forgotten.

Not until a few days later when Dr. Rasch informed him after his visit to the Army Group that there had been an objection to the fact that nothing had happened yet and ordered him to act now, was he compelled to remind the leader of the Teilkommando to expedite the necessary investigations. However, he openly told Dr. Rasch that he could not understand that the Police were made the jailer of the Wehrmacht. But he could not alter the situation. Schulz naturally had to refrain from intervening in favor of men who as civilians shot at fighting soldiers from ambush. Whoever becomes a party to this and declares himself prepared knows what he has to expect.

2.) The shooting of about 90 persons in Chmelnik. In accordance with an order from the Wehrmacht he makes available a Teilkommando to carry out an investigation. The investigation arrives at the conclusion that this is a case of open rebellion in the course of which 25 inhabitants who had worked at German Wehrmacht headquarters were murdered. In addition, a road trap for Wehrmacht vehicles was built and other incidents occurred which my client no longer remembers. This incident is also described in the documents introduced by the prosecution. These perpetrators, too, knew what would be the consequences for their act. Schulz was stationed with his Kommando in Berditschew - that is during the period from 23 July to 24 August 1941 - were carried out on orders from the Wehrmacht and under the command and supervision of the Wehrmacht. In the first case under the supervision of the Commandant of the Citadel and in the latter case under the command of the Military Governor of Chmelnik without whose approval nothing could be done.

In neither case are we confronted with "Jewish Action". If there are Jews among those to be executed, then not because they are Jews, but because they have become guilty of an act which according to the laws of war is punishable by death through shooting attention to the Jewish culprits which is unequivocally evident from the duplication of reports which offers two different versions of the same incident or if he calls the perpetrators merely Jews, my client cannot be held responsible for that as little as he could be for invented figures.

ruthless measures on the part of units of the Higher SS and Police Leader Jeckeln and soon thereafter, between the 10th and 12th August, he is ordered to come to Shitomir together with other Kommando Leaders, and there Rasch informs them of the order to take more stringent measures against the Jews, According to his statement this order was issued by Jeckeln on instructions from Himmler, and it stipulated that Jews, who were no longer able to work, were to be shot and that no quarter was to be given to their wives and children either in order to obviate acts of revenge against the German people, explanations as given by my colleague Dr. Surholt in his Opening Statement Rasch and which states on page 312 of the English transcript, I quote:

"A change only occurred when new orders were issued. These orders specified that as a matter of principle in the areas that were to be safeguarded by the Einsatzgruppe the Jews, that is, including women and children, were to be exterminated. The exact time of this order is no longer known to the defendant Dr. Rasch. It might have been in August but could also have been in September 1941. The order was transmitted to Rasch by SS-Obergruppenfuehrer Jeckeln." End of quotation, and were purposeless, the defendant Schulz decides to act on his own initiative and in by-passing all official channels, go we Berlin in order to clarify matters there since he simply cannot believe that such an order actually was given from higher up.

and the escape from this dilemma which he chose. He said himself that he was unable to tell his leaders all the things that were on his mind. He no longer saw his way clear. Was it his fault that he could no longer understand matters? It is his opinion that one can criticize the escape which he chose. Yet he chose it since he thought the "misleading" reporting for human reasons was excusable in contrast to appear important. What appear to be prosaic words in the defendant's report is in actual life a truly dramatic incident which can only be described with difficulty in detail. His conflicts do not only center on his own person, he can follow the easy way. All he has to do is to pass on the order. But he can't do that since for him, conscience ranks higher than a man-given order. And he follows the command of his conscience. Human conscience varies from man to man, and like the defendant Schulz whom I am called upon to defend here I would not like to criticize somebody else's views or compare them to others. for every resolution, if it is defended gallantly and manly, deserves to be respected.

On 24 August Schulz goes to Berlin. That trip is known. Also known is his mental agony when he decides to submit his resignation if the order would really remain in force. The road he is to go with regard to his own self is clear to him, but he feels depressed thinking of his men who have to stay on. word that pursues him. Streckenbach's benevolence made this possible; he is, according to the defendant Dr. Six, the good spirit of the RSHA. And owing to his support the course for applicants for the executive service is called off at the same time. This way Schulz at least detached those men who had been entrusted to his supervision during the time they stayed at the leaders' school. Schulz is still in Berlin. H e is also being notified.

Einsatzkommando on the very day he left Berditschew on 24 August 1941. About 15 September 1941 he returns to Skwira without interfering anymore in executive matters. He is merely waiting for Meyer's arrival, who comes on 21 September 1941, possibly already on 20 September. When Dr. Rasch arrives to see him on 24 September on a trip to Kiev he makes his final official report and returns the following day to his office in Berlin. it says the 29th. The other date is not correct. It is the 24th of August. That becomes quite evident from the context. transfer of his Kommando to Skwira, in order to remove it from the sphere of influence of Jeckeln. occurrence end to save his men from the equally terrible consequences of this order. But the order to kill women and children and innocent Jews he never executed. This is proved alone by the fact that in the town of Berditschew with its large Jewish population no Jew was shot as long as Schulz was stationed there with the exception of those who had fought as partisans. He had them all employed as indispensable workers in order to be able to prevent the carrying out of the order.

The statements of the defendant Schulz proved:

1.) by Schulz Exhibit No. 44 in Schulz Document No. 20, Volume I, pp. 68-72 and by the statement of the witness Hartel. his term of service with the Einsatzgruppen could not be produced since they are either killed, dead, or missing, and on my inquiries to the internment camps of the Western Zones I received the answer that they were not found in the camps.

An important witness is Regierungsrat Dr. Krieger who was surrendered to Czechoslovakia. In the first place he can prove that Schulz in Lemberg put an end to the ill-treatment of the Jews and released all Jews found in the place. He also is the person who warned Schulz that in the group staff, to which Dr. Krieger belonged, they "talked very badly about him." did not behave in a way different from what he had done in any other place.

conclusion that the assignment in Russia in particular is the best proof that SCHULZ hasalways followed a course which he could justify before his conscience, before his country, and before the world. from two aspects. For at the time when Schulz went away the German press and radio announced that Russia was actually defeated. And when Kiev fell and at the same time the troops had occupied the Donetz territory and advanced along the Dnjestr River, it was proclaimed that Russia had been crushed. Germany had then reached the absolute peack of its victories. And just at this time when many presumptuously give themselves a free hand Schulz returned to Berlin because he had experienced the bitterest disappointment of his life. detail the various phases of my client's assignment in Russia; also because of the lack of time available to me I must necessarily be brief. the units of Jeckeln which can be considered proved, by the co-defendants as well as the documents on hand, in particularly however by the documents submitted by the Prosecution itself, i.e. Prosecution Exhibit No. 27, Volume I, p. 138 of German text (English text p. 105) Doc. No. NO 3257PS, a report to the Chief of the War Economy Office, General Thomas, dated 2 December 1941. The defendant has made detailed statements as regards this document in his direct examination-- German transcript pp. 973/74). Since the messages of the Kommando were reports of events and not reports on itsown activity -- so-called activity reports -- it can be considered a fact that everything happening in the area of the Kommando is contained in these reports, in other words also what was occasioned by other unitsof the Wehrmacht and of Jeckeln. Likewise I should like to mention once more the misleading reports which in my opinion were justified from an ethical point of view and which were forwarded on the initiative of my client, containing, however, no lies.

If the staff leader himself exaggerates these reports urged by the craving for selfassertion of the Einsatzgruppe and even the RSHA for the same or similar reasons adds new changes, the defendant Schulz cannot be blamed for this. If in spite of this the reports contained in the documents clearly make apparent his reticence with respect to actions as well as to the reporting in itself, then this fact must also be evaluated in favor of my client. But in distinction hereto, how different is the first report of his successor: This different speaks for itself. of my trial brief as follows: (1) Whenever the Einsatzkommando of the defendant Schulz was active, in each case such action was preceded by actions of the Russian enemy in some form or other. As to the multiplicity of his hidden work of undermining, Schulz has given a detailed explanation on the witness stand (English transcript pp. 952-953, German transcript pp. 967-969).

(2) But the inner repudiation of the military measures in the East on the part of the defendant Schulz was not unknown. This is proven by the statements of the witnesses Weber, Hennicke, Sperrhake, Haefner, Bendt in their affidavits and the statement of the witness Hartl on the witness stand. The latter statement has yet a special value because it proves -- as does the statement of Bendt -- that there was talk of the alleged softness and unsuitability of Schulz at the time when he was no longer in Russia at all, for both Hartl and Bendt did not come to Russia until Schulz had left there. But the conflict between emotion and right explained by Schulz also shows that he did not act in a thoughtless way. But his clear deliberation and conduct are also evidence proving that faced with what he had done and what he had left undone he had no feeling of being wrong and did not need to have such feelings.

which he believed he could no longer tolerate for himself and for his men washe induced to request his release. But also the fact that almost at the same time his transfer had already been requested due to his alleged "softness" confirms the truth of his statements and his attitude.

(3) With this attitude I believe to have substantiated, and also proven that Schulz did not commit any crimes against humanity since all inner and outer prerequisites are lacking which could identify the crime according to generally acknowledged international views.

(4) Since the defendant neither sawnor wanted crimes but detested and prevented them he can neither be principal nor participant nor instigator nor abettor.

(5) His general behavior incontestably proves that he never gave his approval apart from the fact that he in no case ever ordered an execution.

(6) The shooting of guilty persons can neither be viewed as a persecution for political reasons but, in consideration of the existing situation in Russia, which cannot be denied, as a measure dictated by the exigencies of war for the protection of the fighting troops.

(7) The same applies to the shooting of Jews, They were shot to death not because they were Jews but because they were Russian, Communist functionaries, agents, spies, or saboteurs and had made themselves guilty of acts which had been publicly announced as liable to be punished with death. Any persecution for racial or religious reasons is therefore completely out of the question.

(8) From what hasbeen stated above, it is also evident that it does not apply to the defendant Schulz when it is alleged that the main duty consisted in following the army and in exterminating Jews, gypsies, Soviet functionaries, and other groups of the civilian population considered racially "inferior" or "politically undesirable"; that means in no form did he take part in any extermination asalleged by the Prosecution.

ordered nor participated in and much less committed a murder, as the Prosecution terms the ruthless compliance with and execution of the Fuehrer order.

(9) No ill-treatment of prisoners of war or of the civilian population took place nor would it leave been tolerated by Schulz. Also in Russia he demanded correctness and decency from his men.

(10) As at the time of Schulz no destruction of any object took place, also the charge of wanton destruction not justified by military necessity is completely invalid.

(11) Schulz never had anything to do with insane persons.

(12) At the time of Schulz' assignment in Russia nothing at all was known of the existence of gas vans.

measures taken in the East. But it also proves that Schulz openly professes his opinion and wants to do so intentionally. When he expresses in front of the assembled leaders his intention to exclude from the course because of inferior character anybody boasting of having shot a Jew because with such an attitude he is unworthy of being an officer, then this proves that Schulz does not change his mind on his return from Russia, but still intends to prevent the pernicious effects of this incrimination.

No human being is without faults. And not even Schulz raises such claim for himself. However, based on the experiences which I have gained as a result of my relationship with the defendant, I should like to say: "Had Schulz not been in Russia, then he would not have had the opportunity to prove so unequivocally that he allowed nothing to force him to deviate from the path of decency, justice and humanitarianism which he observed determinedly for almost 25 years in his police activity. The responsibility which he assumed was greater than his "self-concealment". The responsibility which he took upon himself in the interests of people which in every way could have resulted in serious consequences for him presupposed a stronger and bettor will than tacit and connivance. He did not leave until he realized that he was completely incapable of stopping this avalanche which had already begun its course and could no longer be halted. Under the set of circumstances prevailing his own protest was bound to be of no avail. the defendant Schulz did himself. were restricted. However, in the decree dated 13 May 1941 concerning the evvect of the court martial jurisdiction in the area "Barbarossa" and concerning special measures of the troops -- this is the so-called Keitel-Order and was submitted to the tribunal in Document Book III for the defendant Ohlendorf on page 1 as Ohlendorf Exhibit No. 13, Ohlendorf Document No. 44 -- it is ordered in I, sub-section 4, that the officer shall decide whether a shooting is to be carried out or not. Since the leaders of the Teilkommando were officers of the Teilkommando, Schulz would have had no authority at all over his Teilkommando leaders. According to this, he could not have either prevented an action or intervened if his Teilkommando leaders had violated the restriction of the Fuehrer-Order ordered by him on his own initiative.

action who issued such orders, for they must have been aware to what they would lead. of 1 December against the defendant Schulz can deter from these facts and the resulting conclusions. For the conclusions of the Prosecution for the most part are based on a distortion of the true facts which became quite obvious in the presentation of evidence. The Prosecution brief refers only to contradictions on the part of the defendant which however on the basis of the text of transcript reveal themselves as no contradictions at all. To the contrary, the brief of the Prosecution contains itself a number of contradictions. at a final conclusions different from that of the defense. But this must not lead to an arbitrary attempt to use as the basis of argumentation -- this also in contrast to the views of the court -- only such evidence that appears incriminating only to one side, and to disregard all defense evidence that has been before the tribunal from the very beginning or was introduced by the Prosecution itself. Fair proceedings, however, require equal consideration and evaluation of either evidence as well as an examination of the subjective conduct of the accused. Yet I have explained in sufficient detail particularly the subjective attitude of the defendant Schulz toward all matters and incidents, and I am certain that the Tribunal in its way will take this into account. defendant is full of contradiction, that it is completely untrue, that it appears grotesque, that it does not merit any credibility, that its statements lack any basis whatsoever, that they do not correspond to the facts, and so on, nor is it appropriate to draw the conclusion, and I quote:

"In the light of all this evidence his entire testimony cannot be considered credible." pointed out and brought to the attention of the Tribunal which are the incorrect facts and erroneous conclusions in the prosecution brief. I, therefore, ask the court also to take cognisznce of the supplementary statements which I have made in that connection. to discuss point by point the written statements made by the prosecution. My present statements, just as those made by me before, which are neither artificial, nor merely protective, nor made because of the need for distortion of facts, permit only one conclusion. II of the indictments evidence for the guilt of the defendant Schulz, eliminating all reasonable doubts which might be held by an impartial, unbiased and carefully deliberating party. judgment, that: crimes against humanity of which he has been accused in the indictment. could be made against the defendant either concerning the time up to 1 September 1939, or that after his return from Russia, which I have described concluding with a quotation from his speech of 1 November 1941 held in the instruction course for candidates for leading positions, neither for his activities in Berlin nor for those in Salzburg, that the statement was accepted as truth that he had no knowledge of any criminal activities (English transcript p. 1015-1017 1931, German transcript 1026 1028, 1977), I think it necessary to sum up his activities up to the time of the capitulation as I wish to furnish evidence, as already announced in my statement, that my client's attitude was from the first to the last undiscriminating, uncompromising, honest and straightforward, and that he never disregarded the principlesof fairness and decency, justice, chivalry and humanity which were sacred to him.

My second reason for giving this summary is that I need not then go into details about Count III of the indictment.

duties as a commander of the officers' training school (Fuehrerschule) and as a leader of Group I B (training and education) which has been moved from RSHA headquarters to the schoolhouse in Charlottenburg. Apart from his disappointment in Russia he is depressed by the fact that he has again been accused of being "soft", an accusation against which he is forever fighting in vain. He recognizes in it the dangerous influence of "modern slogans" to which people are reacting without actually understanding them and, therefore, interpreting them and using them incorrectly. For this reason he quite deliberately changes the whole training system, giving it a new, purely technical trend herewith putting emphasis on the development of a righteous attitude. He personally takes care of the final directives to his students. He points out to them valueless slogans and makes them aware of differences in attitude and teaches them how to separate the important from the valueless. He requests the future officers to be true leaders of their men and not only superior officers who stupidly and carelessly carry out orders. They ought to live a life exemplary to their subordinates and try to show themselves worthy of their authority by their own attitude and accomplishments, and not regard it as an easily acquired possession gained together with the service rank and commission. He emphatically warns against the misuse of the idea of the "super-man" (Herrenmensch) and shows that this term might earily lead to the development of the type of the "bossy man" (herrischer Mensch) who is to be considered as a being of definitely inferior character. He compares the conceptions of "kindness " and "softness" and proves that they are basically different from each other, According to him being "good" is fulfilling one of the major aims of humanity whereas being "soft" means a definite flaw in a person's character. And just as different as the conceptions of "kindness" and "softness" are those of "harshness"and"brutality". A person of character must know how to be harsh, first of all towards himself, in the imperturbab ility of his aims and ways, but "brutality" an attitude caused by a mean character, must be rejected.

The "Fuehrertype" (leader type) would have to be kind and harsh at the same time, and harshness might strange as it might sound - mean greatest kindness. The "vorgesetztentyp" (superior officers' type) however, would be either "bossy" or brutal towards others and disgustingly soft towards himself. I can only take highlights from the long speeches of my client which may throw some light on his real aims. He tried to make his students think, his purpose being that of causing them, when they were called upon to make their own decisions in the future, to be aware of the conflicts to find the courage to take responsibility for their own actions and in such a way to be leaders of their men whose fate had been entrusted to them and to lead them according to the principle that a living example is the best education. of the defendant Schulz in the officers' training school and the I B.

I am referring to his statements on the witness stand (English transcript o. 1019/20, German transcript o. 1030/1031). I should like to emphasize the fact that Schulz declares himself willing to take over only under the condition that there would be no more shooting of Jews in the East as he does not want to be responsible for having to detail men for tasks which he is not prepared to take upon himself.

Streckenbach definitely reassures him about this and he actually had no information about such happenings at that time. This fact is also proved by some affidavits for instance those of the defendants Ohlendorf, Naumann and Ott (English transcript, o. 709, 870, 3731, German transcript p. 720, 801, 3794) who stated that no more shootings of Jews were carried out at that time. Should there actually have occurred anything contrary to this statement, my client had certainly no knowledge of it. which he is only gradually becoming acquainted is trying to makes his influence felt. He is also now, for the first time, gaining personal experience from the real tendencies which are guiding the RSHA. quarrel, Streckenbach leaves the RSHA in January 1943, in order to join the Waffen-SS, Schulz is appointed

Leader of the Amt I. It is by no means ambition which makes him accept this duty. It is again Streckenbach's request to which he gives way although these very serious misunderstandings between Streckenbach and Himmler do not make him visualize this task in a rosy light. However, as all problems concerning "Administration and Law" which had up to that time been handled by Office I and with which Schulz cannot cope because of his lack of experience and knowledge, are being separated from it and now handled by an independent Amt, Office II or III, he thinks himself capable of managing Amt I as one which concerns itself only with personnel problems. As Kaltenbrunner is being appointed the new RSHA chief at the same time he hopes to be able to assert himself. From the time of his work with Amt I and also from Streckenbach's manifold complaints which have, in the end, caused his resignation from the office, Schulz knows that there is still very much wrong. It is especially the duties of the Security Police in the East with its partisan-activities which seem to him tasks alien to ordinary police duties. which he regarded as amateurish play at soldiering and which caused him so much concern because he believed he could recognize that they were accorded primary importance by a few ambitious leaders who were striving more for decorations and medals.

Therefore, during one of the initial department chief conferences he put forth as his first demand the creation of an office of the Inspector General, who, independent of all departments, was to check the various offices in the operational area. His demand is rejected. But in a personal discussion with Kaltenbrunner, he succeeds in having an inspector assigned, the Colonel of the Police, Dr. Canaries, who receives the order to make a tour of the Eastern territories and to submit a complete replrt sparing no details of the conditions there. The result of this report is a complete clean-up of improprieties and insufficiencies which h ad been uncovered; in addition this also resulted in the release of some personnel. In his inaugural speech before the directors of the various offices, Schulz, in agreement with Kaltenbrunner reports that the offices in the East are to refrain completely from all duties not directly connected with police activities. He is further successful in having the requirement of Himmler lifted, that in cases of promotion the individual concern ed must leave the church. He coordinates the schooling system through Group I A and gives priority to technical training. He creates directives pertinent to careers, promotions according to seniority rights, regulates efficiency and ability, eliminates arbitrary action and the patronage system and regulates an equitable development in the many Sparten. His efforts to revise the unworthy classification and uniforming along the lines of common sense cannot be fully realized. His work with Kaltenbrunner is in the beginning satisfactory. But the relationship becomes less favorable. Schulz senses the forces working against him, but is unable to get at them. He is not up to the stmosphere of the invisible battle of powers so common perhaps in the many ministerial offices, He perceives this condition quite clearly, but it does not occur to him to make his own lot an easier one through appeasement, since he is convinced that such appeasement would only be at the expense of the officials and employees.

Kaltenbrunner does not back him up, divides his activities in this respect by making concessions in personnel matters with other section chiefs contrary to the agreements with his personnel chief, he gives way to whispering campaigns which make a uniform following of procedure impossible. Already towards the end of 1943 it comes to an open break between the defendant Schulz and Kaltenbrunner;

Schulz requests that he be released, since he feels himself incapable of continuing in office. The differences are patched up again, but the breach remains open. It would have been simple for Schulz to keep his position if he had been willing to become an obliging tool. He remains in his post because his concern for the people binds him to this. However, he goes when the attitude of Kaltenbrunner which he can no longer reconcile with honor becomes insulting, and because he recognizes quite clearly that he will never be able to adapt himself to those conditions. of the defendant in Group I A and as Personnel Chief, I cite the statements of the defendant on the witness stand and the following affidavits:

In April 1944 Schulz is transferred to Salzburg as Inspector. In order not to make his transfer appear as an undeserved demotion, he receives the title "Commanding Officer of the Security Police," activity in Salzburg (English transcript p. 1021-1025, German transcript p. 1032-1037). However, his laudable efforts for the benefit not only of the population of Salzburg and the prisoners-of-war and foreign workers living in this section, but also in the last act of the tragedy in avoiding loss of human life in the face of the advancing victor, require a short summary on my part. If the day of the assasination attempt upon Hitler, 20 July 1944, passed in Salzburg without any unpleasant aftermath, then this is prim arily thanks to Schulz since he was forced to act quite independently because the Gauleiter was not present every day and the competent Higher SS and Police Leader was located in Laibach-Yugoslavia. When Himmler took over prisoner-of-war matters, Schulz, on his own initiative, volunteered for this work aware of the responsibility of his action, in order to dissipate the influence of the Higher SS and Police Leader Roesener, who was a ruthless fanatic. He not only saw to it that the Geneva Convention was strictly adhered to, but also protect ed the prisoners-of-war from the unreasonable demands of some of the State and Party offices. He patiently accepted the attacks upon his own person in the interest of the cause, but nevertheless he was not deterred. Against the desire and will of some offices and cont rary to press released which had already been published, he saw to it that in cases of airraids the prisoners-of-war were also permitted shelter in the absolutely safe placed located in the Moenchsberg and Kapuzinerberg (mountains in Salzburg).

First he did not issue the announcement of the so-called "Closeeyes Order" (Augen zu Befehl). Contrary to this order, which he was quite incapable of comprehending, he called upon his police officials to conduct themselves decently and chivalrously.

For example, a flier who had landed in the Salzach was saved from drowning by policemen. Not until the order was announced from other quarters outside of the police and at the same time the rumor became rife that "Terror Fliers" were to be shot, did Schulz immediately call all of his police commanders to him and inform them of the contents of the order and at the same time expressly emphasized that there was not a word of truth in the alleged shooting order. With regard to the non-interference of the Police he announced in unmistakable terms that such conduct could not be reconciled with the profession of a police official, quite apart from the fact that similar conduct shown towards German aviators that had been shot down would undoubtedly cause violent protestations. For this reason Schulz forbade the forwarding of this order, and ordered that fliers who had been shot down be treated correctly and turned over immediately to the competent Wehrmacht authorities. And this happened. again consecrated his entire person to the interests of the people, after he realized that any resistance had become senseless and unjustifiable. All his successful efforts were not achieved without untiring work. Every phase could not be achieved without tenacious efforts, efforts which were based on convictions. Nothing happened which did not entail danger for the individual, since during those very days many persons were shot for alleged cowardness particularly upon the order of Himmler, who even announced his orders in the press and on the radio and himself was too much a coward to take the responsibility for the orders which he issued. he was successful in bringing about the lifting of the blockade around Salzburg, the Volkssturm was used only as constabulary, the explosive charges which had just been brought up were removed from the bridges, the so-called "Bundschuh-Befehl" which meant the committing of fighting and sabotage groups behind enemy lines, was not carried out, and lastly no Werewolf organizations were assigned.

His suggestion, made in the Salzburg government building in the presence of the responsible officials, to surrender the city of Salz burg and the Gau, was rejected. In the so-called "Alpenfestung" (Alpine Fortress) Schulz saw to it that quiet and order were observed.

On the day of surrender the American troops marched successfully into the city without a single sign of disorganization either in the city or Gau of Salzburg. manner because Schulz had been influenced in this direction. influenced his superior and other participating offices in this direction, and had to suffer many a bitter word, also from those very persons, who, contrary to their former attitude, later revealed themselves as the liberators of Salzburg from the miseries of war, and who were then too cowardly, at least for the sake of truth, to give Schulz the credit he deserved. I must admit that I myself was indignant over such conduct. I should like to offer another example here showing the inner greatness of my client, who following my outburst of anger, answered: "Let it go, they're simply human beings. I didn't do this simply to gain recognition." in Salzburg is proved through his own testimony on the witness stand, which even the prosecutor recognized as completely credible (English transcript, p . 1934, German transcript p. 1980) and the credibility of which is again repeated on the occasion of the interrogation of the witness Dr. Wolfgang Laue (English transcript, p. 1929-1933, German transcript 1975-1980) and by the following affidavits:

Also his resolution and devotion in the interests of the people must be particularly mentioned. Lt. Col. Barck speaks of the "unusual decent thinking" of my client thanks to which the Geneva Convention was able to be defended in the Military Area XVIII against the attacks of high Party offices even after the reorganization of the chain of command in October 1944. He also states that he could not remember ever having seen any conduct on the part of Herr Schulz which could not have been an example for every police officer. attributes as leader and superior officer:

"It gives me great satisfaction to render some assistance in return, to the man to whom I possibly owe my father's life by making this truthful statement". End of quotation. However, I do not want to conclude the Salzburg episode without mentioning: If Salzburg is still standing comparatively undamaged, if its people have been spared the horrors of battle, and if Salzburg, already in 1945, was again able to open its gate to the world with its "Salzburg Festivals", this can be ascrib ed to a great extent, as has been proved by the witnesses' testimony, to the untiring efforts on the part of my client. American headquarters in Zell am See, after having made arrangements down to the last detail, to account for his person and principles, which he had upheld, and he did so without prompting, evidently causing surprise by this action. Following his request, he was given permission on 17 May 1945 to go to Salzburg in order to report there. He received a pass, and went to Salzburg without any escort. True to his promise, he immediately reported there. In the afternoon he was arrested. He had to be detained because of the "automatic arrest order", as he was politely informed.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Durchholz, I notice in glancing through the rest of your summation that there are various itemizations of proof, which, of course, you can omit in the reading. You might glance through it and see if there is anything else you may omit as you finish up after the recess because you have already exhausted the time which was allotted to you. We will permit you to finish, of course, but please go through and cross out what isn't necessary to read to the Court.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: I shall read only the necessary parts and refer to the remainder.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. The Tribunal will show be in recess for 15 minutes.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. SCHWARZ: Your Honor, according to the arrangements which have been made, it was my turn after my colleague, Ulmer, which probably will be this afternoon, to present my final plea, but I heard this morning that my final plea has been translated but has not been reviewed yet. I assume that the Tribunal does not have it as yet. I now would like to ask you to find out-

PRESIDENT: We do not have it?

THE MARSHAL: No, Sir.

PRESIDENT: The answer is "No".

DR. SCHWARZ: Your Honor, in that case I would like to ask you when I should start to present my final plea so that the Tribunal can make further arrangements, and who is to continue after Dr. Ulmer.

PRESIDENT: W ell, Dr. Durchholz, we understand that Blobel's plea is ready, Sandberger, Seibert, Steimle. There are many ready, according to this list which I received. Yes, we have Steimle, we have Biberstein, Six.

DR. SCHWARZ: Then I may assume that I have to wait for the time being for presenting my final plea until the English translation is on hand.

PRESIDENT: Yes. Very well.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Durchholz for Schulz. Your Honor, of the rest of my final plea I shall read such part as will take about 10 minutes. The fifth part I shall not read at all, but I shall continue on page 53, the sixth part. The fifth part contains only a list of exhibit numbers to which I would like to draw the Tribunal's attention. Thus I have submitted my client's professional career from 1923 - 1945 in the shortest possible manner, and I will now deal with count III of the indictment, in which my client is accused of having been a member, after 1 September 1939, of those organizations which have been declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal, and pursuant to para graph 1 (d) of article II of Control Council Law No. 10.

In count IIIA he is accused of having been a member of the SS, and in count III C of having been a member of Department IV of the Reich Security Main Office. Being equally applicable to both counts, I would like to mention in advance that my client was not in a position to resign from the SS or the Security Police on 1 September 1939, as the war laws prohibited this action. I believe I need not comment on this any further, as these points were thoroughly discussed and explained both by all the defendants on the witness stand, and also by my colleagues. In this case of my client, however, it must be added that at the time in question, he did not receive any orders with criminal contents, nor did he issue any. On the contrary, he could convince himself that in his position he was able to eliminate much hardship, and to prevent many measures, especially by party circles, tending to extremes and intolerance. He could not anticipate, though, the happenings that developed in the course of the war. Yet the Russia Einsatz proves that in this instance he cut adrift from those happenings, which he did not deem reconcilable with his opinions and his conscience. As member of Department I, however, he has been a part to any of the actions with which he is charged, nor participated in the planning or execution; he was not even informed about them. Allow me to mention just a few items of those orders concerning the sorting out of prisoners of war, the night - and fog decree, the bullet (Kugel) -decree, the mass killings of Jews in Auschwitz, Maidanek, and Treblinka; Schulz, for the first time, learns about these through the Nuernberg trials. Treblimka, Maidanek, Belsen, and many other places mentioned in this trial, were not known to him even by name until now. However, in the case of my client it should not be necessary to go into details, as his proven attitude and his official positions excluded the possibility to commit any criminal acts, or to have participated in them in any way whatsoever.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: I shall omit point 2, and will not read it. It contains general legal explanations concerning Count III. I am referring to my written statements and to the statements which my colleagues, Aschenauer and Gawlik, have made on that count before me. I continue on page 56 under figure 3. Applying those principles, I now return to the defendant SCHULZ concerning count III A regarding membership in the SS. The SS special formation Security Service (SD) is not a part of the regular SS. On 20 April 1935 the defendant SCHULZ was, without ever having filled in the prescribed application form, taken over by this formation as SS-Hauptsturmfuehrer, according to his official rank as an officer - he was a police captain at that time. He never saw active service in the regular SS. By his consecutive promotion as officer and official, he was also promoted in the SS. In order to show, too, that his advancements were by no means outstanding, I submit some of his promotion data. On 1 September 1931 SCHULZ was promoted 1st Lieutenant (SCHULZ-Exhibit No. 2). On 1 February 1934 he became a captain (SCHULZ-Exhibit No. 3). His next promotion took place on 1 March 1938. On that date, he is simultaneously transferred from the ordinary police to the Security Police. As this force did not have officer ranks at that time, he was not promoted to major, but appointed Regierungsrat. On 1 July 1940 he was promoted Oberregierungsrat. At the end of 1940, when the Security Police receives officer ranks within its own organization, SCHULZ returns to his officer's career, and on 1 December 1940, he becomes lieut,-colonel according to his official rank of Oberregierungsrat, senior government counsillor. This conversion does not constitute a promotion. At the beginning of 1941 he is promoted to colonel (SCHULZ-Exhibit No. 10). His promotion to brigadier general follows after approximately 2 years at the end of October 1942. I am unable to submit a document for this, as SCHULZ did not have it returned with his papers. As all the last original documents are missing, my client assumes that they are still in the possession of the CIC.

When he was interrogated in Oberursel by Herr 1st Lieut. GUTMANN, they were still complete. This was his last promotion. It took place - not counting his army service - after 20 years of uninterrupted service in the police force. SCHULTZ was then 43 years old. The SS promotions coincide with these other promotions. An exception is his promotion to SS-Oberfuehrer on 9 November 1941, because there was no equivalent officer rank for this position. This promotion constitutes an intermediary stage, which cannot be actually called a promotion, as it did not involve any pay raise, because SCHULZ was not paid as an SS-officer but as a police officer. These facts, too, prove that this promotion was an absolutely regular one. This promotion therefore, which had to take place between the official rank of colonel and brigadier general, is nothing exceptional. This is proved by, 1st, the defendant's regular career, 2nd his testimony on the witness stand (English transcript, p. 1111 - 1112). German transcript p. 1128 - 1129) , and in connection with this the testimony of the defendant BLUME on the witness stand (Engl. transcript p. 1925 - 1926, German transcript, p. 1972 - 1973), and 3rd my explanations on p. 667 - 69 in the trial brief. For SCHULZ and the other officers in the Security Police the simultaneous promotions in the SS were a compelling necessity, as the uniform of the Security Police was the same as that of the Waffen-SS with police drab cloth. If the promotions in the SS had not taken place, therefore, the officers would not have been able at all to wear their rank insignia. Thos points mentioned by me above are actually all that connected the defendant with the SS.

Reich Security Main Office. Here I can be quite brief. in April 1940 (SCHULZ-Exhibit No. 7), SCHULZ leaves Department IV, to which he belonged automatically till then as official in charge of the Bremen and Reichenberg State Police branches, and from then on till the surrender he is a member of Department I. As an inspector he neither has the right to give orders, nor does he have any executive powers. In this connection I refer to my client's testimony on the witness stand, as well as to the testimony by the witness BREDER concerning the work and tasks of the inspector.

On 1 March 1941 he joins Department I for good. He becomes Group Leader I B (schools and education), and commander of the training center for future National Socialist leaders (Fuehrerschule), which also belonged to Department I. At the end of June 1942 he becomes the officer in charge of Group I A (personnel) in Department I. mains there until he assumes his duties as inspector in Salzburg on 1 May 1941. What has been said about his Hamburg activities, also applies to his Salzburg work, as it is the same official position. In this case, too, he did not have any authorization to give orders nor executive powers, (in this connection I am referring to the testimony made by the witness PEUKERT in SCHULZ Exhibit No. 59), with the exception of the last 14 days, during which time he was additionally appointed SS and Police leader. influence, as he did in Salzburg, and, in the interest of the people concerned, was able to accomplish so much, this achievement should be emphasized so much more. Reich Security Main Office Department I has not been declared a criminal organization. Besides, the prosecution - as mentioned before - has Court No. II, Case No. IX.

expressly stated that they are prepared to admit that the defendant, while in the Reich Security Main Office, after his return from Russia and in his position of inspector of the Security Police and the Security Service in Salzburg, did not commit any acts, nor have any knowledge of such, which would make him guilty in the sense of count III of the indictment. Deducting the actual marching days and the journey, this covers approximately 4 weeks. Just 4 weeks out of a man's career of almost 25 years, of a man's unblemished work, a man whose personality in his life and activities lies before us like an open book not containing any secrets, who is equally respected by friend and foe. The tragedy which occurs during this short space of time is full of conflicts and tensions, from which he attempts to escape and succeeds in doing so, however, only withdrawing after severely struggling with his conscience as he has no means to check the course of events. Even if mistakes have been made, in spite of all the efforts, the overwhelming compulsion must be duly taken into account. His intention to avoid the deplorable effects of the mandatory Fuehrer order cannot be denied. Can he be blamed for not only having done the best he could in his position, but actually having accomplished it? Nobody can demand more than what the defendant has actually done. It frequently happens, however, that the point is missed, if the question of guilt is solely determined by external matters, as the decisive factors result from the person's struggle with his conscience; it is possible to speak both with words and with deeds. If in spite of all efforts, mistakes have been found, I would like to use the words which the witness BREDER used at the end of his testimony. I quote: "I cannot find any other explanation but that by thoughtfully weighing the extent of guilt and destiny in this man's case, the deliberations can only ascribe this guilt to his destiny."

which proved that my client could not be induced by anything to leave his unblemished, clear, and straight path. also applies to count III, and I request the count to decide accordingly, i.e.: reasonable doubt that he was the accomplice to crimes committed by the organizations and groups, which have been declared criminal, and of which he was a member. No judgment can be passed, however, if there is only a suspicion. Therefore, he is not guilty in the sense of count III of the indictment. fidavits that have been submitted. An official of the Bremen branch office says in SCHULZ-Exh. No. 17, I quote; "If all the superiors of the Gestapo would have been like him, the Gestapo would not have been declared a criminal organization." - End of quotation. Another official says in SCHULZ-Exh. No. 15, I quote:

"During my 21 years of service in the police force I never came to appreciate and respect a superior as much as just Herr SCHULZ." End of quotation. I have already quoted the statement made by Kriminal Rat HASSE, who was in Reichenberg, and who calls him the teach of his life. Regierungsrat GOTTWAID from Department I, says in SCHULZ-Exh. No. 51, I quote: "Both as official and officer SCHULZ had qualities which I have really rarely found to such an outstanding extent in any of my superiors, during decades in the service." - End of quotation.

INTERPRETER: There is a confusion in the figures contained in the document, Lour Honor.

PRESIDENT: Our copy seems to be in order, what is the difficulty?

INTERPRETER: Our copy doesn't contain the same as the defense counsel, and quite different figures are given.

PRESIDENT: Well, Dr. Durchholz, look at the English copy.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: I have it here.

PRESIDENT: Oh, you have it there.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Your Honor, I find that this one quotation is not contained in the English copy. There must have been a mistake. I shall omit it and continue at the next point, so that we can get on.

PRESIDENT: If you desire, you may submit that on a separate piece of paper to the Tribunal.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: I shall hand this addition in to the Tribunal when I get it.

PRESIDENT: Very well.

A woman employee from Salzburg says in SCHULZ-Exh. No. 86, I quote: "Herr SCHULZ's attitude towards the old established Austrian population was so considerate that one could only wish to have many more such noble, valuable, and idealistic people in that country." End of quotation. Many other witnesses confirm this. His kindness and readiness to help, his humane feelings and chivalry are always the crux of all those testimonies. Wherever he was, he did his duty as a shining example, always acting in the conviction that by his influence he was able to prevent or alleviate distress and disaster. He went his own way. He recognized the falsehoods and opposed them by his actions. He was not interested to be known as or called a man of the "resistance", although this privilege has been given many Germans purely on account of their thoughts or occasional statements, without any actions. He only wants to be judged by what he really did. His actions, however, prove his convictions. And this without interruption from 1923 up to the surrender. He never had any other aims but to serve his country and all humanity. In conclusion I would like to request the Court to examine thoroughly the affidavits given by his former political opponents, all of whom are now in leading and highest positions, and to weigh, to ponder, and to consider accordingly.

I personally, however, would appreciate if by the Court's decision the defendant's attitude is eventually recognized not as "meekness", but Court No. II, Case No. IX.

as an unswerving and determined will to achieve the good.

Mr. President, your Honors, in concluding this plea I want to mention the phrase which the American officer, who interrogated my client in Salzburg, used at the close; I quote: "If all people had acted as you did, things would be different in Germany, I daresay!" End of quotation.

PRESIDENT: Proceed, Dr. Ulmer.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Your Honor, in the name of all the defense counsel, I would like to say something. Until now we have not yet received a copy of the final plea of the defendant Ohlendorf. The colleagues who want to submit their final pleas after me would be very grateful if the Tribunal would assist them in getting them copies of this final plea of Ohlendorf, because then they would be able to cross cut some passages from their final pleas, but they can only do that if they have in their possession their copies of Ohlendorf's plea.

PRESIDENT: Will the Secretary General interest himself in what has just been said by Dr. Durchholz, to see to it that defense counsel receive copies of the Ohlendorf summation inGerman? Very well.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Thank you.

PRESIDENT: Dr. Ulmer.

contact with such a range of tasks. of the defendant SIX is that of a man of science. His development shows a man with an academic background who, after having finished his studies, applied himself to the profession of a University lecturer and remained bound to this calling, conscious of his aims. His fields of research concerned journalism and studies on foreign countries and his academic goal was the establishment of an institute on foreign countries after the Anglo-Saxon pattern of "Political Science". As a University professor he was consistent in demanding and insisting upon freedom of teaching and research as against the doctrinaire efforts of National Socialims. was the underlying cause for the newly created SD seeking in 1935 the cooperation of this young, but already well-known, press expert for the establishment of a press department. Realizing the possibility thus offered for his scientific university work of evaluating the vast material of the whole world press available in the SD, SIX accepted this task and established a press-and literature department within the SD. Thus the University Professor SIX had become an SD member. Also in the future, the scientific goal preceded the political. He continued to be a full-time University professor; it was only in off-time hours and in an honorary capacity that he was an SD-leader. of defendant Dr. SIX's scientific standing and exclusively scientific activity, but from the symbiosis of science and SD, it wants to represent him as a typical National Socialist doctrinaire.

refutable on the strength of the facts. While no difficulties resulted for Professor SIX during his scientific activity, continued controversies developed both between him and the SD and particularly its leaders, which began already shortly after his joining. In 1938 his relationship to the chief of the Reich Main Security Office, HEYDRICH, had aggravated in such a way that the latter denounced him as being intellectual, soft and in the sense of the SD, not efficient enough, and after numerous clashes finally, in 1939, he removed him from his office as departmental chief in the Reich Main Security Service. SIX, on his side, already then repeatedly demanded his discharge from the SD, which HEYDRICH, however, constantly refused, pointing out that it was he alone who would decide when and under which circumstances an SS-Officer was allowed to leave the SD. already shows that the University Professor SIX did not sacrifice his scientific work to National Socialist tendencies and power politics of the SD. The defendant, however, did not give up his scientifically liberal and tolerant line acquired already during his University student days, or changed it for the support of National Socialist doctrines or pseudoscientific ideologies. He remained a man of science also in the SD, without indulging in adulation towards the SD leadership, which was the very reason why he got into difficulties with HEYDRICH and did not come in any way close to HIMMLER. He never made verbal reports to the latter and did not see him but four or five times at the most, as he stated himself as a witness during his cross-examination - Page 1466 of the German record - and as it was confirmed in the affidavits by GROTHMANN and SUCHANEK - documents of the defense 19 and 20, Exhibit No. 19 and 20.

1 September 1939, continued to be in the SD merely in a compulsory way, as an unimportant member, without any office and influence, removed from the function hitherto held by him, and in HEYDRICH's personal disfavor. Only as late as at the beginning of November 1939 HEYDRICH reassigned him to the SD for a special scientific job, commissioning him to set up the Office for "Ideology and Scientific Research" - Office VII -. This task the defendant SIX completed, not on a political basis, but as a professor beholden to scientific principles, calling into existence, just as he would have done in his main sphere of activity, the universities, an office organized on strictly scientific lines and staffed with suitable experts. This was achieved by the consolidation into one whole of press, archive, library and research sections. As chief of this office VII SIX regarded historical research strictly limited to history of Arts and Sciences, to cultural history and history of foreign countries, as his main sphere of work. Publications which appeared as results of the research conducted under his supervision are evidence of the strictly scientific objectives of the Office and of the scientific elaboration of the themes, free of and remote from any politics and propaganda. Document No. L-185, presented by the prosecution in its Doc. Bock V-B, under Exh. No. 239, which contains the plan for the distribution of work in the RSHA, dated 1 March 1941, has already been commented on by the quotation. in the written pleas of the defense, of a substantial number of defense documents. That document actually refers to the defendant Dr. SIX as Chief of Office VII, although owing to his having been assigned to the Waffen SS from May 1940 to 1942 to the exclusion of any other activity, he could not actually have filled that position. The fact is, however, Court No. II, Case No. IX.

that just the section "Free masonry and Jewry" in group VII B is vacant.

Now there can be but little doubt that a chief, efficient operation of that section.

The prosecution docu ment in Doc.

Book V B No. L 219, Exh. No. 240, contains the 1943.

It shows that SIX had been replaced by Dr. DITTEL as Office Chief VII.

Only at this juncture the section "Free masonry and Jewry" which until then, under SIX's management, is being subdivided into two separate sections, VII b I "Free masonry" and VII b II "Jewry" and placed under section chiefs.

for reasons of time. On the other hand, numerous affidavits prove that during SIX's tenure of office questions concerning RSHA that was a special assignment of Office VII.

During the Court No. II, Case No. IX.

It has been proved in the course of these proceedings that SIX had not been consulted during the conference in Pretsch in connection with the formation of the Einsatzgruppen, and that the Fuehrer order, so indispensable for this procedure, had not been transmitted to him for guidance, either at the issuance of the order for the formation of an "Archiv-Kommando", later on named "Vorkommando Moscow" by SIX himself, or after its formation. This order, however, was a necessary instruction for the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos, and it was actually issued to them, viz. to all their leaders. "Vorkommando Moscow", then, was just another archives commission like those which had previously been set up for Paris, Brussels, the Hague, Oslo, Athens and Belgrade. It has become clearly evident during this tril that before, during and after the time when SIX headed this "Vorkommando Moscow", there existed considerable tension and even discrepancies of a nature most dangerous to SIX in the relations between him and HEYDRICH, and furthermore that wherever, in the pursuit of his task, he came into contact with NEBE, the chief of the Einsatzgruppe operating in the same area, there existed permanent dissension, disagreement and tension between the two of them as well. While Vorkommando Moscow was headed by SIX, there was no collaboration with the chief of Einsatzgruppa B, NEBE, but only independent operating side-by-side, a pulling in opposite directions and mutual frustration. From the very fact of the low strength of Vorkommando Moscow, numbering about 20 - 25 men, and its being staffed specially with scientists, interpreters and men familiar with the topography of Moscow, there emerges the contrast to the Einsatzkommandos which were organized quite differently in regard to personnel, strength and experience, that is, on the principles applying in the Security Police and the SD. The fact, however, Court No. II, Case No. IX.

that Professor SIX himself, Office Chief VII of RSHA, viz., a leader ranking equally with the head of Einsatzgruppe B, the Office Chief V NEBE, was appointed as leader of so small a unit as Vorkommando Moscow goes to prove that the Vorkommando was not just operating as a sub-unit of Einsatggruppe B engaged on some special task for the latter, but that there existed an independent and important sphere of work for Professor SIX and his Vorkommando Moscow. The "Reports of Events" mentioning the Vorkommando, which the prosecution presented as the only evidence intended to prove the alleged guilt of the defendant SIX in the sense of Counts I, 7 T and U of the indictment are devoid of any conclusive probative value. Most of these "Reports of Events" just feature harmless statements regarding the locations of Vorkommando Moscow and are, therefore, quite irrelevant so far as the contention of the prosecution is concerned. They do prove, however, that the statements of the defendant in regard to the objectives of the Vorkommando, its composition and its tasks are correct. Reports of Events No's 44 and 67 commenting on the safeguarding by the Vorkommando Moscow of material found in the House of the Soviets in Smolensk and the checking of 740 persons by the Vorkommando Moscow contain nothing aggravating for the defendant either; they rather bear out that the special Kommando (Vorkommando Moskau) was employed for tasks entirely different from those of the Einsatzkommandos. They, too, prove that its assignment was technically limited to the safeguarding of archives and that it was specially staffed with scientists and interpreters. But even the fact that Report of Events No. 73 of 4 September 1941 states that the Group Staff and VKM had shot a total of 144 persons between 22 July and 20 August, and that the VKM had shot 46 persons, among them 38 Jewish intellectuals, did not enable the prosecution to prove conclusively that the Court No. II, Case No. IX.

defendant SIX actually did commit the crimes laid to his charge in counts I and II of the indictment. The counter-evidence presented by the defense, however, is conclusive; the defendant's own statements and the submitted affidavits, furthermore the depositions of the co-defendants BLUME and KLINGELHOEFER, the analysis of these "Report of Events" and the counterproofs submitted by me in the written pleas. Once more I wish to summarize the results of the counter-evidence submitted by the defense in the solemn statement that the defendant, as leader of Vorkommando Moscow, never employed it in any activities ether than those in keeping with its assigned task, that is, the preparation and execution of pure safeguarding tacks in connection with archives, files and other documentary sources. The defense has demonstrated beyond doubt and proved by a wealth of documentary evidence that the VKM under the command of the defendant was a special Kommando independent of Einsatzgruppe B and quite different from the Einsatzkommandos in regard to nature and assignment. If the Report of Events No. 73 seems to give a different impression as far as the latter point is concerned, namely, that the combined quotation of Group Staff and VKM proves, that there existed a connection and a status of subordination, it is an assumption which also has bean refuted conclusively by the evidence of the Defense and by the analysis of the evidence submitted in the written briefs. Since, however, the incriminating Documents of the Prosecution, contained in Document Book V B, and the exonerating Documents of the Defense, contained in Document Book IV and supplements A and B have not been taken into consideration as yet in the written briefs, it is necessary to look into the matter of the incriminating Document of the Prosecution No. 5855, Exhibit No, 241, with particular reference to the counter-evidence Documents of the Defense, No. 62 and No. 68 Court No. II, Case No. IX.

in Document Book IV with supplement A and B. The Document of the Prosecution in question seems to incriminate the Defendant, and to refute his claim of defense, that the VKM was under his direction, separate from and independent of the Einsatzgruppe B. It is a receipt, given on 31 August 1941 to the witness Frau Veronika VETTER, who was interrogated in person, a receipt which shows the title of the issuing authority; "VKM of the Einsatzgruppe B - Security police and the SD" -. This heading had to be used, after the Defendant SIX had been relieved of his leading position of the VKM and had returned to Berlin. The Chief of the Einsatzgruppe B, NEBE, had placed the VKM under his command and that of his staff. The former member of the VKM Dr. Horst MAHNKE has stated the following under oath with regard to the matter at hand, confirming the statements of the Defendant, namely: In Defense-Document No. 62, Page 7/8, I quote: "The Heading "Vorkommando Moscow of the Einsatzgruppe B Security Police and the SD" can be explained as follows: After the departure of Professor SIX from Smolensk on 20 August 1941, the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe B, NEBE, carried out his previous attempts to get the VKM under his command in that manner, that he placed the Commando, which was left without a leader, under his own supervision and gave the order, that documents of the Commando were to be issued with this heading. This order was in force, until the Obersturmbannfuehrer KOERTING, who was sent by the Reich Security Main Office to Smolensk, took the Vorkommando Moscow over as an independent commando. This happened about the beginning of September 1941. Thereupon NEBE formed his own "Special Commando Moscow" of the Einsatzgruppe B, that was to carry out the special tasks of the Einsatzgruppe in Moscow."

In view of the fact, that the Defendant Dr. SIX had effected his release from the leadership of the VKM and his return to Berlin, the additional Reports of Events No. 92, 108 and 125 submitted by the Prosecution as incriminating Documents, charging the VKM with criminal activities, are no longer to be considered as incriminating Documents against the Defendant SIX, since they record alleged events, which took place at a later date. The evidence produced by the Defense, that the Defendant Dr. SIX was in fact relieved of his command of the VKM on 20 August 1941 and returned on this day to Berlin, has been proved conclusively, but it is necessary in this respect to elaborate on the statement of the witness VETTER before the court during the cross examination on 16 January 1948.

DR. ULMER: If you desire, Your Honor, this would be a suitable occasion for a recess.

THE PRESIDENTS: Very well. The Tribunal will be in recess until one forty-five.

(A recess was taken until 1345 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. ULMER for the defendant Six: May I now proceed.

3) Veronika Vetter, who submitted the Defense Document No. 11, Exhibit No. 11, has declared in her statement which she made under oath before the Defense Counsel, that, after the entry of the German troops in Smolensk,she had gone with her 12 month old child to the German office, which was directed by Professor Six and located in the large Police building in Smolensk, where she herself had been working six hours daily, and that she had left there on 20 August 1941 and returned to Germany. She stated further, that, knowing Professor Six and his closest co-workers Dr. Mahnke and Dr. Augsburg, she could not imagine, that they had been engaged at that time in the shooting of indigenous persons in Russia, but that she knows to the contrary that Herr Six and his associates had been very popular with the population in Smolensk. During her cross examination as witness, Frau Vetter in person has made statements, which are in contradiction to the dates, concerning the time she has spent together with Six in Smolensk, and which constitute a revocation of the sworn statement she made before the Defense, and in order to substantiate the correctness of the new dates she referred to the entries in her diary of that period, which she still had in her possession. First of all, it must be pointed out that, even though the witness has retracted her statement concerning the dates, which she had signed and which had been dictated in her presence, she has not turned from a witness for the Defense into a witness for the Prosecution. The witness tried of course to reconstruct, with the help of her diary, that she had come to Six and seen him in his office in Smolensk at the earliest and for the first time on 23 August 1941 and that his departure from Smolensk for Berlin could have taken place after 31 August only, but she did not incriminate him in any way during the cross-examination with regard to the Prosecution-counts I, 7 T and U, laid to his charge as former leader of the VKM.

Also in the witness box, she remained a witness for the Defense with regard to those incriminating facts, cited in the indictment against the Defendant Six. She testified, that - although she was present every day in the office building and residing in Smolensk - she never has observed any criminal acts committed by Six or carried out by the VKM and that she could not imagine that Six would have participated in such acts. To substantiate this opinion, she gave an excellent description of Six's personality and that of his closest associates Dr. Mahnke and Dr. Augsburg, whereby she did not conceal the fact, that she was an opponent to National-Socialism as well as Communism, which had robbed her of her husband. tements. However, she is in no way witness for dates, also not in connection with the argumentation of the Prosecution against the Defendant. The witness has made two different statements regarding the time interval of her presence with the Defendant in Smolensk and his departure from there. In her affidavit of 14 September 1947 she affirmed that after the entry of the Germans into Smolensk, she had gone to the German office which was located in the large police building, in order co make inquiries regarding her husband who had been carried off by the Russians, and that on this occasion she met Six. She affirmed, moreover, that Six had not remained chief of this office - it was the Vorkommando Moscow (VKM) - for long, but that he left it on 20 August 1941 and returned back to Germany. In the witness-stand she stated that the appeared for the first time at the VKM on 23 August 1941, and that she had seen Six for the first time on that occasion; that the latter was present there for some time to follow - for a brief time, to be sure - but certainly yet on 31 August 1941, until he returned to Berlin.

the statements she made on the witness-stand regarding the dates were true, because she referred to her diary entries of that time to support her memory, and to the fact, that she still claimed to know that a statement of confirmation was issued to her by the VKM under the date 31 August 1941 regarding the fate of her husband and signed by Dr. Mahnke, at a time when Six was still office chief in Smolensk, However the witness has proven on the witness-stand, that she has no memory for time and dates, whatsoever. She was not even able to say how much time had elapsed last summer in 1947, between the date on which she was approached for the first time by the wife of Defendant Six for bearing witness, and the 14 September 1947 when the Defense Counsel appeared at her place in Stuttgart to take her sworn statement. She still knew that Dr. Mahnke had told her of the celebration of defendant Six's birthday in Smolensk, but she no longer know when this birthday was to have taken place. It was on 12 August 1941. in a village in the proximity of Smolensk when the had withdrawn with the opening of the bombardment. But in that case she could have returned to Smolensk only between 10 and 15 September 1941 at the earliest, for the first German attack on Smolensk took place on 10 July 1941 and the artillery bombardment lasted from then until 4 August 1941. In this manner, however, the witness could not even have been again in Smolensk on 31 August 1941, when, she already was given the statement of confirmation, the issuing of which, however, obviously presupposes some time for the investigations which she had already previously requested. The witness, however, claims to take the data for her two months stay in the village directly from her diary. Since she wants to quote her return on 23 August 1941 likewise from the diary, she must have quit Smolensk already on the second day of battle, thus almost three weeks before the war approached Smolensk, while she claims to have not pulled out before the bombardment of Smolensk.

But here also her statements regarding the dates made on the witness-stand are fraught with contradictions, for she said at one time, that she had left the city with her child on 27 June, following the arrest of her husband - page 5262 - and later, she declared to the President of the Court, that she had gone into the village only while the city was being bombed - page 5236 - of the German Court Record. These dates do not agree at all, but show a discrepancy of more than two weeks. of the witness, and which was deliberately included by the Defense on 14 September 1947 at the time of the recording of the sworn statement for the illustrating of the time data, did not stand up to a subsequent examination. It concerns the statement which the witness allowed to be recorded in her affidavit, namely, that she was to have returned with her 12 months old child after the entry of the German troops into Smolensk, However, this child, according to the official confirmation by the Burgomaster of Korntal, submitted as Defense document No. 67 in my Document book IV was already 12 months old on 22 April 1941. It is well known that in small children the difference between the ages of 12 and 16 months is very significant and particularly indelible for a mother. However, not even in this respect are the data of witness Vetter correct, even though she expressly points out - as indicated on page 5274 of the Court Record - that one keeps familiar dates, such as marriage and birth in memory, in contrast to unusual events, such as the ones under discussion. Therefore, with respect to witness Vetter, one can only draw the conclusion, that she made the statements on the dates concerned, which are recorded in the affidavit for the Defense without an actual recollection of precise dates on her part. However, it cannot be deduced, that her subsequent information relating to dates must how be accurate, because the fact that the latter are not correct is demonstrable from the remaining evidence on file for this trial on this point. This evidence consists of the clear information relating to dates with respect to the defendant Six's return from Russia to Germany at the date given by the Defendant himself on the witness-stand, namely, the 20 and 21 August 1941, respectively.

To this are added the ascertainments regarding this point, as they are recorded in the sworn statements taken in part before the Defense Counsel, in part, however, also before disinterested, yet officially recognized notary public clerics, of Professor Walz, Exhibit No. 12, Burmester, Exhibit No. 13, Huppenkothen, Exhibit No. 49, Plautz, Exhibit No. 50, Mahnke, Exhibit No. 40, Mueller Exhibit No. 44, and Hilpert, Exhibit No. 45. in my written presentation of the case, as far as the confirmation of the date of the defendant Six's departure from Russia on 20 August 1941 may be gathered from them. The co-defendant Klingelhoefer, as a member of "Vorkommando Moskau" (Advance Command Moscow) of that time, has also affirmed in his statement on the witness-stand - page 3373 of the Court Record that Six left Smolensk on 20 August 1941.

Completely clear and unobjectionable evidence of SIX' renewed presence in Berlin already on 22 August 1941, has been given by the female witness ALANDER who was heard under oath in the witness stand on 22 January 1948. Finally, after hearing the female witness VETTER in cross-examination, in contrast to the dates given by her which could not possibly be correct, statements were asked for and laid down in affdavits, from other persons who at that time had either been together with SIX or met him, namely his two former commando comrades Dr. MAHNKE and Dr. AUGSBURG, his secretary Ilse RICHTER. These affidavits have been included under document No, 63, 68, 60 and 59, in the Document Book IV, resp. Appendix IV B, which latter has been compiled and submitted to the Tribunal after the hearing of female witness VETTER. In order to prove the exclusion of every possible error in these dates given by secretary RICHTER and Frau SIX, an official certificate from the German Red Cross - Klementinenhaus Hannover - has been included as document No. 61 in Document Book IV, which by the official registration of patients of this clinic, confirms the fact referred to by both witnesses as an aid to their memory, namely that defendant had returned to Germany before Frau SIX was taken to the hospital in Hannover on 1 September 1941. Just these assurances show that Frau VETTER must have been mistaken in her statements during cross-examination and that also the reference to the note in her diary is casual (unbehelflich) and incomplete. We will therefore quote the essential part as follows: From Document No. 63 by Dr. AUGSBURG.

" I met Frau Veronika VETTER in the beginning of August 1941 in Smolensk.

Immediately after the shelling of the city had ceased, sity professor and Racial German VETTER .......By order of Prof husband, which took weeks.

......I informed Dr. MAHNKE of this outcome, as Professor SIX had already departed.

...... Of course still had been in Russia at that time."

From Document No. 63 by Dr. MAHNKE.

" With respect to the statements of Frau Veronika VETTER on for Professor SIX, Several officers from the "Reich" Division This birthday party was held on Prof.

SIX' birthday, since Prof.

SIX' regimental comrades had appeared on this very day .

property to Smolensk from her place of evacuation. In my VETTER's statement."

prove that, already during her time of service with the Moscow Vorkommando (VKM) that is after her first meeting with SIX, she has seen herself how another detachment with a higher commander arrived and took quarters on a higher floor of the lateral wing of the police building. These statements are so precise that it can be deduced that this other detachment and its commander can only have been the Group Staff and NEBE.

But according to the Report of Events No. 43 dated 5 August 1941 the staff of Einsatzgruppe B had already arrived at Smolensk at that time, a fact which has also been confirmed by co-defendant KLINGELHOFFER in the witness stand (Transcript p. 3877), by Dr. SIX himself in the witness stand (Transcript p. 1361) and in Defense Document No. 40 by Dr. AUGSBURG. shows that she must have seen and met defendant SIX in Smolensk already during the first days of August. Since she further testified that SIX remained only for a short time, it can be deduced also from her statements during cross-examination that the date for SIX' departure from Smolensk given originally in her affidavit of 14 September 1947 as 20 August 1941, must be correct and that her diary notes, to which she referred for her changed date, were not an aid to her memory but caused a confusion of her memory. Prosecution has not been submitted in evidence. Hence this part of VETTER's statement is completely deprived of any support.

4. But this departure from Russia on 20 August 1941 or Defendant SIX took place upon his own request for release. He has made this request for release because he realized that has Vorkommando Moscow, which had been formed for the task of seizing archives in Moscow, was purposeless because the fall of Moscow could not be expected for the time being. Hence it results that defendant SIX never understood and intended his assignment in Russia to be anything else but practical activity in the sense of the archives tasks and archive commandos of Office VII and that he evaded successfully and to the ultimately possible degree employment in the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos in Russia under the SD service.

5.) It need hardly be mentioned in view of otherwise inadequate evidence produced by the Prosecution that the defendants' promotions as well as the written documents and memoranda referring to them constitute no means of evidence against him concerning his co-operation or accompliceship in the deeds perpetrated by the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos as the Prosecution tries to prove, inasmuch as the relevant counter-argumentations have already, been exhaustively laid down in writing by the defense. I only wish to refer to document No. 4768 Prosecution Doc. Book V B, Exh. 237 which included the letter from the SSOperational Main Office - Commandant of the Waffen-SS of 3 April 1942 addressed to the SS-Personnel Main Office. This document does not permit the slightest conclusion as regards the defendants' employment in the East. This is an act of the RSHA deliberately misleading the Waffen-SS and the Wehrmacht with the object of getting defendant SIX released from military service against his will and of bringing him back under the disciplinary authority of the SD. To this end the Waffen-SS, after the Wehrmacht had already refused his release, was confronted by the RSHA with an allegedly accomplished fact by letting them know that SIX had already been assigned to the East as Commander of the Security Police and the SD, in other words, that he had already departed. This however, does net correspond to the facts. In 1942 SIX was in Berlin and he has never held the position of a Commander of the Security Police and the SD.

On the other hand, this document proves the sort of methods HEYDRICH adopted to enforce the defendant SIX' return to the SD and his release from military service against his will. At the same time the defendants' statement in the witness box is herewith confirmed once more. of defendant SIX's personal records, the Prosecution, on the other hand, would have been sure to detect some document proving the employment of the defendant in the Service of the SD-Einsatzgruppen if this had been defacto the case with the defendant.

7.) The final conclusion:must be drawn, therefore, that he charge against the defendant Dr. SIX with reference to counts I and II of the indictment has been based merely on diverse grounds of suspicion, which in themselves are incoherent and altogether rather feeble, and that the Prosecution in the course of this trial has not been able to substantiate it with evidence strong enough to disperse all doubts. On the other hand, the chain of counter-arguments offered by the defense is absolutely solid and constitutes full proof that the defendant is not in the least incriminated in the sense of counts I and II of the Indictment and that, therefore, the Tribunal must needs come to the decision to declare the defendant not guilty on counts I and II of the indictment.

1.) Concerning Count III of the indictment, the defendants' membership in the criminal organisations of the SS and the SD, I have to debate the point whether, apart from the more membership of these organisations , there existed from the part of the defendant also some sort of cooperation with them in the sense of their criminal actions or a participation in their criminal tendencies. Since the charge contained in counts I and II of the indictment, i.e. defendants' participation in war crimes and crimes against humanity committed by the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos of the SD, is bound to break down also in connection with Count III of the indictment, there remains only to argue, whether his other connections with the SD and the SS constitute a participation in some form or another in the criminal tendencies of these organizations.

The defendant is not guilty per se under count III of the indictment, because on the key-day, 1 September 1939. as ruled according to the verdict of the International Tribunal, the defendant was still a member of the SS and the SD in his capacity as Chief of Amt VII, which, according to the verdict was included in the criminal organizations. As Chief Prosecutor JACKSON in his opening statement before the International Trial conceded to each member, to explicate in a trial his personal relation to the organization so has this also been done in the case of defendant Dr. SIX in this trial.

2.) I stated at the beginning that SIX did not enter the SD as a politician but as a scientist and that his activity was confined to this scientific sphere. His membership in the SS was compulsorily necessitated and was dependant on his membership in the SD. Not until his entry into the SD was the defendant transferred to the SS from the SA to which he had belonged until then. His promotion in rank in the SS was effected in accordance with his duty assignment and activity in the SD. After his final inactivation in the SD the defendant did not become an active member of the SS, but an honorary member; his SS rank which ha was allowed to retain and which was finally raised to Brigadefuehrer was an honorary rank equivalent to his professional rank of ambassador 1 stclass in the Foreign Office. The fact that no SS-assignment of any other kind was the basis of his promotion in the SS is proved by the written service curriculum of the defendant, submitted by the Prosecution in Document Book V B, Document No. 4768. This reveals clearly that the type of duty of the defendant as a member of the SS was always within the sphere of SD duties. During the period of the defendant's membership in the Waffen-SS his activity consisted only of military training and training for war assignments, which does not have the nature of criminal activity within the meaning of the decision of the International Military Tribunal.

3.) The defendant never entered the Allegmeine SS as such. He never joined it as a member but due to his profession he became a member of the SS-Sonderformation SD because he thereby bad the opportunity of being active in the field of science.

In the SD the defendant was in charge of Amt VII as from November 1939. This office was designated as criminal by the International Military Tribunal, but in the reasons for the judgment this designation was not connected with any of the features which mark the SD as criminal.

In other words office VII was not especially blamed for criminal acts committed in the East, for the Nacht and Nebel decree or for the ballet (Kugel) decree, screening measures or other criminal acts mentioned especially in the judgment of the International Military Tribunal. Therefore it must be proved that the defendant SIX was personally involved in crimes committed by the SD. The main point, there fore, with regard to the defendant's criminal guilt, is whether he is guilty in accordance with the prosecution's point III, as a result of his membership in the and merely through having had knowledge of the activities of the Einsatzgruppen, without however having ever had any personal part in these activities; or whether it can be deduced from his general behavior during his SD membership that be put himself, his work and his designs at the disposal of the activities of the SB which have been ascertained as criminal. gruppen in Russia during his own totally different assignment as Chief of the Archivkommando Moskau. His having had a part in the planning of the Einsatzgruppen activity, even only in an ideological way, is therefore completely out of the question. The fact that the defendant did not participate nor wish to participate in the execution, can be ascertained as a result of those proceedings. Consciously, on his own initiative and using all means at his disposal, the defendant extricated himself from his being used in the fast by the SD upon his recognizing the impossibility of fulfilling his scientific assignment and at a time when it was being considered to change his assignment into partisan combat duties within the sphere of tasks of Einsatzgruppe B. It is sufficient here to state these simple facts.

I have already mentioned this point in my statement today as well as in my trial briefs. But the defendant's entire attitude as a member of the and an SD leader was not an unrestrictedly positive attitude but a critical negative one which resulted in his leaving the SD. had to go through extremely serious, even dangerous, conflicts with HEYDRICH: he was absolutely shelved and treated with suspicion as a most unreliable member. That the defendant succeeded in getting away be entering the service of the Foreign Office, where, by virtue of an existing ministerial decree, SD-activity was even prohibited, goes to prove his own inner aloofness and unsuitability for the SD. 4. In submitting Document No. 3919-PS of their Document Book V B, the prosecution has tried to prove that, just during his service with the foreign Office, the defendant SIX behaved in a criminal way. This document contains the confidential report on the meeting in Krummhuebel on 3 and 4 April 1944 of the Information Office XIV with its experts attached to the German Missions. This document is supplemented by a conglomeration of secret correspondence between the Reich Security Main Office - Office IV, and via the foreign Office. Department for Home Affairs II, - the missions abroad on the handling of the Jewish problem by those missions. The information Office XIV of the Foreign Office was an independent office with its own chief and responsible directly to the state secretary. The tasks of this office lay purely in the field of propaganda and had no connection with the other departments of the Foreign Office within its organization. I was only the opening meeting which had to be attended, according to instructions of the state secretary, by representatives of all departments.

At that opening meeting, the defendant SIX made a short speech of a purely informational character, took his leave immediately afterwards and returned to Berlin. Therefore he does not know anything about the further course of the meeting. The affidavits of so many persons who attended that meeting prove that the words he is accused of having said were never uttered. There exist therefore well-founded doubts as to the authenticity of this document which had been submitted by Russian quarters to the IMT in 1946, all the more so as it bears no signature. With regard to the brief which have been arbitrarily submitted with this document no relation whatsoever, as far as business procedure and time are concerned, to the Department of Culture or its Chief, SIX, I refer to the affidavit by THADDEN, Document Book IV, Appendix A, Document No. 67. attempt to prove the defendant guilty in Count III, refers to the Krummhuebel meeting, which the defendant attended to be sure and at which he made a speech, the following has to be stated in this connections: Supposing the document were not of questionable origin, it were not a garbled excerpt, it were not without signature, then it would merely prove a knowledge, but not an approval, of the events. 5) Thus, the prosecution has also failed in Count

III to furnish conclusive proof that the defendant SIX, as a member of an organization which has been pronounced criminal, participated in any way actively in measures declared criminal. on the other hand, the defense has proved, in submitting the large number of documents of the Complex Groups C and D General Behavior of the Defendant Six during his Activity at the diversity and the Foreign Office - that SIX emerged always and everywhere only as a scientist of a typically candid attitude and free of dogmatic limitations.

He has never committed a criminal act nor done any harm whatsoever or supported, wanted or sanctioned the carrying out of National Socialist crimes. On the contrary, he rather opposed that ideology with determination when it did not conform to European principles and ethics. He not only tolerated opponents of the regime of whom he got to know, but frequently aided them and admitted frankly that he himself rejected the excesses of National Socialism. This entire attitude of their defendant and his behavior as a member of an organization declared criminal should absolve him from any responsibility in acts of this organization which have been found criminal. all the facts Mentioned here above pertaining to Count III, while I myself am of the opinion that also as far as this count is concerned, the defendant should be found not guilty according to the rebuttal by the defense of the charges preferred by the prosecution.

THE PRESIDENT: Who follows? Dr. Heim?

THE SECRETARY GENERAL: Dr. Heim's final plea hasn't come up.

DR. MAYER: Dr. Mayer for the defendant Steimle. with crimes against humanity and war crimes, and in addition with the membership in one of the organizations declared criminal by the I.M.T. The specific charge is the participation in an extermination program for the annihilation of certain racial and other groups; it is asserted that the Einsatzgruppen including their Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos were established for, and employed in, the implementation of this program.

Steimle is stated to have participated in this by his activities as leader of the Sonderkommando 7 a of the Einsatzgruppe B and of the Sonderkommando 4 a of the Einsatzgruppe C; it is said that he thus cooperated in the implementation of the program. could really be carried out by the relatively small number of persons forming the Einsatzgruppen. It may also be left undecided whether the decree of the Fuehrer, which appears to play a very predominant part in this trial, was really meant to be the basis of such a plan. Steimle was in a position to ascertain whether this program of genocide existed or that it existed, and whether or not he took part in the murder of innocent persons by any activities implementing the Fuehrer decree. It must be admitted that it would constitute such participation in a wider sense, if during the period, in which he was in charge of SK 7 a or SK 4 a, members of his command had co-operated in this policy of extermination with the cognizance and the approval of Steimle.

The evaluation of the activities of the defendant Steimle in the light of the charges raised against him cannot be restricted to the consideration of the evidence produced by the prosecution all the more as this evidence is not comprehensive anyhow. It must consider all those circumstances which directed his action while he was committed in Russia. A tremendous amount of material of this kind is contained in the extracts from incident reports produced by the Defense. They will show that the trend and the scope of his activities in his capacity as Kommando-leader were to a large extent caused by external condition as such; this applies particularly to the areas of commitment of SK 7a. Furthermore, it will become apparent that the implementation of the decree of the Fuehrer, as charged by the prosecution, was practically impossible in these conditions, which will be described more fully later on. The same applies to Steimle's activities in the capacity of the leader of SK 4a. the personal attitude of Steimle toward the implementation of the order of Fuehrer is, therefore, of secondary importance. We may believe the defendant, if he asserts that it would have been against the grain, if not impossible, for him to carry out the Fuehrer-order, if he had been confronted with the necessity to do so. It requires an inflexibility more than human to implement such an order, and it would only be natural to shrink back. We do, however, claim that Steimle would actually have refused to obey the order, if direct pressure or force had been brought to bear on him. But he must not be prejudiced by the fact that the conditions actually prevailing saved him from this necessity. The evidence will even prove that on his own initiative he made a clover use of existing conditions with the very purpose to eliminate such necessity in his area.

guarantee of a just decision consists in the application of those legal principles which are established internationally and which reflect accordingly in the sentences pronounced by the Military Tribunals in the cases already tried. Nobody may be convicted if his personal guilt has not been proved. This requires that it must be carefully determined which of the various criminal acts charged in the indictment have been committed by the individual defendants, in this instance by Steimle. The fact that the onus of proof rests with the prosecution - which As an established principle protects the defendant from being held responsible on the basis of assertions of the prosecution, if proof is lacking. The principle that every defendant is prime facia presumed to be not guilty enhances this protection. defendant Steimle is the fact that he was assigned employment in the East. The assignment covers two periods separated by an interval of one year. The first assignment was the appointment as leader of SK 7 a of Einsatzgruppe B for the period from the middle of September 1941 to the middle of December 1941. The assertion of the prosecution that this assignment of Steimle lasted until the middle of February 1942, will be discussed later. At this juncture it is sufficient to state that this does not correspond to the facts. The second assignment of Steimle was his appointment as leader of SK 4 a in Einsatzgruppe C for the period from August 1942 to 17 January 1943. been wrapped up in his work in the SD district headquarters Stuttgart.

It seems, therefore, indicated to breach the nature of these activities and Steimle's attitude underlying them, for they will reveal the background from which he started for commitments in the East, a field which was completely new to him. It will also reveal how much his Stuttgart duties contrasted with those incumbent on him in SK 7a. The deposition of the defendant made on the stand furnishes acomplete picture of his professional background and curriculum; in this respect reference is made to the transcript dated 5 and 6 November 1947. The documents Steimle No. 1 - 5, discloses the attitude of the defendant toward the Nazi regime in the period prior to his commitment in Russia. They make it evident that he was by no means one of the blind fanatics who accepted the measures of the Third Reich without any criticism. On the contrary, he considered his activities in the SD a propitious opportunity of submitting unbiassed reports on the effects of the measures of the government as a substitute for criticism, the latter being prohibited. His purpose was to set a limit to arbitrariness. He is described as unbiassed and as a man who lent his assistance, his support and his protection where ever he feels they are needed. During his activities in the SD district headquarters, the defendant applied several times for his transfer to the army, as he wanted to do active service. Steimle document No. 4 Exhibit No. 4. As late as in January 1941 he again endeavored to be called up for active service, and he even secured an interview in Berlin for that purpose. With the obvious purpose to turn these repeated applications down, he was in August 1941 assigned to SK 7 a and appointed its leader. It must, therefore, be kept in mind that he was given this assignment at a date long after the time when the Einsatzgruppen including the Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos were formed and committed for the first time.

The defendant Steimle was neither sent to Dueben nor to Pretzsch, the only places where special indictrination courses on the purpose and tasks of the Einsatzgruppen were held. The question of the Fuehrer's decree playing a decisive part in this trial, it is not devoid of special significance that the defendant was never given detailed instructions by executive leaders on the meaning and purport of the decree. The defendant does not deny that he was made converssnt little by little with the Fuehrer's decree by way of information given to him by Einsatzgruppen-Leader Nebe, his superior official, and by the men of SK 7 a. But these informations given to him by Nebe or his own subleaders can, of course, not be considered substitute for the official indictrination given in Pretzsch and Dueben. It is obvious that an order which has not been laid down in writing can in practice never be transmitted entirely in its original form. conversant with the tasks of the Sonderkommandos and with those of SK 7 a in particular. When he reported to Einsatzgruppen-Leader Nebe on 4 September 1941, he was told only that it was the task of his Kommando - and of the other Kommandos, too, for that matter -- to secure the rear area against all communist leaders and their forces active in the area and against their supporters. On or about 7 September 1941, he was told by the deputy leader of SK 7 a, Foltis, that during its advance SK 7 a had shot a number of male Jews of military age. Only then did the defendant Steimle realize the real purport with regard to the Jews of the decree of the Fuehrer.

No wonder the reaction of the defendant to this piecemeal information on the Fuehrer's decree, the implementation of which called for particular ruthlessness, was such he did not take pains to report an order of this kind to this sub-leaders and men. There is no doubt that during the first phase of Steimle's command, the members of Steimle's unit were more conversant with their tasks in the Sonderkommando then the defendant Stimle himself. This follows from the very fact that the Kommando had been operating since June 1941. It must be emphasized that neither at this nor at any other time the defendant Steimle gave orders of his own to his men concerning the implementation of the decree of the Fuehrer with regard to the Jews. The incident reports produced both by the prosecution and the defense show that SK 7 a is not mentioned in a single report for the shooting of Jews in implementation of the decree of the Fuehrer. In fact, during the whole period when Steimle was in charge, no Jews, Jewesses of Jewish children were shot in SK 7 a in implementation of the Fuehrer order. On the other hand, the above-mentioned incident reports are dealing throughout with the ever increasing partisan menace and with "action"i.e. combat operations, of SK 7 a against partisans, mostly carried out jointly with, and often initiated by, Wehrmacht units. Walter Roller, Steimle document No. 12, exh. No. 12. Roller was the driver of the defendant Steimle and is in a position to confirm that no executions of Jews based on the Fuehrer's decree were carried out at that period. did not implement the Fuehrer-decree while the defendant was in charge.

The defendant himself has, when on the stand, stated that this can not be explained by a claim that he had been in a position simply to refuse to carry out this order. Adhering to the truth, he admits that he would have been obliged to comply with this order in the same way as with any other order, if the necessity had arisen. In this connection, it must, however, be reiterated that the defendant did have a certain part in the actual operations of the Kommando in his charge, in so far as he cleverly exploited the conditions actually prevailing in order to be able to shelve, without incurring a personal set-back, the implementation of the decree. We must not forget that the implementation of the decree. We must not forget that the implementation of the Fuehrer's decree was not the only task of the Einsatzgruppen. According to both the deposition of the defendant made on the stand and the incident reports, it was also the task of the Sonderkommandos and Einsatzkommandos to maintain the security of the rear communication of the combat troops and to take all security measures necessary for this purpose. The latter task included the furnishing of intelligence concerning the organization of the enemy army, the communist party, and in particular the reconnoitring of the organization of partisan warfare, raised to the level of a method of warfare by the Red Army. The irrefutable fact that the strength of the Sonderkommandos was extremely weak - about 100 men for each Sonderkommando- madt it impossible to carry out the Fuehrer order and to fight the partisan menace at the same time. In fact, the combatting of partisans was the more urgent task. It had to be given priority, because the malicious combat methods of the partisans threatened the rear of the combat troops and inflicted considerable losses on the Wehrmacht.

In this connection, reference is made to the exhibit Ohlendorf No. 3, doc. Ohlendorf No. 40, page 66 of doc. book Ohlendorf II, which contains some illuminating figures for a small sector of the front. It becomes evident from the fact, specified in detail in the following, why the SK 7 a under Steimle's leadership did not carry out the Fuehrer order; 1.) That the danger from the partisans played a prominent part in the back of the combat troops in the deployment in the East, but particularly in the deployment area of the Sonderkommando 7a results from the excerpts of the reports of events submitted by the defense. This was already pointed out. Thus, the area can rather exactly be established in which a particular concentration of the partisans took place. It is further possible on the basis of these facts to establish of which circle of persons the partisans consisted and further still what kind of activity they carry out and thus what kind of danger the partisans were.

a) There is an especially great number of partisans in the extensive forests and in the impregnable marsh area, because they can find here shelter and hideout for men and weapons without any trouble. It is explicitly stated in the report of events No. 97 of 28 September 1941, which is reprinted in the Steimle document No. 25, exh. No. 24 page 37 and 40 of the English and German document book Steimle II: the main seat of the Partisans' activity in the region, comprises the area of which the city of Welish is the centre. This region is bordered in the East by the road Smolensk-Demidow, in the South by the motor highway, in the West by the road Smolensk - Witebsk, and in the North by the road Smolensk Demidow.

It is known to the Tribunal that this city was the seat of the Sonderkommando 7a in the months September/ October 1941. The size of the afore mentioned region brought it about that the SK 7a had to be permanently occupied with combatting the partisans. They succeeded in many cases in escaping in time, thanks to the impracticable conditions of the roads.

The document Steimle No. 29, Exh. No. 28 contains on page 46 of the German and English document book Steimle No. II a detailed report on a partisan operation in the neighborhood of the township of Demidow, South East of where dense forests stand. The whole deployment area of the Sonderkommando 7a is full of forests and marshes and represents, therefore, a territory which is especially favorable for the activity of the partisans. It is complained in particular in the document Steimle No. 23 Exh. No. 22 in a report on page 18 of the original that the extensive marshes and the big forests, accessible only with much trouble, are extraordinarily helpful to the partisans. It would go to far to enumerate here all documents of the defense which express themselves in the same way with all they contain. It must be considered on the basis of the documentary evidence a fact which does not admit any doubts that there existed one of the best hideouts for partisans in the area of the Einsatzgruppe B, but especially in the deployment area of the Sonderkommando 7a when the defendant Steimle was its leader.

b) The circle of persons of which the partisans consisted can also be described in its essential points on the basis of the reports which are present as documentary evidence. The document Steimle No. 23. Exh. No. 22 gives a clear view of the organization of the future partisans' training in so-called partisan schools.

The document Steimle No. 25 Exh. No. 24 emphasizes expressly that the so-called destruction division consisted of party members of the Communist party and active Bolshevists. For this reason alone they had not been drafted for military service. Document Steimle No. 32 Exh. No. 31 confirms that the escaped Communist functionaries and agents were active as partisans without any exception. A report in document Steimle No. 34, exh. No. 33 points to the fact that also women and predominately young ones joined the partisans to serve as scouts and to transmit intelligence. It is expressly pointed out in the document No. 40 exh. No. 3 on page 66 of the document book Ohlendorf No. II that the leadership of the partisans was assumed in most cases by the secretary of the local Bolshevist party committee or by other party functionaries. It follows from the same document that women and children were committed with especial ruthlessness for the partisan fight. Also tasks in the line of direct combat were given to them on this occasion. Neither is it excluded that partisan units were led by women. It appears from this very important document that the Bolshevist party fanaticism is not deterred from making use of children in partisan detachments. The most difficult tasks are assigned to them there, as e.g. the demolition of bridges.

The proclamation of Stalin of 3 June, 1941, document Ohlendorf No. 39 exh. No. 2 does not permit any doubt on the fact that the Soviet state leadership planned and intended to have the total civilian population participate in the partisan war. It is also this point of view which makes it appear a necessary consequence that party functionaries of all ranks, party members and Bolshevists formed the backbone of the partisan movements. It only serves to complete the picture that the members of the Red Army were ordered to enforce in the disguise of civilians the ranks of the partisans, in case they were separated from their units. The systematic preparation of the partisan war against the Germans as occupation troops and troops of the front line comprised a considerable portion of all parts of the population and demonstrates clearly enough the ruthlessness of the treacherous manner of combat which was used by the partisans. It was the plan of the Bolshevist State leadership that the German troops should never be sure that a group of peasants which looked quite harmless or other harmless civilians could not change suddenly to armed partisans. particular the Bolshevist functionaries and NKWD agents who remained in the back of the German troops of the front line tried over and over again to form and organize partisan units out of the civilian population. This appears in several cases from the submitted documents. It cannot be contested that Jews belonged to these leading circles and also especially that there were Jews among the Communist functionaries and NKWD agents. It can be said in generally that every Communist functionary, every NKWD agent and every Bolshevist who was moving behind the German lines was obliged by the party to organize the partisan fight and to advance it.

And it can be understood that this was especially successful in an area like the one of the Sonderkommando 7a, if one looks at the fact that it was so easy to find a hideout, as was already emphasized repeatedly. is extremely great during the time in which STEIMLE was the leader of the Kommando. Document STEIMLE No. 18, exh. No. 18 reports that an attack of 200 heavily armed partisans against the city of Surash took place and had to be repulsed on 15 September 1941. A report is contained in the document STEIMLE No. 23 exh. No. 22 on page 29 of the German and English document book STEIMLE II which mentions major operations of the Sonderkommando 7a in various locations. They were unsuccessful, it is true, because the partisans fled in time. An operation of the SK 7a is reported in the same report. Here 12 persons were apprehended. It was established after intensive interrogations that 8 of them were partisans and they were shot accordingly. The report goes for the time until 13 September 1941. The defendant STEIMLE was then leader of the Kommando for a few days only. This report is interesting because it gives a total number of 1011 persons shot to death by the Sonderkommando 7a as of 13 September 1941. The next report of the commitment of the Sonderkommando 7a is in the document STEIMLE No. 29 exh. No. 28. It is reported there that a large style operation against partisans is carried out with the assistance of two divisions of the Wehrmacht in the dense forests Sout East of Demidow. A series of persons was immediately released again after detailed interrogations by the Wehrmacht, while 72 Red Army soldiers were apprehended, but without any proof that they were connected with the partisans.

Therefore, they were brought into a prisoner of war camp. The SK 7a established 183 individuals as partisans on this occasion. They were shot subsequently. It is further on explained in the same report that the Sk 7a carried out several operations against partisans North West of Welish, and that 27 individuals could be established as partisans on this occasion. The Sk 7a is once more mentioned in the same document, and it is stated that 8 individuals could be convicted of partisanship in the village of Michalowo. The report contains further the interesting information that 8 partisans were apprehended and that they were so called youths between 16 and 22 years of age. Thus a hint is given what age groups are put together in the reports under the word "youths". This report gives a total number of 1252 persons shot to death by the Sk 7a as of 26 September 1941. This means according to the reports an increase of 241, while there are actually only about 218 shootings according to the contents of the report. STEIMLE document No. 32, exh. No. 31 mentions that 19 reports on partisan activities came in from the area Welikije Luki alone, one of the places where the Sk 7a was stationed. It describes clearly and in detail the destructive activity of the partisans. 12 operations against partisans of the Sk 7a are reported on page 79 of the German and English document book STEIMLE II, that means in the same document STEIMLE No. 32. Among them are several in which it took part as an interrogation squad on the occasion of Wehrmacht operations. 41 partisans were shot to death after interrogation. Another operation of Sk 7a is mentioned in the prosecution document No. NO-3160 exh. No. 65. 63 Communist functionaries, NKWD agents and agitators had to be shot in the course of combatting the partisans after it had taken place.

This report obviously comprises a series of individual reports, given in the course of the reported period. The document of the prosecution No. NO-2825 exh. No. 59 reports of Sk 7a that it executed 153 liquidations on occasion of combatting partisans in the reported period. The total number of the expressly reported numbers in the individual reports gives the figure of approximately 500, the same figure which results as a difference from comparing the total number of persons shot to death by the Sonderkommando 7a viz. 1011 as of 13 September 1941 and the total number of persons shot to death by the same Kommando viz. 1517 as of 14 November 1941. All shootings are thus actually proven by documents to be nothing but shootings of partisans. that the Sonderkommando 7a is only mentioned in connection with partisan actions, carried out either independently or together with Wehrmacht units by parts of the Sonderkommando. The Communist functionaries and NKWD agents represent in all cases the backbone and the leadership of the partisan units according to this documentary support. This was the only reason why they still were behind the German lines. No reason can be perceived why theu should not have joined the general evacuation movement, propagated and energetically carried out before the arrival of the German troops. once more still - in particular in the area of the Sonderkommando 7a, which can be unambiguously learned from the documents, compelled the defendant STEIMLE obviously and with necessity to fight the partisans with the assistance of the men of his Kommando and his subleaders from the first days of his presence in this area. It forced him to continue this fight with all means at his disposal until his departure to Germany in December 1941.

That meant the security of the fighting units and the necessity of maintaining without disturbance army communication lines between the front and the back. It cannot be contested that the Sonderkommandos had also the task of combatting the partisans. Just as little can be contested that this was an urgent task, especially in the combat area, and that everything must automatically stand back which prevented the forces of the Sonderkommando from this task, forces which were weak anyhow. The defendant STEIMLE had, therefore, no choice in the question, whether the combatting of the partisans must fall short of carrying out the Fuehrer order. The informations, received by him piecemeal on the Fuehrer order, contained nothing on the necessity of carrying it out before all other tasks. Neither was such an order ever given and it would have been absolutely nonsensical in consideration of the grave partisan danger. that he himself was not trained from the military point of view or from that of criminal law for the task given to the Sk 7a of combatting the partisans. Therefore, he was in no position to assume the leadership of the Kommando in this respect. Moreover, there existed no necessity, as an operation of the whole Kommando was out of consideration, due to its subdivision in two or three partial units which were widely separated in space. The partial Kommando of the Sk 7a operated together with units of the Wehrmacht and functioned mainly as interrogation units on such occasions; it was here the task of the defendant STEIMLE to check the regularity of the interrogation proceedings and of the decisions, made after it.

It was clear without further ado from the above mentioned subdivision of the Kommando that this control could only be performed at random. It was still made more difficult by the circumstance that the Kommando under the leadership of STEIMLE was advancing in his parts since the middle of October 1941, as it always had to remain in immediate neighborhood of the fighting units according to the order of AOK 9. The proper working field of the defendant, the reporting on life in the occupied territories of the Soviet Union would by itself not have been his personal task as leader of the Kommando, but he had to perform it in addition to everything else, due to the lack of a proper person in charge of it. Fuehrer order in the time when the defendant STEIMLE lead the Sonderkommando 7a. The document STEIMLE No. 13, exh. No. 13 and the document STEIMLE No. 12, exh. No. 12 express also unambiguously that the defendant STEIMLE did not carry out the Fuehrer order and that he did not go farther and did not repeat himself the Fuehrer order, when dealing with the subleaders and men subordinated to him. The defense believes to have shown that this did not happen in violation of his duty and neither, because the defendant simply refused the execution of the Fuehrer order. It happened, in the contrary, from intelligent evaluation of the existing situation and necessiated by the compulsion of leading the combat against the partisans. stands on the other hand the fact that there were exceedingly few Jews in the commitment area of the Sonderkommando 7a of which we talk here after all. As already fully explained above, the commitment area of the Sonderkommando 7a in its whole not unconsiderable extent was covered with big forests, extending far and wide, and with impassable marshes.

The reports, submitted by the defense, demonstrate unequivocally that a planned evacuation had already taken place in the commitment area of the Sonderkommando 7a before the invasion by the German military units. And here again the evacuation of the Jewish population was performed in a preferred manner and also according to plans. There is talk in the document STEIMLE No. 21, exh. No. 20 on page 13 of the German and English document book STEIMLE II in a report on the military intelligence service in the Welikije Luki area. The Court will remember that Welikije Luki was the stations of a subdetachment of Sk 7a. The report emphasize in connection with this township the evacuation of the population according to plans already at the time of the report, which evacuation was effected to a higher degree than previously. population had a preference treatment when the evacuation went into effect already weeks before and participated in it to a greater extent than the others. It is stated again in the document STEIMLE No. 32, exh. No. 31 on page 78 of the English and German document book STEIMLE No. II that the trend of flight and the planned evacuation of the Jews towards the East took greater and greater dimensions. This obviously refers to the interval of time between the 21 September and 24 October 1941. It is reported in the document STEIMLE No. 34, exh. No. 33 on page 90 of the English and German document book STEIMLE II that the Jewish population fled without an exception at that moment, viz. the 14 November 1941 and that this evacuation movement, which was promoted from the outset by extensive propaganda of the Soviet regime, was considerably facilitated by the transport trains which were put at disposal by the Red Army.

This report obviously refers to the region of Rschew, a town which is also situated in the territory of the Sk 7a. are not limited only to the development area of the Sonderkommando 7a. But they are felt especially clearly in this part of the country which anyhow lacks in population, because it comprises a very considerable part of the population and before all practically all of the Jewish population. submitted excerpts from the reports of events had not started only when the Sonderkommando entered its development area. On the contrary it started already before the invasion by the German troops. This situation was essentially already in existence when the defendant STEIMLE arrived.

PRESIDENT: Dr. Mayer, would you want to suspend at this point? The Tribunal will be in recess 15 minutes.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. MAYER (ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENDANT STEIMLE): Your Honors, before I continue, I wouldlike to make a correction which I consider necessary on page 2oof the translation, line 16 from the bottom, there is a "not" missing, the word, "not"; this does meant to say, however, as in the translation, "we do claim". It says here, I think, "We do not claim." That is the 16th line from the bottom on page 2.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well.

DR. MAYER: May I continue then?

The PRESIDENT: Please do.

DR. MAYER: It is still more evident from these circumstances that he did not start with carrying out the Fuehrer Order. There existed on the one hand the partisan danger, overshadowing everything. It was so great that the most vital interests of the military would have suffered damage, if this danger had just been ignored. On the other hand the men of the Sonderkommando 7a would have to waste their small forces in exhaustive searches for the Jewish part of the population, a task which would not have stood up in any way to what was demanded from them under the given conditions. need to carry out the Fuehrer Order. Beyond that, they have shown that it would have even been senseless to postpone the task of combatting the partisans for no other reason than to carry out the Fuehrer Order. The proceedings up to now have not established in any way that the Fuehrer Order would have had to be carried out first and under all circumstances. 7 a under the command of the defendant Steimle. The prosecution, it is true, charges him with having killed 272 Jews and Jewesses, and in evidence of this fact they have submitted the incident report No. 124 of 25 October 1941, Document No. NO-3160 , Exh. No. 65. There can be no doubt that this evidence is inconclusive.

Firstly, it must be stated from a point of view of form that the Sonderkommando 7 a is nowhere explicitly mentioned as being the unit which carried out the execution of the said number of Jews and Jewesses. It was only a deduction which led to the assumption that the SK 7a was involved and the includiveness of this deduction is adversely affected by the fact that the data concerning localities given in these incident reports cannot always be regarded as completely reliable. This is definitely established by the fact that there is neither a locality called Sadrudub, nor one called Belowschtschina within the area covered by the Sonderkommando 7 a. I refer in this connection to Doc. Steinle No. 16, Exh. No.15, Doc. Steimle No. 17 Exh. No. 16, and to Doc. Steimle No. 15, Exh. No. 14. These records show that a locality called Sadrudub does not exist at all, for, if it existed, one ought to be able to find it, in view of the ending "dub", which can only designate a town. Apart from that, the expression Sadrudub in one word is impossible in the Russian language. Furthermore, the same documents which I mentioned before show that the designation Sadrudub is abviously a mutilation of the word Starodub. Starodub is a term situated in what was then the area covered by the Sonderkommando 7b. Document Steimle No. 32, exhibit No. 31, page 80 of the English and German document book No. I. As is shown in particular by document Steimle No. 16, page 16 the village of Belowschtschine is in the immediate neighborhood of the town of Starodub, and that is the place where the Jews - obviously those from the town of Starodub in the area covered by the SK 7b - were supposed to set up a ghetto. The fact that the killing of the 272 Jews and Jewesses took place in the area covered by the SK 7b, i.e. near Starodub and Belowschtschina, is further confirmed by the incident report of 26 October 1941, prosecution exhibit 63. On page 2 of the original of this record it is reported that the Sonderkommando 7b secured 46,000 Rubol of cash which had been "the property of a number of liquidated Jews". There is no report to this effect from the SK 7a, not only during this period, but at no other time. In spite of the fact that the SK 7 a is again and again mentioned in the report of events between the 10 Sept, and 20 December 1941, and this always in connection with the combatting of partisans, there is never a report to the effect that the Sonderkommando 7a had secured Jewish money or other valuable subsequent toa possible liquidation of Jews.

Beyond this, the sane afore-mentioned document shows that according to the reported increase in the total figure of shootings carried out by Sonderkommando 7a and Sonderkommando 7b, the shooting of the 272 Jews and Jewesses must be placed to the account of Sonderkommando 7b. The report of events No. 108 of 9 October 1941, prosecution document No. 60, gives a total figure of shootings carried by the Sonderkommando 7a amounting to 1252 and a total figure of shootings carried out by Sonderkommando 7b amounting to 1544. This refers to the position as per 28 Sept. 1941. The incident report No. 125 of 26 October 1941 prosecution exhibit No. 63, gives a total figure of 1344 in respect of Sonderkommando 7a and a figure of 1822 in respect of Sonderkommando 7b. Thus the figure of shootings carried out by Sonderkommando 7a has only increased by 92 during the period in question, in which the incident occured with which the defendant Steimle has been charged. The increase however, should have amounted to exactly 372, as in the meantime only 2 collective shootings comprising about 100 persons executed were reported, and the Jews of Sadrudub would have to be added on to this. According to the records contained in the documents the increase in the figure of shootings carried out by SK 7b amounts to 278, and it is important to note in this connection that during this same period between the last report giving the figure of 1544 and the just mentioned report giving the figure of 1822 shootings, no executions at all are reported in respect to Sonderkommando 7b. These reported figures in connection with the report concerning the Rubel amounts secured by Sonderkommando 7b, and in connection with the geographical and linguistic argument pointing to the town of Starodub, make it completely clear that the reported shooting of 272 Jews and Jewesses with which the defendant Steimle has been charged was not carried out by Sonderkommando 7a but definitely by Sonderkommando 7b. In connection with the same document, i.e. the report of events No. 124, prosecution exhibit No. 65, the defendant Steimle is further charged with the shooting of 63 communists officials NKWD-agents and agitators.

The defendant has pointed out on the witness stand that this total figure must comprise various operations against partisans, as the result of which the fact was established that some of the partisans arrested in the course of each operation were party officials, NKWD agents and agitators. Previous evidence has been submitted for the fact t that the leaders of partisans were to be found on principle among this group of persons which constituted the backbone of the partisan movement.

The purpose and aim of their operations behind the German lines was solely to keep the idea of partisan fighting alive among the population, and to carry out the organization of the partisan movement. In view of the situation in the area covered by the Sonderkommando 7a, which has also been described in detail, it is obvious that here, too, the persons in question were such as had been arrested in the course of operations against partisans.

The document No. NO-2825, Exhibit No. 95, of 14 Nov, 1941 mentions the execution of 173 persons by the Sonderkommando 7a, without giving the reasons for which the execution was carried out. The afore-mentioned prosecution document contains a number of execution figures with respect to other Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos; these figures refer almost exclusively to Jews. In view of the situation with Sonderkommando 7a which has been mentioned several times, the indisputable conclusion must be drawn that the 173 persons in question must have been partisans. There is no reason why these executed persons should not have been designated as Jews in this case as well if the SK 7a had carried out such an execution. The operations against Jews mentioned in this report can be easily placed to the account of the competent Einsatz - and Sonderkommandos on the basis of the names of localities given. The defendant Steimle expoinded this point in detail on the witness stand, on the basis of the garrison reports contained in the documents. In this connection I refer to page 2008 and 2009 of the English transcript. Therefore, these 173 executions can on no account be charged to the defendant as acts committed on the basis of the Fuehrer order.

The prosecution also links the record NO_2324, prosecution exhibit No. 62, with defendant Steimle's responsibility. This evidence exhibit reports the shooting of a considerable number of Jews, Jewish women and children. The document is dated 19 December 1941, i.e. refers to a period when the defendant Steimle had already gone to Germany on leave. But this is not the only reason why he is not responsible for the executions of Jews reported therein, another reason is that in this report the localities of the executions and mostly also the Einsatz- or Sonderkommandos concerned, are very carefully stated. The SK 7a is nowhere mentioned, on the basis of the available incident reports every locality of execution can be easily placed as a station covered by a certain Sonder- or Einsatzkommando. In no case is a locality mentioned which by means of this procedure could be placed as a station covered by Einsatzkommando 7a. The defendant Steimle stressed this point on the witness stand, and the defendant Naumann, in reply to my detailed questioning, also stated in his testimony, that none of the localities mentioned here were situated in the area covered by SK 7a. Here again it is clearly shown that the Sonderkommando 7a, under the command of the defendant Steimle, is not mentioned in connection with shootings of Jews. This fact features in all incident reports and therefore it cannot possibly be a matter of coincidence. The repeated statements of the defendant on the witness stand, according to which he never carried out operations against Jews with the help of his commando, are thus once more confirmed and emphasized, quite apart from the other documentary evidence submitted by the defense. In this connection it must be stressed that the defendant did not only adopt this point of view when the proceedings against him were instituted he expressed it from the very start, as is shown, for instance, by his affidavit made in 1945, Doc. No. NO-3842, Prosecution Exh. No. 119.

By reason of Prosecution Exh. No. 60, Doc. No. NO-3156, that is the incident report No. 108 of 9 October 1941, the defendant is further charged with the execution of Communists youngsters who had been arrested while trying to blow up a bridge.

Incidentally it should be mentioned that this same report, as is easily recognisable, appears twice within the same record. I have explained before that the term "Youngsters" in the incident reports comprises the age groups from 16 to 22, and it is superfluous to point out that it was the intention of these Communists to commit an act which seriously endangered the safety of the troops and which was c carried out within the framework of the partisan movement. It seems out of the question therefore, that the defendant Steimle should be incriminated on this account. ing to submit evidence for the fact that the defendant Steimle was in charge of the Kommando 7a up to 13 February 1942 must be regarded as a failure. The period in which he led the Sonderkommando 7a only lasted from the middle of September 1941 to the middle of December 1941. This fact has been proved by the defense. The prosecution does not appear to have any doubts concerning the date on which he started his activities with the Sonderkommando 7a. Only as a precautionary measure do I refer in this connection to Document Steimle No. 13, Exhibit No. 13, page 47, of the German and English Document Book Steimle No. I. The liaison officer of the Sonderkommando 7a attached to A.O.K. 9, confirms explicitly in this document that the first half of September 1941, when the latter took over the Sonderkommando. As far as the termination of Steimle's command is concerned, his statement on the witness stand is confirmed by document Steimle No. 11, Exhibit No. 11, and, in particular, by Document Steile No. 12, exhibit No. 12. The driver of the defendant Steimle, Walter Roller, served with the Sonderkommando 7a until January 1944 and explicitly states in his affidavit that the defendant Steimle arrived in Stuttgart about 20 December 1941 and did not return to the Sonderkommando 7a. In this connection, too, it must be emphasized that the defendant Steimle has stated from the very start that the date when he determinated his command with the SK 7a was the middle of December 1941.

His two affidavits submitted by the prosecution prove these facts. Steimle of 24 July 1947, Document No. NO-4459, Prosecution Exhibit No. 120must 70 considered more closely. In this document Steimle admits that on the occasion of a conference with the Chief of Einsatzgruppe B, Nebe, about the beginning of October, he heard from the latter that the Sonderkommando 7a had, up to then, not yet shot any women and children, but that Nebe now requested that these should be shot as well. This statement of Nebe cannot be interpreted as meaning, that the Sonderkommando 7a under Stemmle's command had already shot male Jews. On the contrary, it can only be understood to mean that SK 7a had itself carried out executions of Jews, but this had occurred - as your Honors well know - under the Commander of the SK 7a who proceeded Steimle. The defendant Blume, who was this predecessor, has admitted on the witness stand that on one occasion he had had a number of Jews shot. The Chief of the Einsatzgruppe B, Nebe, must have known that Steimle had only taken charge of the command for a shot time before, and he must also known that the defendant had not carried out any executions of Jews at all up to then. Clear Evidence to this effect has been given in my previous expositions. Nor did the defendant Steimle subsequently carry out the afore-mentioned order of Nebe, or pass it on to his men. In this connection I refer to Document Steimle 12, Exhibit No. 12, and Document Steimle 13, Exhibit No. 13. In the same affidavit of the defendant which I mentioned above Steimle further admits that he, with the help of his Kommando, arrested persons suspected of partisan activities and members of the Red Army who were hiding within the area covered by the 9th Army instead of reporting, as it was their duty to do. After the facts had been established by the leaders of the sub-Kommandos, these arrested persons were shot.

The expression "persons suspected of partisan activities" is only contained in this affidavit because the defendant, in the course of his interrogation on which this affidavit is based, admitted that the incident report No. 123, Document Steimle No. 32, Exhibit No. 31, was correct, and this expression appears on page 10 of the original. On the witness stand the defendant stated explicitly that only and exclusively such people were classed as persons suspected of partisan activity who rendered the partisans any kind of services. In this connection I again wish to point out briefly that this statement of the defendant was incorrectly translated into English, as can be proved from the German and English transcripts. For this reason the court received the impression that even persons who had nothing to do with partisans or who could not be proved to have rendered them any services were placed in this category. It is correct that the expression "persons suspected of partisan activity" is not inexact if viewed in connection with the statement made by the defendant. That is why the defendant mentioned "persons suspected of so-called partisan activity" in the course of his interrogation, in order to show that the persons in question were partisan supporters who were suspected of having actively participated in the partisan fighting. However, it is evident that their support of the partisans had to be regarded as equally dangerous from the security point of view as the partisan activities themselves, and the court has also expressed itself to that effect. defendant Steimle were former members of the Soviet Army, that is to say, former active soldiers who wandered around behind the front in civilian clothes and pursued their real purpose which was to reinforce the partisan units. Anybody who had reported to the German offices was safe from punishment. Orders to this effect had been made public everywhere by means of posters in German and Russian. These orders contained the warning that anybody who did not fulfill his obligation to report and was arrested would be treated as a guerilla and be punished by death.

Steimle Document No. 40, Exhibit No. 39, page 2 of the German and English Document Book Steimle, Book No. III. transcript of the testimony of the defendant Steimle, when compared to the German transcript, contains some grave errors in translation, and I have made a special application to have these corrected. I beg that Your Honors, when judging the case Steimle, should take these corrections-which are still to be made - into consideration. Steimle never on his own initiative passed on the Fuehrer order to his subleaders and other ranks. He himself did not participate in any execution in which partisans were shot. The activities of his Kommando were completely taken up by the combatting of the partisans, and the danger, scope, and inescapable necessity of this combat is shown by the material submitted by the defense. In all cases when partisans were arrested they were first interrogated in detail, and only if the guilt of the individual had been established a decision was pronounced. Steimle always convinced himself by means of spot checks that the interrogations were properly carried out and that the decisions made corresponded to the result of the interrogations. In the submitted records we again and again find the statement that interrogations were carried out and that the Sub-Kommandos of the SK 7a lent their own interrogation units to the Wehrmacht, if the Wehrmacht intended to carry out operations against the partisans. The combatting of the partisans itself was partly carried out by the Sub-Kommandos of the SK 7a on their own initiative partly in cooperation with and under the command of, W ehrmacht units. The personnel which made up the Sonderkommando 7a constituted a guaranted for the irreproachable conduct of the interrogations and for the justice of the decisions based thereon. Criminal investigators with the necessary training were available and were employed as subleaders and other ranks.

of the Fuehrer-decree can be deducted unequivocally from the aforementioned actions of the Kommando. It must be conceded to the accused that it was not consistent with his character to order the death of defenseless people only because they were members of a certain race. In view of the fact that the Fuehrer decree was a binding law, he must be given credit for having intentionally taken advantage of the situation existing in the area of SK 7a in order to evade the implementation of the Fuehrer decree. He was perfectly aware of the fact that he was responsible to his superiors in this matter. However, the serious danger, represented by the partisans, was a sufficient justification for him to shelve the Fuehrer decree -without endangering his own personand give priority rather to other operations of his Kommando which he intentionally and deliberately ordered for this purpose. The reports sent to Einsatzgruppe B by his sub-detachment left no doubt in the mind of STEIMLE's superiors about the nature of his activities. These were obviously approved of by the superior authority, as he never was called to account in a disciplinary way. This fact must not be allowed to prejudice him today. Reich Main Security Office - his second assignment in Russia as Commander of Sonderkommando 4a of Einsatzgruppe C. He held this command up to 15 January 1943, when he returned to Germany for an assignment with Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office. Reference is made to the defendant's statement made on the stand with regard to the events which took place during this second commitment in Russia and in the aforementioned period (pages 1985 to 1993 of the English transcript) . There is no need to go into this lucid presentation of the matter once more. The defendant's statements correspond with the truth and even a very sharp cross-examination could not reveal any contradictions. assignment of STEIMLE in Russia. His second mission was not a matter of his own initiative, nor was it based on the fact that he had previously been in charge of a Sonderkommando.

The only real reason was - strange as it may sound - the personal friction existing between two Office Chiefs in the Reich Main Security Office. This state of affairs prevented STEIMLE from being assigned to Office VI of the RSHA, as had already been planned in the middle of 1942, and the outcome was that STEIMLE was detailed to Russia for a second time. Document STEIMLE No. 10. Exh. No. 10 establishes this very clearly.

The operations of STEIMLE's Sonderkommando 4a were marked by the fact that the individual sub-units had to operate far in the field and that an exceptionally large area had to be covered by the operations of the Kommando. At times, SK 42 had to detail sub-units to 3 different armies; these sub-units in turn maintained direct contact with the prospective troop units by their own liaison officers. Thus, the great distance between the various details resulted in the unorthodox situation that these details were temporarily subordinate to the corresponding Feldkommandanturen. STEIMLE found this situation was already existing when he arrived, and local conditions did not allow this state of affairs to be changed. The strength of personnel of Sonderkommando 4a amounted to about 80 man, that is to say, considerably less than the usual strength of personnel assigned to the other Einsatz- and Sonderkommandos. In addition, the defendant STEIMLE had to turn over, whilst he had charge of SK 4a, additional personnel to the Commander of Cha*kow. From these facts, it can be easily seen that the exploits of SK 4a and its sub-units cannot have been of great purport. Here again, the main object of the activities was, of course, the combatting of partisans. These, however, had but small opportunities for major operations in the wide, open, and sparsely settled region of the river Don, no suitable hiding places quickly to be reached being available. The engagements with partisans were, for this reason, only few during this period. As the Kommando was partly operating immediately behind the front line, its tasks were often of a different nature.

The sub-units were also affected by the movements of the armies in the sector, which were necessitated in the course of strategic regroupings; this affected the details insofar as they had to take part in these movements in order to maintain contact with the forces they were assigned to. This epoch of the SK 4a under STEIMLE is thus also marked by marching movements.

The zone of operations assigned to SK 4a. especially the region around Kursk, where STEIMLE set up his command post - had been in German hands for some time, viz. for more than a year. Security tasks thus comprised only cases of active, hostile resistance such as espionage, sabotage and communistic agitation in defiance of Wehrmacht regulations. All such cases, the number of which was small anyway, were decided upon after a close interrogation for which trained personnel was available. Here again, the defendant STEIMLE checked on these proceedings and confirmed the decisions insofar as they became known to him. The details, operating very far in the field, had, of course, to be given independent authority in this matter and were subordinate to the Feldkommandaturen. not a single action against Jews implementing the Fuehrer decree was carried out. In this connection, it is interesting to note that the defendant has pointed out that he was never advised of the fact that the Fuehrer decree covered not only Jews, but also asocial elements, Gypsies and Asiatics. As already mentioned in this connection with his activity as Commander of SK 7a of Einsatzgruppe B, STEIMLE Had not been indoctrinated on the subject of the Fuehrer decree in Pretzsch or in Dueben. Thus, it is understandable that he has never heard the full wording of this decree, since he depended solely on the information derived from his superiors and from the men of his Sonderkommando. The context of these informations, however, depended on the actual requirements of the situation at any given time, I have shown that the defendant STEIMLE never heard that according to the Fuehrer decree Jews had to be shot, before members of Sonderkommando 7a told him that at one time, under his predecessor, they had been obliged to shoot Jews, and before the Einsatzgruppe leader NEBE once told him that the SK 7a had not shot any Jewish women and children yet.

He never learned of the order to shoot the remaining groups of persons mentioned nor did any such executions take place within the area with which he was conversant. know, viz. the shooting of Jews, had not changed before he was sent to Russia for the 2nd time, to take charge of Sonderkommando 4a. No wonder then that under his command SK 4a did not shoot any Jews. In this connection, we must also keep in mind that the prosecution does not incriminate STEIMLE for this period and no evidence has, therefore, been submitted for this period. Reports were still made to the Reich Main Security Office in 1942 and 1943. These reports still mention executions of Jews; it appears, however, that the number of such executions had considerably decreased as compared with the incident reports available for 1941. The evacuation measures started in 1941 wherein the Jews were given priority, had necessarily resulted in a new situation: regions which prior to the war had been sparsely inhabited by Jews were now practically devoid of Jews. If the defendant STEIMLE asserts that there were no Jews left in his area, this is true. This cannot be challenged, as there is no proof to the contrary. The fact that in other areas a small number of Jews still existed at that time, is in no way inconsistent with STEIMLE's assertion. the prosecution-the first of which took place as early as in 1945 and on the stand, the defendant STEIMLE has stated frequently and truly that he found a gas-van when he first reached SK 4a. He then described at full length how he happened to come across this van and in which condition he found it. Utilization of the gas-van for its original purpose was no longer possible at that time. If the defendant emphasizes that he did not utilize this car, this is not only credible because no Jews were to be found in his area any more but also because any proof to the contrary is lacking and because the prosecution has not even tried to bring such evidence.

To sum up,we conclude that also during the period of STEIMLE's second mission in Russia neither he himself nor the men of Sonderkommando 4a ever committed any acts which could justify the charges. The only document submitted by the prosecution which to a certain extent admits any conclusions for this period at all is prosecution document NO-3247, Exh.121. This document, however, does not contradict the above conclusions. It rather indirectly supports the defendant's statement covering the time he spent with Sonderkommando 4a. On pages 7 and 8 of the original document, which contain a suggestion of promoting the defendant STEIMLE, it is pointed out in particular that Sonderkommando 4a was frequently involved in combat actions during the winter battle of 1942/43 and that it had proved its worth. It is quite obvious that the term "combat" covers only actual fighting engagements with the enemy in the battle field. From this sentence, we are bound to conclude that the SK 4a was engaged in the very front line combatting the Red Army jointly with Wehrmacht units. That is the only feature concerning STEIMLE's activities in the East where is mentioned in this suggestion of promoting the defendant STEIMLE, and it was obviously considered the only point worth of mention. There can be no doubt whatsoever that in such a document it would have been stressed with the utmost emphasis and even by way of overstatements, that the defendant had been particularly efficient in the implementation of the Fuehrer Decree - as it is now charged against him - if it had been at all possible to support such assertion by facts. Since no such mention has been made in the exhibit, this is striking proof for the truth of STEIMLE's statements. This proof, however, not only covers the time of his second mission in Russia but also a period when STEIMLE was commander of Sonderkommando 7a of Einsatzgruppe B.

principles which are internationally acknowledged, the infringement of national penal laws, and an utter disregard of the most primitive protection a human being is entitled to in his sphere of life in this connection. The indictment bases itself on Control Council Law No. 10 and on the offenses, the elements of which are enumerated in Article II thereof. These provisions, however, only represent an outer framework. It has been pointed out again and again by the defense in all proceedings before the Military Tribunals in Nuernberg that Control Council Law 10 cannot be applied as long as its application is inconsistent with the generally acknowledged legal maxims of "nullum crimen sine lege" and "nulla poena sine lege". I do not want to repeat all the arguments already submitted to the effect that it is impossible to punish a person for an offense which at the time of commission had not yet been declared criminal in penal law, and that nobody can be subjected to a punishment which had not been provided for at the time when the crime was committed. These legal maxims are the most fundamental axioms forming part of the criminal jurisprudence of every civilized nation. In logical consequence, we thus reach the conclusion that Control Council Law No. 10 can be taken as a legal basis for this proceeding only insofar as the elements of offenses enumerated there as criminal coincide with those for which the defendant Steimle was liable to punishment according to the law effective at the time of commission. This is, therefore, the pattern according to which the frame-work provided by Control Council Law No. 10 must be filled in. Insofar as this applies to substantive law, it is of no purport for the case of the defendant Steimle. The defense believes to have proven that the defendant Steimle neither during the time he was employed in the East, nor before or after, ever committed any punishable acts which must be atoned for according to international law or the penal law code of any nation.

laid down in Control Council Law No. 10 are a direct violation of the fundamental principles mentioned above. Special reference is made to Arti. II, sections 2c - e. These forms of participation are now rulings inconsistent with all continental penal codes. In particular, they are completely unknown in German penal law, to which the defendant Steimle was subject. I shall, therefore, discuss these provisions only as a subsidiary argument, in order to show that they do not apply to the facts of the case, as such, and that the defendant Steimle cannot be found guilty even in case these provisions were applied. while employed in the East kept within the established rules of international law and of the law of warfare then actually in force. The combatting of partisans and spies has been carrried out persistently in all wars and by all nations. Nobody can challenge the validity of the legal rules which have been developed with regard to this fight. Despite the special nature of warfare against the Red Army, waged on the part of the Soviets in defiance of the laws of warfare, the defendant Steimle never deviated from the course prescribed by the law. did not commit any crimes in the meaning of Control Council Law No. 10 nor did the members of the Kommando under him commit such crimes. He can, therefore, neither be convicted as principal nor as instigator nor as accessory. Similarly, the other forms of participation defined in Art. II section 2 c of the Control Council Law (but not contained in the continental penal codes) do not apply to him at all. On the basis of the evidence submitted by the prosecution, he cannot be charged with having taken a consenting part in any crimes whatsoever. Neither was he in any way connected with the planning and committing of such crimes. This assumption would only be justified if Steimle had been conversant with the purpose and aims of the Einsatzgruppen prior to their first commitment and if he had, in addition, taken part in the planning of their organization.

The evidence submitted by the prosecution has furnished no indications in this direction. It seems, therefore, superfluous further to discuss the elements of these forms of participation.

Einsatzgruppen and their sub-units were subordinate to the Army Groups and/or Armies. It is made still clearer by the variety - so frequently proved in this proceeding - of those groups of persons with which both the rank and file and the leader corps of the Einsatzgruppen were staffed. Beside SD members, we find in the Einsatzgruppen members of the Stapo, the criminal police, the Waffen-SS, the regular police and the Wehrmacht. The findings of the IMT particularly stress this variety. They also stress the fact that in the front areas the Einsatzgruppen were under the control of the permanent commander in chief of the army. The assignment to these independent units of the Einsatzgruppen was effected by an order of the superior command authority having jurisdiction over the individual in question, in the same way in which Wehrmacht members were assigned to special units of the combat troops. In this connection, the IMT has acknowledged the fact that SD members were, particularly during the war and in the occupied territories, not in a position to refuse - without incurring the most severe punishment - to accept an assignment given to them.

There can be no doubt that Steimle's two periods of employment in the Sonderkommandos were brought about by official orders, and that he joined the Sonderkommandos in compliance with orders which he was in no position to refuse. The notion of membership, in the general meaning of the term, implies the voluntary decision to become a member; it cannot apply to a man who joined the Sonderkommandos in the way described above, no consideration whatsoever being given to his own intentions. When judging on this matter, it is absolutely necessary to take as a basis the conditions actually prevailing at that time and, in particular, to consider that Germany was under a dictatorship which knew only too well how to secure complete compliance with its orders. There again, the mental elements implied by the term "membership" must also be considered. The very fact that the Einsatzgruppen included members of all the various organizations of the Party and the State, militates against the conclusion that a man who volunteered for one of the SS organizations, viz. the SD, and who was later assigned to the Einsatzgruppen, became a member of the latter in the general meaning of the term. The concept of "membership" implies not only cognizance of the group or organization which an individual is joining, but it also requires that the prospective member approves of the effect, in other words, that he intends to be a member in that organization. A man who volunteered for the SD knew which organization he was joining and acquired the membership by his own free will. A man who was assigned to the Einsatzgruppen by way of an order, on the other hand, was in no way in a position to determine whether or not he wanted to be a member. Furthermore, the members of a group can only be considered members, if they have the definite intention to cooperate in the fulfillment of the purpose of the group or organization. Prior to his arrival in Russia, the defendant Steimle had no idea of the purport of his tasks.

In practice, he adapted his activities to the conditions prevailing; by the way he performed his tasks, he clearly showed that he did not approve of the implementation of the Fuehrer-Decree. As for himself, he kept, therefore, aloof from it; thus, he clearly disrupted the unity of purpose common to the members of such an organization. He never furthered the purposes and aims with which the Einsatzgruppen are charged by the prosecution, nor did the fact that he was a member ever contribute to their implementation. The defense is , therefore, convinced that the defendant Steimle cannot be convicted even of that form of participation which I discussed just now; this applies quite apart from the fact that this conception of participation violates in my opinion the fundamental rules of criminal law which I mentioned before. According to the maxim that every defendant is presumed not guilty until the contrary is proved, the evidence produced by the prosecution is by no means sufficient in order to refute this presumption without any reasonable doubt. It must be kept in mind that the men in the dock were not the inaugurators of the events now under the judgment of this Court, but that they were, at the utmost, tools in the hands of a dictator. Not every tool is equally apt for the purpose for which it was designed. It must not be overlooked that not all leaders of the Einsatzgruppen and not by far all leaders of the Einsatz- and Sonderkommandos are in the dock. We must not succumb to the impression - an impression which could be formed easily - that the events in the East, of which the prosecution has produced evidence, had been implemented only and exclusively by those leaders who are present in this Courtroom. This notion would mean a conviction based on a superficial and misleading aspect, in other words only on the fact that the defendants served in the Einsatzgruppen. This wrong inference can easily be avoided by applying to the determination of the personal guilt of the individual defendants those standards of diligence which we can safely expect from this Court.

evidence militates for the defendant and supports his deposition on the stand so unambiguously, that it is impossible to deem the defendant guilty, particularly under counts one and two. I am convinced that the Court will roach the same conclusion.

I shall now tackle count three of the indictment, viz. the membership in criminal organizations. The SD has been declared a criminal organization by the IMT; this also includes office VI of the Reich Main Security Office. It has been established beyond any doubt that in 1936 Steimle voluntarily joined the SD, an organization of the SS, and that the later entered the Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office, again on a voluntary basis. It may be mentioned cursorily that Steimle was never a member of the general SS, but that his activities were restricted to his work in a special SS organization, viz. the SD. These facts have been stated by the defendant from the outset and they have been confirmed by the evidence. Prior to the discussion of those considerations which have caused the IMT to declare the SD a criminal organization in the above sense, I feel it is indicated to give you a character-study of the defendant Steimle, as resulting from the documents produced by the defense. Only if this entire picture is taken into consideration, a proper verdict can be rendered on this count. In this connection, I re-iterate that it is indispensable to consider the actual conditions as they then existed and to make them your starting point. It will then be revealed that the activities of the defendant Steimle in the East followed the same trends in which he had been brought up, as a human being, even before 1933, and to which he had adhered during his SD activities in Stuttgart and in the Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office.

1.) The affidavits submitted by me as Documents No. 1-8, exhibits No. 1-8, unanimously describe the defendant as an honorable man of innate decency, striving to propagate this decency in his surroundings and trying for his part to ensure that the political leadership of the State conformed with this attitude.

The motive causing him to enter the SD was that this job gave him an opportunity of counteracting abuses in the Party and unjustified measures of the authorities. May I point out that it was one of the characteristics of the Nazi regime to eliminate every trace of criticism of measures taken by the Party and the State. The SD alone offered a possibility for cautious criticism (later on even developing into unveiled frankness); at the same time, it offered a safeguard from the consequences otherwise automatically incurred by such a rash act. The fact that within the scope of his activities Steimle availed himself fully of this opportunity for criticism, is made particularly clear, i.e. by the document Steimle No. 3, Exh. No. 3, in which a former executive of the Wuerttemberg Ministry of the Interior furnishes detailed facts concerning Steimle's criticisms and their extent. intrinsic sincerity of the defendant, who intervened on behalf of all those whom he found decent and worthy themselves. If such persons, not being party members, criticized the measures of the Third Reich, he did not feel himself called upon to persecute them; on the contrary, he was instrumental in stopping or neutralizing such persecutions. When individual cases were submitted to him, in which persons had been put into concentration camps, he never grudged his assistance. This clearly shows that he endeavored to prevent sinister and unjustified measures initiated by other quarters or to have them rescinded. The fact that Steimle was far from advocating unjustified political measures, is made particularly clear by his attitude toward the Jewish problem. According to the documents submitted by me, he more than once lent his assistance to persecuted Jews, and it is an established fact that he took no part in the anti-Jewish program of November 1938. This is repeatedly proved by Exh. No. 6, Doc. Steimle No. 6. In particular, I would like to stress the document Steimle No. 5, Exh. No. 5. It contains actual facts which clearly illustrate that Steimle was by no means one of those fanatics who adhere to any policy whatsoever without any qualms and who lack any convictions of their own.

As far as possible under the conditions prevailing, he surely was an idealist devoted to, and working for, a cause which he considered right, and he was not in a position to foresee the final outcome.

We would not do justice to him if we disregarded these facts. At the time when STEIMLE joined the organization, even foreign countries did not profess a negative attitude toward the Nazi regime; the defendant STEIMLE then had no reason to disbelieve the often re-iterated public slogans calling for integrity within the state. As to the Jewish problem, he never knew of the final solution actually planned, because the plitical leadership of the state kept this plan absolutely secret. Personally, he believed in the possibility of a solution similar to the solution at present sponsored by the United Nations. In this connection, reference is made to doc. No. 5, Exh. 5. Had he been a fanatic unscrupulously backing any police whatsoever against the Jews, he would never have dreamt of making the slightest move when asked to help a Jew to be released from the concentration camp. This attitude toward the Jewish problem, proved by acts, makes it again understandable that STEIMLE did not implement this part of the Fuehrer-Decree while in charge of the Sonderkommandos. V) With regard to the specific groups of actions which caused the I.M.T.

to declare the S.D. a criminal organization, and to include the co-operated in any of these actions.

It was not the task of the tion in a concentration camp.

At the time of the persecution of charge of political security in that country; it is, therefore, a priori impossible that he took part in these activities.

Of the this was treated as a secret until the end of the war.

If it has Court No. II, Case No. IX.

in the office VI STEIMLE was ever concerned with this matter. The same applies to the finding of the I.M.T. that the SD took part in misused for the commission of crimes.

In order to reach a proper sidered.

As far as STEIMLE, while serving with the Einsatzgruppen (an organization not forming a branch of the SD as such), heard of ascribed to the SD as such.

It must also be kept in mind that the subject to criminal prosecution by the German authorities.

Today, we are relieved from the pressure of dictatorship.

Today, it is easy refused, because it purported the commission of common murder.

At office VI of the Reich Main Security Office (first in group VI B, Western Europe, and later on in the group for military affairs), they, too, could in STEIMLE's mind not result in the assumption that this organization was misused for criminal purposes.

As to Court No. II, Case No. IX.

the SD by the I.M.T. On the contrary, it again reveals the which reasons and in which spirit the defendant STEIMLE was a member of the SD and of the office VI. The decision on whether or not he is guilty under count three must be left with the court. But a general remark seems indicated: The leadership of the Nazi regime deliberately deceived a large number of people in order to exploit their idealistic convictions. I leave it undecided to which extent this may constitute individual guilt. It remains a fact that the defendant STEIMLE was a member of the SD and of the Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office. But even if the attitude of the defendant which I have explained fully should not be considered a justification in the legal sense, it must at least be condired on attenuating circumstance, as far as Count three is involved. Another indication pointing in the same direction is the finding of the I.M.T. that after the outbreak of the war the members of theSD were not free any longer to choose their assignment and that they were at the same time barred from resigning the SD membership. In these circumstances, the personal guilt of the defendant under count three can only be found in the fact that he voluntarily joined the SD in 1936, in other words at a time in which he was not at all in a position to foresee which duties would be assigned to individual SD members by the leadership of Court No. II, Case No. IX.

the state. I reiterate: It must be left to the court to reach a just verdict.

Your Honors, I have reached the end of my address, but I don't want to conclude without a reiterated appeal for the application of your vast experience and your usual diligence to the decision of this case. I do know that you are facing a difficult task. But I do also know that your professional ability and your experience are devoted not to the cause of revenge, but to the ideal of justice, and that the decision is in the most capable hands. Your verdict will ensure that an individual a man who in the position assigned to him successfully tried to assert his personal decency - does not suffer for the monstrous guilt of the regime.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Hoffmann, if you don't mind, we will let Dr. Bergold begin the first thing Monday morning because, as you know, he has an engagement elsewhere. That will be agreeable to you?

DR. HOFFMANN: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: And then, Dr. Lummert, you, of course, will follow, thirty o'clock.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 9 February 1948, at 0930 hours.)

COURT NO. II, CASE NO. IX.

THE MARSHAL: The Honorable, the Judges of Military Tribunal II.

Military Tribunal II is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed, Dr. Bergold.

DR. BERGOLD (Attorney for the Defendant Biberstein):

Mr. President, Your Honors!

"In February 1934; mentally disturbed by the event of the National-Socialist revolution, I retired to a quiet mountain village high in the Bavarian Alps. The form of German democracy, existing at the time, which seemed to me until then correct and just, appeared suddenly as questionable and wrong, not because National-Socialism in my opinion could have justified and proved itself, but because of its Inherent character. It seemed, as if the right of democracy, the way in which it existed at the time, had changed and become a make-belief. It is my hobby to write poetry, because a real man should cultivate hobbies to widen his horizon. Tearing myself from deep reflection on right and wrong under German democracy of the time, I indulged in this hobby in February 1934. and wrote the verse with which I would like to preceed my statements concerning the jurisdiction of this Tribunal. The verse reads as follows:

"'Can just beginnings turn to unjust ends?' I would like to remind the Tribunal, that I have already pointed out in the case against Oswald Pohl, during the "defense of Horst Klein, that it seemed to me, as if in the cation to speak for humanity.

THE PRESIDENT: Proceed.

DR. BERGOLD: Thus in my opinion a formal jurisduction has to be determined. However, a person who searches for justice is aware of the fact, that there exists an actual jurisdiction for a court, apart from a formal one.

"A court may not be competent to judge a case if the law to be applied, by its very nature, lacks the inner justification and possibility to judge a certain case. Actual jurisdiction is lacking where the case has happened in an atmosphere which has a wholly different concept of law than that upon which the law is based by which the court is to pass sentence.

"I would like to give an example, which is purposely exaggerated, in order to clarify what I mean. Assuming that an American court would undertake to sentence a national of an Oriental state for bigamy, who with several of his wives has somehow been brought before the court. If in such a case the Court would not consider the fact, that according to the law of an Oriental State, polygamy is permissible, but would only judge in conformity with American laws, one would have every reason to speak about an abuse of the law.

"I believe that our trial presents a similar case. This trial consists actually of two trials, firstly the trial concerning the so-called Fuehrer order, which supposedly demanded the extermination of a certain group of people without trial and only because they belonged to a certain race or had a certain political opinion. And secondly the trial concerning the execution of persons only on the strength of police measures, persons, who had committed unlawful acts, which were permitted under certain circumstances, such as sabotage, espionage, being in "possession of arms, and ambushing military personnel; that during the occupation of Germany.

As far as dealing with Fuehrer order.

I shall leave the questions with regard to "With reference to the trial concerning executions pened solely in the war between Germany and Russia.

We "In the case at hand a just sentence can only be "Firstly it must be pointed out, that no international agreement with regard to treatment of the civilian population existed between Russia and Germany.

I have submitted to the Tribunal document No. 1 Exhibit No. 1 the interrogation of the former Reich Foreign Minister Freiherr von Neurath, which shows that in 1918 respectively 1919 the the present Russian Government expressly cancelled all agreements which had bean made by the former Russian Czarist Government, which also included the Hague convention on land warfare I have already pointed out several times, particularly in the Milch Trial, the significance of such a cancellation of a codification of international law. It means, that between such states International Law does no longer exist at all. I would like to remind the Tribunal of my former arguments, which you as Judges in the Milch case will undoubtedly still remember, "Thus Germany was actually free to carry out criminal proceedings for violation of prescribed military laws and to choose any type of procedure she thought proper under the circumstances.

She was therefore fully entitled to put the prosecution of these crimes into the hands of the police, as long as the most primitive right of a defendant, namely the right to be heard and the examination of evidence was preserved.

"Even if one wishes to put forward, that without the existence of international law, Germany should have respected the national customs of the civilian population by analogous application of Article 43 of the provisions of the Hague convention on land warfare, i.e. by carrying out criminal proceedings in the same manner as was customary in Russia, then the police procedure, as adopted and prescribed by Germany, would still have been lawful, "Of importance here are legal usage and concepts which were valid in both Russia and Germany and which differ so decisively from these of Your country, that from Your concept of law an actual understanding of the legal situation seems impossible.

Your country, Your Honors, stands outside of Europe. Although it is an offspring of Europe it has developed completely independently in a way of its own, The case at hand however deals with Germany and Asiatic Russia, two worlds, which attract each other and which sometimes influence one another in an inexplicable manner, even if they subscribe to utterly different ideologies. Russia has very little in common with Europe proper, far less so with America; it always leaned more towards Asia. From Russia the Asiatic mode of living flows into Europe, just as much as the European mode of living infiltrates into Asia.

"This procedure is evidently somehow in keeping with the Russian ideology In Russia this procedure has been developed and elaborated on in great detail and was the normal political procedure even under Czarism. Already at that time there were political cases, where the Secret Police, the Ochrana, played the part of prosecution and judge. Soviet Russia has developed and promoted the procedure of the Secret Police on a large scale. The literature of all countries contains many references to it and it also contains frequent passionate protests against such a development of legal measures. But all this does not really belong here. The sole issue here is to determine what was customary in Russia and what is also valid there to-day. In this connection I would like to refer the Tribunal to the statements by witness Mae concerning the methods of the NKWD, formerly famed as the GPU. I am much obligated to the prosecution for submitting document 5855, Document Book 5 3, Exhibit No. 241. This report dated 31 August 1931 and written by Dr. Mahnke, concerning the fate of a certain Walter Vetter, shows that the latter had been arrested and sentenced to death by the NKWD because of his German origin and his correspondence with his brothers and sisters. This document proves beyond doubt the post and present methods of the NKWD in Russia. adopted methods frequently similar to those of the GPUNKWD. When I recall that in Germany there is a rumor, that prior to 1941 Senior Gestapo Officers had absolved training courses in Russia, when I consider that a procedure like the ill-famed Nacht-und-Nebel (Night and Fob) decree has been in use in Russia for many years, a "procedure under which men were arrested and vanished into it seems almost justified to conclude that the Supreme Gestapo Command was imitating Russian methods, when introducing police proceedings.

One thing is certain, that is, that the Gestapo had developed a procedure which in all formal aspects was the exact replica of the usual Russian police procedure. countries developed a police procedure, which thus became customary and the application of which does not constitute a violation of International Law, because this procedure is a valid form of law in both countries. basis of the prevalent views of Your country. Am I not justified in adapting the word of Pilatus, thus asking: "What is right?" Your Honors, in Your country a book has been published, which gives a valuable answer to this question, which has been given by one of Your highest and best known judges, and which deserves deep reflection. I am referring here to the book "A free man's life" which is the biography of Judge Brandeis, judge at the Supreme Court. This book has been reviewed in the "Amerikanische Rundschau" of October 1907, 15th volume, 3rd edition in a report by a certain Mr. Alphons Mason. This article has appeared under the heading "Holmes and Brandeis stimmen dagegen" (Holmes and Brandeis objected et it. This article quotes two statements by Judge Holmes, Judge at the Supreme Court. The first one reads as follows: I sincerely doubt that we know what constitutes good and bad laws. Thus I have only one practical criterion. What does the majority demand? Butt I take any bet, that the majority, would not demand what it does, if it nevi better; but that is irrelevant here."

The second quotation reads as follows: "The characteristic of a good government is that it expresses the will of the greatest concentration of power, whether the will of the majority be unreasonable or reasonable". Thus this high Judge of Your country, Your Honors, takes the point of view that there is no absolute law which rises above public opinion, but that law in only that which conforms to the opinion of the majority of a people.

Germany and Russia is largely to be regarded as a genuine law, the application of which renders no one punishable. Socialism certainly enjoyed the support of the majority of the German people We do not want to dispute here whether this was intelligent and sensible whether the majority knew enough to judge correctly. Holmes too declared that this is unimportant, that what matters chiefly is the fact that the majority decided in favour of a certain ideology. It is thus unimportant whether and how large a minority suffers from and opposes such an ideology At any rate, by the fact that the majority of the German people decided in favour of the totalitarian regime, its laws and methods of police procedures became legally valid. mentioned, that similar procedures were in use by the secret political police during the regime of the Czar. When the Czarist regime ceased to exist after the majority of the Russian people rejected it in 1917. the majority of the Russian people decided at first in favour of the Bolshevist regime which is likewise totalitarian This system again established a secret police which is even more powerful and far reaching than that of the Czarist regime had been, and a special police procedure was again perfected. In Russia too, the will of the majority supports this system and its inherent laws and these are undoubtedly also a justification of the Hitler regime.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Bergold, before we get into the discussion of evidence, may I ask you one question, please. You say here that the majority of the German people approved of the German Police measures, that is to say, the National Socialist Police Measures, because the German people approved of the Hitler Regime.

DR. BERGOLD: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Am I correct.

DR. BERGOLD: Yes, that is the conclusion.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes.

DR. BERGOLD: Because Hitler's Regime was approved of.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. Would you say then that the German people approved of the war in all its phases.

DR. BERGOLD: Well, this is a two-fold question. I can decide in favor of a certain regime, a Totalitarian regime, and therefore accept the laws which are made by this regime. But this does not mean that I approve and that it is a different matter -- if such regime suddenly ask a war and thus commits crimes. What is concerned here is the form of the legal procedure, Your Honor, and it is only legal procedure that Mr. Holmes talks about. The question you raise here is a different matter, namely, certain kind of deeds done by this regime; the totalitarian form was approved of and a totalitarian government will permit such acts. But that you can see in Russia; war and carrying out of crime is not concerned here. Even a totalitarian regime can be handled in a decent manner. May I remind you that in ancient days tyrants appeared who were benefactors of their race. My legal procedure, I can approve of and use it to a good purpose or to a bad purpose. I can even abuse Democracy.

THE PRESIDENT: But Dr. Bergold, all of this results because of a war. If there had been no war there would have been no occupation of Germany, there would have been no trial such as the one in which we are participating. You have stated that the Tribunal cannot inquire into Police Procedure, because the German people approved of the Government, and, therefore, the Police Procedure, but since we would not have bean here if there had not been a war, then it is interesting to know, because of your arguments whether the German people approved of the ware If the German people approved of the war, and all the consequences which flowed from the initiation of a war, then certainly the German people cannot complain, because of the procedure which followed.

As you have indicated, there was an unconditional surrender; and, therefore, they would have been amenable to whatever followed justly. If the German people didn't approve of the war, then it is in their interest that an impartial Tribunal inquires into the abuses which were committed by their rulers.

DR. BERGOLD: Your Honors, the manner in which you have discussed this with me now proves that you look at everything from a point of view of war, and that you would like to look at it from the point of view of the German people. Perhaps due to the translation or to the speed you didn't quite understand what I was trying to say. I say, this trial contains two trials. I won't talk about the Fuehrer Decree now. We are now concerned with procedure against saboteurs. This procedure was decided by police jurisdiction. This manner of procedure only then constituted crime, if it were crime, according to the German law, or according to the Russian law. According to the German law police procedure existed even against Germans, and according to the Russian law this police procedure could also prosecute these people, and you cannot decide this charge according to your law, but only according to the laws which existed in Germany and Russia, or, else, you would arrive at a situation which I gave in my crude example: an Oriental man who had married several wives would in your country be accused of bigamy according to your law, although the law of his country permitted him to do so In such case you have to consider the law of the Oriental State as well in passing a judgment and not your. American law, because according to his law this man conducted himself properly, and, Police Procedure according to the Hague Convention of Land Warfare are legal if they were legal when applicable in Germany and Russia.

When speaking of Police Procedure, I am not talking about the Fuehrer Decree. Now, that is quite a different matter, and I maintain that Biberstein has nothing to do with this. Therefore, the point is not whether or not we approve of war; even if we disapprove of it -- which of course, we do -- even then, this does not constitute crime, because they conformed with the Hague Convention of Land Warfare, namely, the occupied powers have to consider the legal uses and the law of the occupied country, and I have proved to you that this procedure was customary in Russia.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. I got your point of view. I cannot help but to reflect on what you regard as an appropriate, if a grotesque comparison between polygamy and murder. Certainly a Tribunal would accept the customs of another nation which didn't conflict with the fundamental rights to live, and if a man thinks we can live well with ten wifes, I won'd dispute with him how wrong he may be, but certainly the law with regard to the sanctity of human life is something which is universal. The other is more or less a domestic matter, Whereas the sanctity of human life is something which demands and receives universal protection, and we are more or less proceeding -- not more or less -- but actually proceeding under an International aspect which guarantees the sanctity of human life. However, Dr. Bergold, I don't wish to interrupt you any more. I am sorry that I broke in. You may continue.

DR. BERGOLD: Your Honor, I. am only glad you interrupted me, and the discussion was very instructive for me, and I am very grateful to you for it. I would like just to add one thing, namely, that of course, I hold certainly the same point as you did, that human life is sacred, but the matter under discussion here is whether the life of a human being may be taken, as a result of a trial or whether this is a criminal act. After all, this is all the same, whether I am condemned to death according to a public charge, or a secret charge, but in the results of both, the rights of the defense has been kept.

May I continue.

THE PRESIDENT: Please do.

DR. BERGOLD: Your Honor, in this connection, may I ask you, to give your attention to BIBERSTEIN's testimony as given on the afternoon of 21 November 1947. BIBERSTEIN testified at that time that, in Russia, he never found support for the theory, that the police procedure resorted to by the Germans was considered inhuman by the Russians. He based this on the fact that the Russians frequently gave information themselves, knowing of course What kind of procedure would be applied; secondly that Russians themselves carried out individual investigations and, -- this however is the most important part of the testimony -that, from the viewpoint of his own ideology, a Russian had said at that time with regard to the activity of Einsatzkommando 6: "The Germans will lose the war because they are not severe enough." This shows that the criminal procedure resorted to by the police was not perceived by the Russian people as something inhumane, but as normal. was in Russia. You will now understand me when I tell you that your law lacks the actual jurisdiction to pass judgment here. If you were to judge here solely from the point of view of your ideology, you would judge legal events and happenings, which would in no point conform with your concept of law, and for which perhaps the people of your country would not have the slightest understanding. This would not be a defect, rather it would be a good sign. For we may only preserve the purity of our inherent character, if we lack the ability to fully understand to the uttermost, that which is absolutely alien and heterogeneous to us. If however we would pass judgment in such a case, proceeding from our concept and upholding only cur legal maxims, our verdict would constitute an abuse of justice. This, it should never be.

situation which existed in the foreign country amongst foreign peoples. Therefore, by taking into consideration such reflections, I summarize my statements to the effect that the prosecution of Russian citizens for sabotage, espionage, possession of arms and attacks on persons military etc. purely by methods of police procedures and the pronouncement of death sentences in these procedures do not constitute a war crime or crimes against humanity. acts of the defendant BIBERSTEIN and thus to himself personally, I must discuss one special pica. This concerns the fact that BIBERSTEIN may claim one special reason for exoneration which is derived from his person, namely the reason of compulsion. Military Tribunal in accordance with Control Council Law No. 10 are precedence cases for other courts. Tribunal IV, in the case against FLICK, set forth in its arguments to Count I of the indictment, that with regard to the provision of Par. 2, Article II of Control Council Law No. 10, the claim to compulsion was admissible for all persons indicted by the Military Tribunals and it based its findings by referring in detail to Whartons Criminal Law Vol. I, Article VII, par. 126 and Article XIII, Par. 384, foot note. It carefully illustrated, that every act in Germany during the war, which might be interpreted as an attempt to delay or prevent prescribed regulations, constituted sabotage and was subject to most severe and harsh punishment and was sometimes even punishable by death;furthermore that many decrees and announcements kept the population aware of these threats of punishment and that from many cases, the population know of the severe punishment being meted out for violations. The Tribunal climaxed its presentations with the statement that where irresistible physical compulsion rules, the will of the perpetrator is lacking and his guilt is therefore non-existent officials in the Reich.

This has been shown beyond doubt in his interrogation. During the war he was drafted into the Reich-Security Fain Office without having volunteered his services, he was compulsorily appointed chief of Einsatzkommando 6 even against his will, and had to fulfill his duties there in spite of the fact that he did so unwillingly and on his own initiative did everything possible to be relieved of his tasks. procedure and the execution of convicted criminals resulting therefrom was carried out under orders and that they had been established by his predecessors in accordance with orders prior to his time, i.e. prior to the beginning of October 1942 when he himself was assigned to EK 6. As a man who was ordered to assume office on the basis of a war order he could not resist these orders and instructions. He wasconstantly aware, that resistance to these orders was threatened with severe punishment. I shall remind you, that alone the fact, that because in the opinion of his superior, he had started his Kommando on the march to a prescribed operational area too late, this resulted in court martial proceedings against him. One therefore cannot compare him with a civilian official, who defends himself somewhere because of certain happenings. Likewise, one cannot compare him with a person liable to emergency service, although, remarked aside; the arguments of the prosecution in this point are incorrect. Assis proven by the court martial proceedings brought against him, he was subject to a much more stringent and severe law, i.e. Military law. As a military person, it was impossible for him to resist an order without endangering his life. 6, police proceedings were carried out, in which, aside from imprisonment for certain specific crimes which were announced to the population on public pastors and by radio as being punishable by death, there was nothing he could do to prevent this.

He was forced to permit these proceedings if he did not want to lose his own life. He acted under compulsion.

And it was not as if this procedure was particularly cruel. The defendant BIBERSTEIN explained to you in detail how such proceedings were conducted. Punishable by death were: pillage, possession of arms, attacks on military installations and signal equipment, attacks on military persons, espionage, sabotage, terror acts etc. Such crimes are punishable throughout the world. The defendant has already described to you how horrible and cruel were the crimes upon which judgement had to be passed. I shall only remind you of the terrible incident where a live, hungry rat was tied to the body of a German soldier who had been buried, and how this rat devoured, him. Such and similar cases were reported, persons under suspicion were arrested, witnesses and evidence were examined and the culprit interrogated Then sentence was passed Thus, a verdict was pronounced only if the officials who judged the case had convinced themselves that the charges were true. Your Honors, you have heard from BIBERSTEIN that the perpetrators almost always confessed. This corresponds to the psychological makeup of the Russian. With such a state of affairs the proper verdict, i.e. a death sentence, would have immediately been clear even to a regular court. did not want to endanger his own person, need not even have worried about it whether the procedure was cruel. It was a customary one. It was ordered by the superior authorities. No guilt could be ascribed to him if he permitted it. With such a state of affairs, he may, without doubt, fully claim a state of compulsion.

has been followed, then it and it alone must prove the contrary. I refer to the verdict of Tribunal IV in the Flick case, which, in the beginning, under Par. 4 of its general legal principles ruled that the prosecution carries the burden of proof. Thus, it is insufficient if the prosecution merely proves that executions were carried out. It must prove beyond that that these executions were carried cut arbitrarily, without examination and without a hearing of the convicted person. The prosecution has not even made an attempt to offer such proof. The defendant on the other hand testified as witness, that such examinations took place. A number of other defendants have testified the some. The witness HARTL, whom the prosecution chose as their witness against one of the defendants confirmed this too. He too know, that in all cases of executions which could not be traced to the actual so-called Fuehrer decree, a definite police procedure was followed. The prosecution had nothing, with which it could have opposed this testimony. One could now say, that the fact that defendant BIBERSTEIN tolerated executions by gas, should be ascribed to his guilt. But this type of execution too was ordered by the superior authorities and BIBERSTEIN therefore, in this point also, may claim compulsion. beyond a doubt, shows that the defendant is not guilty in this point, Document No. 2, Exhibit No. 2, Document book BIBERSTEIN shows that the large German dictionary, called Meyers Konversations Lexikon, already illustrated in 1926, that in several states of the United States of America, executions were carried out in gas chambers even at that time.

This is not an invention of National Socialist propaganda. In 1926, when this book was printed, National Socialism had little significance in Germany. Defendant BIBERSTEIN testified that he recalled from former times that the United States also used gas in executions.

Consequently he need not have had any special scruples whether such types of executions were cruel. On the contrary however, he was of the opinion, as was stated by him in the morning session of 21 November 1947 (German minutes, 2832), that execution by gas originates from a humane desire. This consideration is quite correct. Modern methods of execution are invented nowadays only guarantee a more gentle execution of sentence and not to act more cruel then before. The defendant convinced himself of the nature of the execution and, in his opinion, assumed, that the method of execution was actually a more gentle one. The executed persons impressed him as being peaceful and calm. This at least, was the impression he had gathered. This impression alone is of decisive importance in judging him. From everyday experience be know that fatal accidents frequently occur when persons worked in a closed garage with the motor running and that such accidents happened so easily because the victim knew nothing about the impending death by gas, Taking all these things into consideration, BIBERSTEIN need not have had any particular scruples about such a method execution, The prosecution attempts to present this type of death as a special guilt. Your Honor's may I again refer to the Flick verdict, where, under Par. 5 the following is stated: "whereever authentic evidence permits two sensible final conclusions, that of guilt and that of innocence, the second possibility must be chosen. The defendant presented to you a number of sensible reasons which caused him to assume that execution by gas was more humane and more gentle than by shooting.

Since my arguments and my train of thought are not nonsensical, you must assume that no guilt can be ascribed to him for tolerating this type of execution, of which he could have personally assumed that it was humane. Therefore, aside from the fact that even with regard to executions by gas, the defendant may claim compulsion, not guilt can be ascribed to him in this point since he never saw anything cruel in it.

I shall now turn to Biberstein's person. His case is a special case. He comes from a world entirely different from that of the usual defendant. For many years he had been a priest. He had fought hard battles with his conscience for his belief and for his concept of God. By adhering to an established tradition he did not make it easy for himself. He has struggled and fought. But he was never a fanatic. It is because of his spirit of toleration that he came into conflict with his minister at the Ministry for Ecclesiastical Affairs and his proposals for a peaceful compromise with the church remained without effect. I need not revert in detail to his pre-war career, no charges arise from it against Biberstein. do.

Then war came and Biberstein became a soldier. His career as a soldier ended abruptly. Without having had any previous knowledge of the fact and without having in any way aspired to it, he was suddenly discharged from the army and assigned to the Reich Security Main Office by a war order. Biberstein described to you how an intrigue had been responsible for putting him into the ranks of the Gestapo. He testified that realizing his unsuitableness and acknowledging his different ideology he was unwilling to take over the Gestapo Office in Opeln. Lastly he described to you how, fearing the consequences and hoping to regain his freedom he had finally complied with the order in view of the fact that it was a war measure.

life was only concerned with finding a true relationship to God, should have been unhappy in such an office. It is not unbelievable that it was not long before he recognized that he lacked all technical qualifications to profit by his office. I concede that one could become somewhat suspicious on hearing that during the year he worked at the Gestapo Office in Opeln he had not bothered to acquaint himself with the duties of his office. However, if one bears in mind that, from the beginning, he was determined to leave the Gestapo Office after the year was over, and if one further bears in mind that according to his whole psychological make up, such activity must have been repugnant and disagreeable to him, one can understand that as a result of this inner resistance he maintained a passive attitude and took no serious interest in his office but left everything to his trusted experienced officials. He committed no illegal acts during his term of office. Neither could the Prosecution prove that he had committed any illegal acts.

Finally you have heard him say that he immediately pursued his transfer and release. Nothing speaks against his illustration. The short period during which he was in Russia vouchsafes for the correctness of his statements. This is the position of this man in Russia. the Fuehrer Decree neither in Germany nor in Russia and that no wholesale executions or any executions at all were ever carried out during his stay with the Kommando, that were based on the Fuehrer Decree. The president of the Court understandably remonstrated that it did not sound credible that he should not have heard of the Fuehrer Decree. Your Honors, I on the other hand am of the opinion, that nothing in the world is more credible. I shall now assume? His superior perhaps, who, because of his request for transfer and because he was a former priest recognized in him a wholly unsuited person and who even agreed to his release since Biberstein made every effort to be released from the Kommando? This superior must have considered him nothing but an outsider. However, outsiders were not taken into confidence on such terrifying orders which instilled horror even in those persons of this circle who were of a more harsh nature. Even the men of his Kommando had no reason to do so. Certainly they too must have recognized in their Chief a man, who was not suited for such terrible tasks. Moreover, it is not even certain that members of EK 6 knew of the Fuehrer Decree. The testimony of defendant Graf speaks against it. It is quite natural that Biberstein had no knowledge of the so-called Fuehrer Decree when one further considers, that according to the testimony of this same defendant Graf, executions in accordance with the Fuehrer Decree were presumably never carried out by EK 6 and that Graf furthermore had heard of only one wholesale execution which had been carried out by Jeckeln's special police formation long before Biberstein's arrival, and when finally it is considered that at the end of 1942, the period of large wholesale executions for all Kommandos had long since passed and that Jews were practically non-existent in the territory surrounding Rostow.

The Prosecution in Document Book 5 0 bearing the title Biberstein, has presented evidence, which at first created the impression as though Jews had been found and executed in the district around Rostow at a time which would have been immediately prior to the transfer and only a few months before the arrival of Biberstein in Russia. However, the Prosecution, upon our objections, expressly limited the probative value of these documents to the extent that they only wished to show that executions of Jews were still carried out somewhere in Russia during May, June and July of 1942. Through the testimony of the witness Hartl as well as that of defendant Graf and Biberstein, the Prosecution itself knows exactly that the defendant did not come to the Einsatzkommando 6 in Rostow until the middle of September 1942. The documents concern, as has already been stated, the period from May 1942 until July 1942. At this time Biberstein had not even been transferred. The towns mentioned in the documents are located in the vicinity of the Rumanian border and are at least 500 kilometers west of Rostow. Therefore they do not prove that executions of Jews were actually still carried out in the Rostow district during the time that Biberstein was there. A Russian proverb once said: "Russia is large and the Czar is far away". This proverb wanted to express that Russia is so large and far flung that somewhere, something may always happen in this area of which the head of the state knows nothing. This applies even more so to the present war in far-flung Russia. One cannot make events seem probable in Rostow because at some far distant place occasional executions of Jews were carried out and at that by the Police or the rural police, or the offices of the civilian administration which had nothing to do with the Einsatzkommandos. One cannot refute the statements of Biberstein, Graf and Hartl with this.

of the Fuehrer Decree and that he permitted such executions, that is executions due to racial or political membership, to be carried out. I refer once again to the findings of Tribunal IV concerning the burden of proof by the Prosecution. The Prosecution has furnished no proof. No proof can be furnished by presenting evidence in the manner in which it was attempted in Document Book No. 50. I believe that this manner of presenting evidence would be sharply criticized in their country. connection with the question concerning the number of executions, Biberstein has stated before the Court that he had made his deposition concerning the number of executions under certain moral compulsion, that in addition he had been misled by the statements of the interrogator in Eselheide, that a thousand more or less would make no material difference. A man, who would make such a statement in such a foolish manner, a statement which under certain circumstances could incriminate him, would certainly have admitted from the very beginning that he knew of and had acted in accordance with the Fuehrer Decree. In none of the interrogations and in none of the affidavits which he made is there even a hint of this. He has nothing to state or to admit in this point. One must take this into consideration and weigh this when examining the question whether or not he has told the truth. I now come to the affidavit made by him and presented against him.

Biberstein has stated that this affidavit was made under duress. That has actually been proved. Document No. 4997, Prosecution Exhibit 183, which contains the record of Biberstein's interrogation begins as follows:

Q What is your name?

Q Raise your right hand and repeat the following oath: "I swear by God the Almighty and Omniscient, that I will speak the full truth, conceal nothing and add nothing, so help me God.

Amen."

Biberstein has stated that a number of proceedings were pending at that time. He has explained to you that due to the military situation at that time the civilian population everywhere had carried out large scale attacks against the occupation forces. Biberstein has also explained that the executions which were ordered in the police proceedings were not carried out individually but in groups, that is to say after certain time intervals and for a certain number of condemned. This in itself is an understandable procedure and is in no way criminal. a war crime nor of crimes against humanity.

With regard to the last count of the Indictment, i.e. membership in an organization which has been declared criminal, I have the following to say:

Biberstein was Honorary Fuehrer of the SS. As such he never did any service in the SS. Therefore he was never used for criminal acts, nor has it been proven that he knew of the criminal acts which took place after 1 September 1939.

He was never a member of the Gestapo or the SD. He was merely on duty with the Stapo Office in Opeln because he was compelled to, that is to say due to a special war order he was there for one year on a trial basis. Through this, however, he did not become a member of the Gestapo. In this office he neither committed nor heard of crimes. The prosecution was unable to prove either of these. The Index of the Prosecution contains the assertion that Biberstein had admitted this in his affidavit. An examination of the affidavit, however, shows that this assertion on the part of the prosecution is incorrect. of an order, Fuehrer of an Einsatzkommando, this, however, only from 9 9 Feb.

the beginning and characteristically only temporarily. In this position he never committed any crimes. Nor did he discover that the Einsatzkommandos were used to commit crimes. He had heard only once of a mass execution of Jews as a singular reprisal measure for severe acts of sabotage by these Jews. He found this out however, and this is especially important, only on his return trip to Germany after he no longer belonged to the Einsatzkommando 6. Whether this report which he received at that time was correct, is immaterial. He at least knew and had heard nothing else. Therefore, at the time during which he belonged to the Einsatzkommando 6, he did not discover that the Einsatzkommandos were used to carry out criminal acts. In this connection it is also important that from the moment of his transfer, he made every effort to leave the Einsatzkommando and that he succeeded in accomplishing this. Thus I may say that no proof has been furnished that Biberstein had any knowledge of criminal acts. of the Indictment.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Hoffmann, you may proceed.

DR. BERGOLD: Your Honor, I beg your pardon, I have to leave almost immediately. If you remember I told you I had to go to another trial and I would therefore ask that you excuse me.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, Dr. Bergold.

But it was my intention to leave judgment of the question whether or not Nosske had told the truth when he stated that he had not executed the Fuehrer Order, to the cross examination.

in 1941, fully realized that that order was utterly unjustifiable. National Socialist policy. worth of prevailing with one's own conceptions, once they were recognized as just, even in the face of a strong propaganda. defendant Nosske saw through the ummorality of that order and sensed it, he was not able to master the strength to express his right feelings, the less so as probably he would not have found understanding or even readiness to listen to him. quences. he resisted the order, have been shot summarily. But surely he would have suffered considerable personal disadvantages, which, owing to the daily increasing severity of the administration of justice, could not be anticipated beforehand as to their ultimate consequences. in his heart was resolved not to execute the order. With regard to the result of his resolution, he declares that he had succeeded in evading the Fuehrer Order until, in March 1942, he was relieved.

A "failure to execute the order" will here also be always defined as the mass shooting of people without regard to their personal guilt, only because of their membership in a race or their, activities as Commissars.

Order for various reasons. At the start of the Russian campaign he followed up other Einsatzkommandos into areas which they had occupied previously, remaining in reserve. Later on it was partly a similar thing, partly he had to occupy preponderantly rural areas, where there were no Jews. These were mostly living in the towns. He was also helped by the extraordinarily severe winter of 1941/42, as he was unable to leave his quarters owing to snow and cold for weeks and, above all, to join the 17th Army, where his actual first assignment with a view to the execution of the Fuehrer Order would have taken place. At that assignment Nosske did become active in the area of the 17th Army either because the German advance was stopped and he was relieved in March 1942. result of lucky coincidences he was able to evade the Fuehrer Order, and in particular that he was never placed before the question of an inescapable assignment on the basis of the Fuehrer Order. if he had been restricted in his freedom of decision to the extent as to be placed before the direct alternative of shooting e.g. 500 Jews on the spot or to be shot himself in case of a refusal. To that Nosske answered that in this case he would have shot the 500 Jews.

But he, fortunately, never had to answer that situation. So then I put to him, "suppose you were put in that situation that you were confronted with 500 Jews and you had this Fuehrer Order before you, what would you do?" You see there is a great difference there, Dr. Hoffmann We did not ask him to chose between an alternative. We gave him the opportunity to reply freely just what he would do in that situation. And he said, if we recall correctly, that were he in such a situation and would be subjected to the possibility of reprimand by his superior that then he would have to execute the order. However, we will, of course, examine the record very thoroughly in that connection should it become important to do so.

DR. HOFFMANN: Your Honor, if you will look at my trial brief I think my trend of thought is correct except for that point where I explain that in my opinion your question, Your Honor, also concerned the contention that in a certain case he would have been restricted to a certain extent. Actually, I merely want to explain that in my opinion you, Your Honor, put a hypothetical question - what he would have done if he had come into that situation - and that was the answer he gave you. Perhaps the translation does not indicate this quite as clearly. I want to state this again in my final plea that this was merely the answer to your hypothetical question.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, it was a hypothetical question, At no time did we ever in the form of a question or in the shape of observation suggest that someone who is confronted with the proposition of losing his own life is compelled to take some step which would result in immediate loss of his life.

Dr. Hoffmann, since we have now stopped at this point do you think this might be a good time to have the morning recess?

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed, Doctor.

DR. HOFFMANN: Your Honor, first of all I would like to continue my presentation, and I requested that my office be giventhe German text of this cross-examination problem of your Honor so that I may refer to it briefly.

THE PRESIDENT : Very well.

DR. HOFFMANN: In my opinion this answer given by Nosske is not to be judged as the expression of callousness or inhumanity. It shows that Nosske does not pretend to be a noble and blameless man, but rather admits to be a human being with all his inherent weaknesses. Though possessing the insight to discern good and evil, his estimate of his own character is, in an assumed case, not high enough as to be able to credit himself with the firmness to prefer to be shot himself rather than to shoot others. would behave in such a situation oneself. sublime one, but an honest answer which, in its honesty speaks in my opinion in favor of Nosske. ly, indentical with those made in his affidavit in reply to the Prosecution. has submitted against Nosske in the first place. Therefore, his statements concern the other documents can also be given preference before any other interpretation.

Jampol, however, also brings up another point which is very important for Nosske. The Prosecutor asked the witness during his cross-examination what the situation of these 10000 Jews had been with regard to food and whether Nosske had done anything for these people. 10,000 persons and distributed these peas among them. He said that the ration had even been so generous that even after the departure of the Jews there were still peas left. That shows that these people received enough through this food issue to satisfy their hunger, for hungry people would not have left any peas at all. However, it also shows that Nosske did not keep to the terms of the Fuehrer Order.

If he had wanted to run up a "shooting score" it would have been easy for him to kill thousands of innocent human beings here.

Nosske was in Russia for 8 months. His activity was interrupted by a period of sickness of one month, during which Hausmann was in charge of his kommando. This is Document NO-4747, Exhibit No. 118. The Prosecution itself says that a few hours after giving the affidavit the affiant committed suicide. affidavit because I can no longer cross-examine Hausmann. the document. Page 6,041

In Nosske Document No. 6, Exhibit No. 5, Dr. Hans Ehlich, the Chief of Section III I in the Reich Main Security Office states:

"After April 1942 the Kommando Staff was the office where the respective specialists from all departments met for the purpose of making editorial summaries of the material contributed to the Reports from the East by the departments handling the respective subject matter. These summarized reports were called "Reports from the Occupied Eastern Territories". In contrast to the former "Operational Situation Reports from the USSR" they did not contain, as far as I recall, any figures or reports concerning operations carried out in the East by under the Fuehrer Order.

In Document Nosske How 10, Exhibit NO. 9, Dr. Hans Schmitz, who was Criminal Director of the State Police Office in Duesseldorf until the end of the war, states:

"Former Senior Government Councillor Nosske was my superior from autum 1943 until September 1944 as the Chief of the State Police Office in Duesseldorf. DR. HOFFMANN: Your Honor, may I briefly quote from the German text, that is, the transcript of the 9th of December, page 1732, and this is the question of the presiding judge. I quote:

"All right, then you would have carried out the order in case you had found any Jews?" Nosske answers, I quote:

"If I had received the order and if I had found any other way, or if I had not been able to evade the order in any other way, that is to say, if the final consequence would have been, namely, to be shot myself, then I would have carried out this order."

PRESIDENT: There is nothing in what you have read which would suggest that I had asked what he would do in the event the alternative was death, as you stated in your summation.

DR. HOFFMANN: Very well, Your Honor, but may I then have you interpret the final plea in such a manner that Nosske in such a hypothetical case gave this answer to which I refer in my final plea, even if he didn't understand your question, Your Honor?

PRESIDENT: The only point that I made, Dr. Hoffmann, was that you said on page 6:

"Judge Musmanno asked the defendant, Nosske, what would have happened if he had been restricted in his freedom of decision to the extent as to be placed before the direct alternative of shooting, for example, 500 Jews on the spot, or to be himself in case of a refusal?" I never put such a question to him. That is the point I wanted to clear up.

DR. HOFFMANN: Your Honor, I admit that you didn't pose this question. In this respect, my interpretation is wrong.

PRESIDENT: Very well. Dr. Lummert.

DR. LUMMERT: Lummert for the defendant, Blume. With Your Honor's permission, I would like to read my final speech in the English language.

PRESIDENT: Very well, Dr. Lummert.

May it please the Tribunal:

1.) In my opening statement I announced that in my final plea I intend to deal in particular with the legal question of the so-called "unexpectability" ("Unzumutbarkeit") This is in accordance with an agreement of defense counsel in case No. 9 by virtue of which certain questions which are of importance to all defendants or to some of them are to be treated in detail by different defense counsel in order to save time and to avoid unnecessary repetitions.

Among these general themes are e.g. the special conditions in the East, the question of necessity caused by the order of a superior, the questions of general necessity and presumed or putative necessity and - as to my contribution - the question of "unexpectability". I am going to deal with this question in the first part of my final plea before discussing the conduct of the defendant Blume and the special questions of his guilt or innocence.

What is the meaning of "unexpectability" under penal law? We are concerned here with an excuse for the individual perpetrator who failed to comply with a duty imposed upon him by order or prohibition. This duty - also existed for this particular offender, but the special circumstances however have the effect that he can not be held responsible for the fiolation of this duty. This doctrine of "unexpectability" has been developed by jurisprudence and administration of justice in German Criminal Law during the years 1920 - 1933 in particular.

The English language has no word for "Unzumutbarkeit". The meaning of this term is: that a person cannot be expected to act in a certain way i.e. according to the standards of criminal law, if the accompanying circumstances of the case are considered fairly and reasonably. As a brief translation for "Unzumutbarkeit" in this plea I suggest and use the term "unexpectability".

"Unexpectability" under German Criminal Law is no (objective) justification, but a (subjective) excuse. The distinction between the objective and subjective viewpoints of the act as know under German Penal Law, it is true, have been accepted in the Nuernberg trials during the past two years, however it is alien to the conceptions of AngloAmerican Penal Law. I therefore want to emphasize that the idea of "unexpectability" need not be limited to the subjective viewpoint of the act in the German sense, "Unexpectability" concerns much rather the borderline area of the effectiveness of the standards of criminal law, and the results under penal law are the same, no matter whether a criminal law was no longer binding for the perpetrator on account of the prevailing circumstances of the case, or whether the perpetrator acted in violation of the laws but has been excused on account of the circumstances prevailing in this case. In neither case can he be punished. Considered from this point of view "unexpectability" is the basic legal principle which is fundamental to all special statutory provisions of the individual States concerning self-defense, excessive self-defense, state of necessity, presumed or putative necessity, provocation, collision of duties, necessity arising from an order etc.

, but which is not entirely covered by them. "Unexpectability" is a general reason outside the Statute Law, under which punishment of the perpetrator does not seem justified and is therefore excluded. and quotations from judgmentments and scholarly works in document Blume No. 30. I should like to refer to this. It is of special importance that the International Military Tribunal in its judgment recognized the basic idea of "unexpectability" in discussing the necessity arising from an order, as was done in the following classic brief form:

"The true test, which is found in varying degrees in the criminal law of most nations, is not the existence of the order, but whether moral choice was in fact possible." The IMT also used this basic principle in judging the organizations charged with being criminal. There, it excluded from "criminal groups" those "who were drafted into membership by the State in such a way as.

to give them no choice in the matter." This same basic principle prevails in Judge Musmanno's concurring opinion on the conviction of Fieldmarshal Milch where he says:

"We never intended, nor was it suggested, that he should take any action which would result in the forfeiture of his life." The same idea can be found in the judgment of the Military Tribunal No. IV in the case against Flick and others (case No. 5); it considers the mere employment of foreign slave labour by industrialists excused by the conditions prevailing in Germany at that time, in particular by the demand of the State. The court arrived at this conclusion through an extensive interpretation of the term "necessity". May I refer here also to the excerpts from the standard Americah work, Wharton's Criminal Law, contained in Document Blume No. 30. The quotations contained in this document also refer to other foreign laws.

Thus in Austria Article 2g of the Austrian Penal Code of 1852 makes possible a consideration of the basic idea of "unexpectability", in France it is the broad interpretation of the conception of the contrainte morale, in Italy it is the distinction between imputabilita' and responsibilita' and the interpretation of this latter concept. Under Roman Law we finally find the general legal principle of "nemo ultra posse obligatur". principle of "unexpectability", because this is a general principle "which the Judge is bound to observe", as Prof. Kraus, Membre de l'Institut du Droit International, states in his comments on Control Council Law No. 10.

2.) what are the conclusions to be drawn from the concept of "unexpectability" for this trial? The defendants are charged with murder of mass-murder. Who ever is familiar with the history of the war crimes trials - beginning with the speeches and warnings by President Roosevelt from 1941 on through the Moscow declaration to the London Four Power Agreement and Control Council Law No. 10 - knows that first of all there were two main groups of crimes which caused a humanitarian reaction on the part of the public of the World, in particular of the United States of America, namely the mass-extermination of Jews in concentration camps, which is inconceivable to every human being with any moral sense, and second, beginning already at an earlier date, the liquidations of human beings by the Einsatzgruppen in the Last from the middle of 1941 on. It was to these two groups of crimes, to which Justice Jackson's words referred in his report to President Truman dated 7 June 1945:

"We propose to punish acts which have been regarded as criminal since the time of Cain and have been so written in every civilized code." Justice Jackson might have as well quoted the fifth commandment which reads: "Thou shalt not kill."

The following question arises out of the idea of "unexpectability": Could the defendants, under the particular circumstances prevailing in 1941, be expected ("zugemutet") to act differently? the "special circumstances" under which the defendants acted in the manner of 1941 and the following months. a complete picture of the historical, political, military, and other special conditions prevailing at that time. In the following I have to limit myself to showing a few facts of particular importance. was a State that ordered these exterminations of human beings.

Who are they, strictly speaking, these so-called States? I do not intend to deliver here a legal or philosophical lecture on the "State", I only mention the fact that to this day the States are without any doubt the highest ranking forms of organized society and still are at the same time the supreme legislators. They did and still do claim so-called sovereignty for themselves. This concept of sovereignty developed after the end of the Middle Ages together with the formation of actually and legally independent States. It is the essence of this concept that the aims of the State take precedence over all other human aims, that therefore the concept of the State ranks above the concept of mankind, and that the States are the masters of International Law as well and not vice-versa, Macchiavelli, as is well known, expressed this supremacy of the State in the concept of ragione di state, the raison d'Etat. The Frenchman Bodin coined the expression of "puissance souveraine", "summa potestas" for this supreme power of command of the State. To express the same thought, Hegel, the philosopher, chose the words that the State was "the absolute power on Earth". Since the old idea of a general right of nature had been abandoned, international law could only come into existence by voluntary obligation of the States through "inter" national treaties or by customary law which was voluntarily recognized by the States.

was generally recognized throughout the world until 1914 and that it was effected only by the catastrophe of the first World war. It is not new to the Tribunal if I mention that those who promoted and represented the new concept of a worldwide law, ware and are, above all, US statesmen. At the beginning of this development to find the famous message of President Wilson to the Senate of 22 January 1917 where says:6) "Mere agreements may not make peace-secure.

It it.

If the peace presently to be made is to en ganized major force of mankind."

This organized mankind was the purpose of the 27 points laid down by President Wilson in his four speeches in 1918 which were accepted by all signatory Nations as the basis for the armistice of November 1919. The crucial point was that in the future international law should take precedence over the law of the individual States. This was most clearly expressed in the Mount-Vernon Speech of 4 July 1918 where President Wilson said: 7) "These great objects can be out into a single sentence.

That we seek is the reign of law, tained by the organized opinion of mankind."

It is well known that the idea of the precedence of international law over national law remained in force only for a few months. During the negotiations at Versailles 6) Congressional Record, 64 Congress, 2nd Session, vol.

the old concept of sovereignty and the egoism of the individual States prevailed again and were embodied anew in the Charter of the League of Nations of 1919. President Wilson's program, however, remained for the most cart unrealized. tive security was created within the framework of the League of Nations. It was to be supported by the Briand-Kellogg Agreement of August 1938, To how great an extent, however, the sovereign States actually remained the masters of international law even at that time, can be seen from the note of Secretary of State Kellogg dated 25 June 1938 to all negotiating States where if says:8 "...The right of self-defense ... is inherent in treaty.

Every nation ... alone is competent to to war in self-defense."

And not later than at the outbreak of the war between Italy and Abyssinia in 1935 did the system of collective security break down completely. 8) During the second World War the individual States were more than ever before the absolutely highest plenomena on earth. tion at this point already that unfortunately a development similar to that after 1018 can be recognized now, after the end of the second World War. For even the Charter of the United Nations leaves the sovereignty of the individual States untouched, The recognition of the right of Veto is a direct consequence thereof. the attitude of the Union of the Socialist Soviet Republics. 8) Cf. the Final Plea of Prof. Jahrreiss before the The so-called Bolshevism, it is true, certainly aims at a world state, as the dictatorship of the proletariat of the earth, organized in a Union of all States as Soviet Republics.

But as long as every State in the world did not experience a revolution in this sense, those States in which the dictatorship of the prolotariat has been established can by no means subordinate themselves to a community under international law in which the BourgeoisStates would hold the majority. It is just in order not to endanger the world dictatorship of the proletariat that the Soviet Republics thus far established have to preserve their sovereignty strictly curing this "transition-period" as a basis for the further world revolutionary struggle. This is the urgent reason why they cannot do without the right of Veto. parallel can be found between 1919 and the period since 1945. During the Paris negotiations of 1919 it became apparent that the victorious powers, in contrast to the program of President Wilson were not ready to abandon the sovereignty and the egoism of their own nations. For Germany the terms of peace meant a violation of the principles laid down in the armistice and a dictate forced upon her, they were the expression of the unrestricted raison d'Etat of the victorious States. Like all sovereign States they came to conclude their right from their power. In a similar way there exists an undoniable contradiction at the present time: On the one hand, according to the Nuernberg Judgment and Control Council Law Mo. 10, the principles of the Hague Convention on Land-Warfare and the Geneva Prisoner of War Convention are alleged to be generally valid international law, for the violation of which even German individual persons are indicted and convicted, and on the other hand the four occupation powers do not observe the limitations imposed by these legal regulations of the Hague Convention on Land-Warfare and the Geneva Convention in their attitude towards occupied Germany.

The two most important examples in this respect are the forcible eviction of about 15 million Germans from Eastern Germany and German Bohemia which had been their German homeland for about a thousand years, and the retention of German Prisoners of War which is contrary to international law. for the victory of "inter"-national law or much better "super" national law over the concept of the raison d'Etat has not yet come. in that statement of the Nuernberg Judgment which is the most important one and at the same time the most difficult one to carry out, said:9) "On the other hand the very essence of the Charter dience imposed by the individual State."

It is obvious that this sentence in reality anticipates the facts and the basic law of a future World State. It is true that Justice Jackson said in his speech before the University of Buffalo in October 1946:10) "At all events, whether they be regarded as a codi teen others.

They are now embodied in the tri bunal's judgment.

That these rules of law apply without dissent at Nuernberg."

9) Official Edition, vol. I, p. 223. 10) Quoted from "New Yord Herald Tribune" of October 6, 1946.

But opposed to that, the Charter of the United Nations only provides for col ective responsibility of the States as such for violations of the Charter; that is to say, the State responsible for the violation is called to account, not the individual concerned. And the General Assembly of the United Nations in its resolution of 11 December 1946 only took note of these new principles, affirmed them and turned them over to a committee for further action.11) The Charter of the United Nations was, however, not amended accordingly. In reality, therefore, there is no State on earth which at this time recognizes the precedence of international law over national law, for all of them are soveriegn. Nor is there any organized supernational power able to protect the individual who finds himself in a position where his national duties of obedience clash with his international duties. 11) This resolution runs as follows: paragraph 1, subparagraph a, of the Charter, to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purposes of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification; and of an International Military Tribunal for the prosecution and punishment of the major war criminals of the European Axis signed in London on August 8, 1945, and of the Charter annexed thereto, and of the fact that similar principles had been adopted in the Charter of the International Military Tribunal for the trial of the major war criminals in the Far East, proclaimed at Tokyo on January 19, 1946. nized by the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and the judgment of the Tribunal; national law established by the resolution of the General Assembly of December, 1946, to treat as a matter of primary importance plans for the formulation, in the context of a general codification of offences against the peace and security of mankind, or of an International Criminal Code, of the principles recognized in the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal in the judgment of the Tribunal (Journal of the General Assembly, No. 75, p. 945). (Quoted from "The International Law Quaterly", Vol I, p. 170.)

DR. LUMMERT: I beg your pardon, Your Honor, it has been forgotten to underline these two sentences. I think them to be important - the view point of wanting protection can be decisive. give preference to the international duties would be ruthlessly punished e.g. for military disobedience or hightreason or treason. Mankind is not organized at all; as before it is still divided in the populations of the different States, the so-called Nations, and the individual citizen of such a State - almost like a piece of cattle is treated like part and parcel of his State and has to take a collectivistic part in the fate of his State. d'Etat is of such fundamental importance because they constitute the principle by reason of which actions, which when normally committed by private individuals would constitute murder, arson, robbery, extortion or property damage, are not considered as such if a State committed them. The moral standard, to be applied to the State differs from that of the individual. This concept has thus far been, accepted throughout the world. In every war, no matter how far back we go, innumerable human beings had to lose their lives on either side of the belligerents. But killing within the framework of military measures is not considered murder. It is generally agreed that the leaders of States and Supreme Military Commanders have to observe the rules of international law and the laws of warfare as recognized by all civilized nations. They may be held personally responsible for violations according to the new principles asset forth in the London Agreement dated 8 August 1945 and the Charter of the IMT which were to be included as valid international law in the Charter of the United Nations, but which unfortunately have not been incklouded to this day.

But which penal provisions are applicable to the individual soldiers and officers in the case that the supreme national and military leadership issues orders in violation of international law and law of warfare? This question constitutes one of the main problems in this trial.

Considered from the viewpoint of "unexpectability" the question is as follows. Could the defendant be "expected" independently to examine the order they received from the sovereign Chief of State as to whether it was in compliance with or in violation of international law and if the latter should be case to refuse to carry out the order and to take all consequences upon themselves; up to the forfeiture of their own lives, even though there was no international authority to protect them? and even more so, if the further special circumstances are taken into consideration which I am going to discuss in a minute. lowing: pangs of the new World State. Hitler issued that cruel Fuehrer-order in the middle of 1941 to assure Germany's victory over Bolshevism, i.e. he issued it under the concept of the raison d'Etat, a concept which caused Friedrich Nietzsche, the philosopher, to coin the phrase that the State is the "coldest of all cold monsters." We have to bow in deep sympathy to the unfortunate victims of this order in the East from middle of 1941 onwards which was a result of the concept of the raison d'Etat.

But these defendants here, too, are victims of that concept, Because it is their personal tragedy that fate caused them to become members of these Einsatzgruppen.

b) Secondly I should like to direct the Tribunal's attention to a viewpoint which is rather remote to AngloAmerican thinking but which is worth mentioning for an understanding of the defendant's general attitude. It is the concept of legitimacy and state discipline which was developed above all in Germany. It is easy to explain this viewpoint to a Frenchman, for example, because the same attitude is observed in France though not to the same extent as in Germany. But it is really difficult to explain this mentality to an Anglo-American because as a rule he is not able to understand it and considers it to be absurb. Mr. Winston Churchill dealt with this continental line of thought in his wellknown second secret speech before the House of Commons on 10 December 1942, a few weeks after the Allied landing in North Africa, in answer to the protests raised against the Allied cooperation with Admiral Darlan. I should like to quote from this speech of Mr. Churchill's as follows:12) "I now turn to examine a peculiar form of French men which has overtaken their country.

I am not at all tality.

But it would be very foolish not to try to understand what is passing in other people's minds they respond.

The Almighty in His infinite wisdom Englishmen.

In a state like France which has ex12) Quoted from "Life", Overseas Edition, Vol. 20, No.

"of many French officers and officials in times of revolution and change.

It is a highly legalistic sheer anarchy.

For instance, any officer who obeys tions.

From this point of view many Frenchmen who of Verdun and the sole hope of France.

Now all this may seem very absurd to our minds.

But there is one aspect about it which is important to us.

..." It is interesting to hear what a Frenchman has to say about the Germans. Professor Donnedieu de Vabres who was the French judge on the IMT said in a speech delivered in March 1947 before the Association des Etudes Internationales and the Association des Etudes Criminalogiques on the first Nuernberg Trial13) "Defense counsel understood that well.

They have been berty for propaganda purposes.

On the contrary I am of gree, conducted themselves as correct aids to justice," Here a Frenchman who, according to Mr. Churchill, in this connection is almost suspected of being absurd confirms the fact that this discipline has been developed to a particularly high degree in Germany.

No matter whether this fact merits irony or admiration or criticism to the effect that it is absurd, this high degree of discipline must not be disregarded in passing a just judgment on the happenings in Germany under the so-called Third Reich. Moreover, this discipline has historical reasons. In contrast to England which is protected by nature through the sea or to the USA which never in their history have been the objective of a foreign invasion Germany's borders are unprotected all around and she has experienced numerous invasions from the West, North, South-East and East. Since, according to Macchiavelli's wisdom whose opinion was recognized during the past centuries, the neighboring State was the natural enemy and only the neighbor's neighbor a friend, it was a consequence of natural conditions that Germany in the interest of self-preservation had to organize herself in a disciplined way, and Prussia took the leading part in this organization during the past 250 years. The limited economic possibilities of Germany furthered 13) -"Le proces do Nuremberg". - Original text of the quotation.

the tense organizing additionally. All this influenced the German mentality. The Christian Churches supported the State in this development, above all by the quotation from the Bible that Each man should render obedience to his master who has power over him. Expressed briefly, the German people is obedient to the State and to orders.

If any mere proof is needed to corroborate the German people's particular public discipline this proof can be found in the incredibly small percentage of acts directed against the occupation powers. The German people subordinates itself in a matter of fact way to the military dictatorship which succeeded the brown dictatorship. sharp distinction between public law and private law as we find it in Germany and as it is not known in Anglo-American legal doctrine. Furthermore, it must be mentioned here that in German Law acts of State officials are not to be evaluated as acts done by these individuals but as acts of the State only. lation as provided by the Weimar Constitution of 1919 was no longer able after 1930, to meet the difficult economic and political situation in Germany. Several years before the so-called seizure of power of 30 January 1933 the Government in Germany used a dictatorship, based upon Article 48 of the Weimar Constitution. Hitler's Government was nothing but a continuation, though a stricter one, of the method of governing already previously adopted. cipline which was brought about by the increased penalties for violations of the duty of obedience during the war. In this connection I should like to refer to documents Blume Nos. 1 - 3.14) 14) - Cf. Transcript pp. 1766 and 1853 - 1857.

cipline of the State is not relevant in this connection because this abuse was not clearly recognizable within Germany and partly because no criticism of any kind was tolerated. I shall come back to this problem in the next paragraph. it can be said that only within the framework of this special discipline of the German people and State could such actions as are at issue here be ordered and executed by the State-Government.

c) In the third place, the point of view of the so-called mass-psychology must be mentioned. Here again this brief plea cannot possibly deal with this point of view exhaustively. I only went to stress one fact: it is a fact in mass-psychology that every people wants to have its heroes. These heroes are glorified, sometimes even idolized by propaganda, no matter whether or not they actually merit adoration to such extent or any adoration at all.

Such a hero e.g. for the majority of the Germans was formerly Fieldmarshal v. Hindenburg and for the majority of the French Marshal Petain. A popular hero of that type is e.g. General Eisenhower; no loyal American would permit anybody to talk disrespectfully about him. such a hero for the overwhelming majority of the German people. In this connection it is of no importance, that Hitler, as it appears today, had a Janus-head, i.e. on the one hand he showed the ideal characteristics of a hero and almost infallible leader of the German people as contended by the German propaganda and on the other hand, at any rate during the last years, the characteristics of a criminal or maniac carefully concealed by the propaganda. The mysteries about Hitler's personality have not been solved up to this day. The only relevant fact in this connection is that the bulk of the German people in the years following 1933, more and more considered Hitler as stateman whose qualities of leadership and conduct were almost those of a superman and of whom only the very best could be expected.

He solved the big problem of unemployment (whether this was done through the rearmament which in the beginning was strictly secret has been contested and was not known to the bulk of the people or at least they were not conscious of it). And there was no event in the later years which consolidated Hitler's position with the bulk of the German people as much as the Anscluss of Austria in the Spring of 1936. It must be borne in mind that the reunion of the Germans living in Austria and German-Bohemia with the rest of Germany had been a unanimous demand of all Germans, German Austrians and German-Bohemians in 1919, that, however, the peace treaties of Versailles and St. German had forbidden such a reunion, in flagrant violation of the right of self-determination of peoples which constituted one of the most important points of President Wilson's program. The tremendous support for the Anschluss of Austria within the German people is shown by document Blume No. 9: One must imagine what it meant if at that time a.o. the Austrian cardinals and bishops welcomed the Anschluss of Austria to Germany with the words "Heil Hitler".

It was this ideal side of Hitler's Janus-Head in which the bulk of the German people had unlimited confidence and to which it was definitely obedient.

Three circumstances played a particular part in this connection?

1) The recognition granted to the Third Reich and Hitler personally by foreign countries. I should like to refer e.g. to the glorification of Hitler in Eiscount Rothermere's book "Warnings and Prophecies" published in 1939.

2) The extraordinary effectiveness of the propaganda within Germany.

15) The judgment of the IMT states: 15) - Official Edition, vol. I, p. 182.

"Through the effective control of the radio and the press, ance of the regime.

Hostile criticism, indeed criticism imposed on those who indulged in it.

Independent judgment,

3) Hitler's contention which he already presented in his book "Mein Kampf" was: "Terror can only be broken by terror".16)This sentence meant that the red and communist terror could only be broken by strict force on the part of the State. Many people in Germany acquiesced in various terror-measures under the Nazi-regime of which they heard because they considered such dictatorial measures indispensable as defense against and for avoidance of the red terror, even though on principle they did not approve of them. The following words of the Austrian bishops were to be similarly understood:17) "We are also convinced that the danger of the all-destroying the National-Socialist movement."

men and foreigners who maintain that in case the moderate parties in France should not be able to remain in power a dictatorship by de Gaulle would still be preferable to a communist dictatorship. A similar attitude can be found in many instances with regard to the dictators Franco and Salazar.

For many Germans, however, Hitler's abuse of the command-power of the State became obvious at the outbreak of World War No. II. But at this moment it was too late. For actually at that time nobody in Germany could offer resistance to the development which led to the catastrophe. Moreover every campaign was explained and presented to the German people by its Government as a purely defensive war, and this was also true of the Russian campaign, I refer to Blume document No. 14 end the borderlines between an 16) - Cf. e.g. pp. 44-46 in "Mein Kampf", 489-493, Ed., 1939. 17) - Blume document No. 9, p. 4 (Doc. Book I, p. 98) aggressive and a defensive war are not fixed.

President Roosevelt in his radio speech on 11 September, 1941, in giving the reasons for his order to shoot at German and Italian submarines, said very strikingly:18) "If one sees a rattlesnake rising one does not wait for it to jerk but smashes it before."

Summarizing I might say: At least until about the middle of 1943 the bulk of the German people believed in Adolf Hitler as an eminent statesman and General and German hero in a manner which in the last analysis can only be explained by making use of the experiences in mass-psychology and psychology of nations.

In the fourth place, as regards the "unexpectability" as set forth the East.

In order to avoid repetitions I should like to refer to the detailed expert opinion of Professor Dr. Maurach (Document Ohlendorf No. 38) and I should like briefly to call attention to the Soviet fact which was set forth by Prof.

Maurach in detail that at that e.g. in Poland and in Russia.

Everybody in Russia and Poland knew and still knows what the word "horpom" or "pogrom" means.

In Germany pronounce or spell it with an "r" in the wrong place, namely "program" (as if the word contains the Latin prefix "pro"). Without the compel Last but not least, in connection with the "unexpectability", the Fuehrer Order to the Einsatzgruppen in the East and the direct orders of the superiors, e.g. of Brigadefuehrer Nebe to the defendant Blume, and the urgent character of these orders must be taken into consideration.

Here "unexpectability" and the legal aspects of necessity, in particular necessity caused by orders issued, overlap. Since these questions are dealt with in some detail by my colleagues Dr. Aschenauer and Dr. Gawlik I take the liberty of referring to their statements.

Summarizing I may say: If the Tribunal is to pass a fair judgment in this phenomenal trial, all the special conditions with regard to the legal problem of "unexpectability" with which the defendants were faced in 1941 have to be considered, from the point of view of the defendants at that time. In effect Justice - without any feelings of hatred or revenge and without any prejudice - can only be administered in that way.

I now turn to the case of the defendant Dr. Blume who is represented by me before this Tribunal. ed i.e. the actions of the defendant Blume in his position as temporary commander of Sonderkommando 7 a in the East in the summer of 1941, from the beginning of July until 15 August, 1941, the Prosecution and I as defense counsel are fundamentally in agreement as far as I can see. This is the reason why neither the Prosecution, as I was told by Mr. Ferencz, nor I myself drafted a closing brief for the defendant Blume. 7a can clearly be seen 20)

They are borne out by the entire evidence. I believe I can say that the Tribunal in examining the defendant Blume gained the impression of a frank, upright and truthful character. (Blume documents no.s 15 - 29 and 31 - 35). Sonderkommando 7 a during the period of time up to 20 August, 1941, in the report of events no. 73 (Blume document No. 6, 0. 25) there is such a bulk of material in evidence before the Tribunal concerning the exaggerated figures of liquidations usually reported by Brigadefuehrer Nebe, who was Chief of Einsatzgruppe B, that this alone is sufficient to consider this figure as refuted.22) 21) Cf. transcript pp. 1805 - 1822. 22) Cf. examination of witness Blume, transcript pp. 18-3, 1807-1808, and 1818; affidavit Radl (Blume doc.

1787-1790; furthermore aff. Radl. p. 5) On the other hand the defendant Blume had nothing to do with the shooting of 27 Jews in Witebsk who refused to come to work and which took place a short time before, because Foltis carried out this execution under the Fuehrer Order on his own initiative without the defendant Blume having issued such an order or having any knowledge of it.

July and beginning of August 1941 - Hauptsturmfuehrer Foltis was ordered to Welish to fight partisans. There Foltis independently and on his own initiative carried out the liquidation of 50 - 60 people. The defendant Blume did not issue an order in this case either, on the contrary, this liquidation was in contradiction to the firm resolution Blume had made in Witebsk after the liquidation there to avoid any similar situation by all means. The defendant Blume only learned about it when Foltis returned from Welish. He therefore had no chance to prevent the execution. Foltis acted within the framework of the Fuehrer Order. armed partisans or saboteurs in very rare cases only, altogether about 10 - 15 persons within 6 weeks. On the witness stand the defendant Blume testified that in such cases careful interrogations used to take place, and that executions which were ordered according to the Fuehrer Order concerning such cases were carried out only if the guilt of the partisans or saboteurs had been clearly proved. I believe I need not go into further details in this connection.

The above mentioned enumeration is complete (paragraphs 1-4). This has been confirmed by the defendant Blume on the witness stand under 26) oath.

1941, carried out by the defendant Blume by strict order of his superior Nebe. I want to call Your Honor's attention to the fact that the defendant Blume, from the beginning, admitted this case voluntarily and on his own. There is no report of events and no other evidence concerning this case. The defendant Blume in this connection is incriminated only by his own testimony which he gave voluntarily.

I should like to request the Court, in deciding the defendant Blume's guilt or innnocence in this case - Witebsk - to take into consideration all statements which I made in the first part of my plea concerning "unexpectability", and which the defendant Blume made on the witness stand about the details of the state of emergency in which he found himself at that time. The conclusion can only be as follows:

The defendant Blume could not be "expected" to act differently in the Witebsk case.

He had no other choice at that time. If he had refused to obey Nebe's order, a court martial proceeding would certainly have been started against him which would have resulted in a death sentence. This alternative, however, left no moral choice for him. as his good character is concerned - was and is the very contrary of what the Prosecution has contended at the beginning of this trial. The Prosecution stated in its opening statement:

"Each of the defendants in the dock held a position of responsibility or command in an extermination unit. Each assumed the right to decide the fate of men, and death was the intended result of his power and contempt."

None of this has been proved against the defendant Blume. On the contrary, it is proved that the defendant Blume never wanted the killing of Jews, that he ordered it in a single case - Witebsk - only under extreme compulsion limiting it to able-bodied men and sparing women and children, that from Witebsk he sent a courageous report to his superior Nebe with the aim of preventing the liquidation of the Jews and of having the Fuehrer Order revoked ,27) that in his conversation with the local commander at Wilna he did not intend the killing of Jews, but recommended very limited measures under the necessity of the Fuehrer Order.

28) of the defendant Blume give the picture of a splendid and good character (Blume documents nos. 15-29 and 31-34, also 11 and 12).29) I need not go into details. If I may summarize the most important facts in these affidavits, I may say that all these affiants always emphasized the following characteristics as the salient characteristics of the love of truth, his pleasant and kind manner which made him popular wherever he went, and his fairness in sports and his tolerance of other people's opinions. As far as the affidavits refer to the professional activity of the defendant Blume, they confirm his absolutely correct and decent attitude and - briefly put - the fact that in his whole professional career he only served law and justice. Count I and II of the Indictment. after 1 September 1939, in various organizations which have been declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal. I can be brief in discussing this Count.

a.) Count III, B of the Indictment charges the defendant Blume with having been a "member of Offices III, VI and VII of the Reich Security Main Office which constituted part of the SD. This, however, is a mistake. b.) Count III, C of the Indictment charges the defendant Blume with having been a "member of Office IV of the Reich Security Main Office", which constituted part of the so-called Gestapo. This again is a mistake. The defendant Blume was never a member of Office OV of the RSHA.31) c.) Count III, A of the Indictment charges the defendant Blume with membership in the Schutzstaffeln of the NSDAP, i.e. the so-called SS. In the final analysis this is not correct either; the defendant Blume can not be punished for this, either. only a certain group composed of those persons who officially became members of the SS, etc.32) The essence of this offense according to the clear wording of the IMT judgment is cooperation for criminal purposes in the above mentioned group of the organization.33) Before the IMT Justice Jackson spoke accordingly:34) "The purpose of declaring criminality of organizations.

The defendant Blume was only a police official. He never did any service in the SS and therefore never rendered any "cooperation for criminal purposes" within the SS.35) He never held any position in the SS, but only a so-called assimilated rank. In this connection I refer to the official decree concerning this assimilation of ranks dated 23 June, 1938 (Blume document No. 10) and to Blume's testimony concerning this question.36) a formal member, but no "real" or "active" member of the SS. 31) Cf. transcript pp. 1852 - 1853, and 1879 - 1881 32) Cf. days before the German capitulation, received a military draft call for the Waffen-SS with the military rank of a private first class. like any other soldier, the defendant Blume had no possibility but to obey this draft order.37) the "great problem" of the Nurenberg Trials. These are the questions concerning jurisdiction and justification of these tribunals and the doubts arising from Control Council Law No. 10. this plea. However, I intentionally mention them at the end. For I believe that the statements made in the previous paragraphs I - III in themselves are sufficient a foundation for my request to acquit the defendant Blume. Moreover, in this case No. 9, we are faced with the fact that many thousand innocently exterminated human beings demand that justice be done. Therefore it might be said that it is of no relevancy whether e.g. this tribunal must be considered an American or an International one and whether Control Council Law No. 10 contains international law, be it as codification or innovation, or whether the four occupying powers in the Control Council Laws are competent merely to pass occupation laws (under Article 43 of the Hague Convention on Land Warfare), or whether they executedGerman legislative power since according to the Berlin Declaration of 5 June 1945, they assumed sovereign legislative power over the former German territory and its population, the very legislative power which Hitler held as dictator during the preceding years. of the l aw the formal aspect is very essential; and sometimes the ultimate problems of justice are hidden behind these formal questions. Therefore I should like to say a few words concerning the "great _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ 37) Cf. transcript p. 1850.

problem" of the Nurenberg Trials.

THE PRESIDENT: Just a moment, please.

DR. LUMMERT: It is in the middle of page 30.

THE INTERPRETER: I am sorry, Your Honor, there is one page missing in the translation. Possibly it could be read slowly for translation.

DR. LUMMERT: You have read this already?

THE PRESIDENT : You have it now?

DR. LUMMERT: I thought the interpreter could read the missing paragraphs. At first I can read it to you.

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, that is possible.

DR. LUMMERT: The Prosecution in its Opening Statement called the Indictment a "plea of Humanity to Law."

What does Humanity means? Nobody has found more striking words for the explanation of this term than the German philosopher Johann Gottfried Herder. He was born in East Prussia and lived in Weimar after 1776 and during the years from 1793-1797 he published several collections of "Letters to promote Humanity" in connection with his "Ideas on the philosophy of the history of mankind." In the 27th letter he wrote the classic words:

"The divine in us therefore is education for humanity; all great and good people helped in it, legislators, inventors, philosophers, poets, artists, every noble man in his position, in the education of his children, in observing his duties, by example, work, institution, and philosophy. Humanity is the treasure and the result of all human strivings, it is the art of mankind. The education for it is a work which has to be continued ceaselessly; or also we, higher and lower classes, shall lapse back into crude animality, into brutality." Law? But which is this Law? Under section I, 2a of this plea we saw that thus far the sovereignty and egoism of the individual States are the highest law on earth and that the alleged international law of Control Council Law No. 10 has thus far actually not been recognized by the individual sovereign States as supernational law nor has it been embodied in the Charter of the United Nations.

For the time being then, only the sovereign power of the victor States is using those new principles of law against citizens of defeated Germany unilaterally. From this one-sidedness results the doubt in the "justice", and also the "great problem" of the Nurenberg Trials. This problem will remain unsolved as long as the "reign of Law" in an "organized mankind" in the sense of the great ideas of President Wilson has not actually been established. This problem, on the contrary, would be decided in the negative if the organization of mankind does not take place. For in this case "les lois de l'humanite etdles exigences de la conscience publique" (the Laws of humanity and dictates of the public conscience) which have already been mentioned in the introduction to the Hague Convention on Land Warfare as the basis for this Convention, could not be realized. Present world developments, just as in the years after 1918, are obviously getting away from this goal. gradually to overcome force among men in favor of a general peace and a supernational law of mankind, can only fear that the work done in the Nurenberg "Palace of Justice" during the past 2 1/2 years might have been one-sided and therefore in the final analysis vain and unjust. to the solution of the legal problems of mankind.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Lummert, I wish to congratulate you on the excellent manner in which you have presented your plea in English, although that is not your native language.

DR. LUMMART: Thank you so much, Your Honors.

THE PRESIDENT: Who is ready now? Do we have the final summation of Dr. von Stein's? I don't have it.

Your Honor, Members of the Court: I have submitted. Where I have summarized the essential results of the evidence. Principally I wish to repeat here once more what I have particularly emphasized at the close of this trial-brief: That it is necessary to oppose in the strongest possible way the contention expressed by the Prosecution that they need carry only a minor part of the burden of proof in regard to the culpable participation of the defendants in the criminal acts alleged in large outline by the Prosecution. The more grievous the misdeeds are with which a defendant is charged the more conscientiously and indubitably must it be proven that he really committed these acts. May I refer here to the statements of the Military Tribunal No. IV in the judgment of Case V. (Quoted in the JOST-Doc. Book IV, Page 7, JOST Doc. No. 36). At the close of the trial-brief it is explained what remains of proven criminal acts on the part of the defendant Dr. SANDBERGER after the results of the evidence have been appraised. Therefrom it follows that essentially 2 questions are relevant for the decision of this Case:

1.) How are SANDBERGER's measures against Communist activists and

2.) how are SANDBERGER's measures against the Esthonia Jews to be judged?

SANDBERGER's measures against Communist based on the Fuehrer-order. Inasfar as the order deals with Communist activists it is essentially based on the following considerations. System of Government and the political movement of Communism was a fact. For him the Bolshevic State apparatus was the most important representative of the Communist movement and carrier of an active Imperialism, which was a mixture of Panslavism and the aim of Communistic world revolution. social leadership was rooted out. All experiences since 1917 showed this clearly, at least in the Baltic countries, which in 1940 were incorporated into the Bolshevist Federation of States. The witness MAE has also confirmed this specifically for Estonia. A clear example, true for all Baltic States, is given in the liquidation-list of the NKWD, published by the Canadian University Professor MIRCHCONELL and which I inserted in the Doc. Book SANDBERGER II. the nature of which is depicted by the Bolshevists themselves in the brochure of the Press-Dep. of the Soviet Embassy in London "We are Guerillas" contained in OHLENDORF Document Book II, from this very description the illegality and criminality of this form of struggle in view of international law becomes evident. (Comp, also the opinion of University professor MAURACH submitted for OHLENDORF). This form of struggle consisted in preparation and execution of an illegal levee en masse on territory effectively occupied by enemy troops.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. von Stein, you don't contend that partisan warfare was originated by the Bolshevists do you? You know that in the Napoleonic invasion of Russia partisan warfare was quite common. You know that historically, don't you?

DR. VON STEIN: Yes, Your Honor, I only want to contend that this partisan war developed in a particularly cress manned in the Eastern campaign.

THE PRESIDENT: But you say here, "Bolshevism also developed new types of warfare, the partisan war." Well, it certainly was not new,

DR. VON STEIN: No, Your Honor, I am not trying to spy it was new. I am merely trying to spy that the manner of fighting which had been developed by the Bolschevists was new, that is to say, fighting became more cruel all the time. It cannot be compared with the beginnings of the partisan war which you have just described.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. Proceed.

DR. VON STEIN: It was a war to the knife; which was conducted by the partisans in the bitterest and cruelest manner. It threatened the reinforcements, replacements-and supply-communications in the rear of the troops. Particularly dangerous was this warfare in such vest en ere? as Russia. In regard to the Estonian area there was a very special danger in the fact that most important communication lines of the German Army Group North ran through Estonia, namely from the navel port of Reval over Narve and Pleskau to the front end from the Reichs-border over Dorpat in direction Leningrad. To nip such movements in the bud, or to keep them to as small a size as possible, severe measures were necessary for the sake of preservation of the whole fighting front. To this came the particular type of enemy. The Eastern man is capable of a fanatical toughness, almost unlimited endurance and simply limitless faith. For him the fight against the "fascist German troops" was a crusade. The idea of the Bolshevist State of the future was an idol for him, which he worshipped as he did the Icons in former times. by the war he regarded as essential. That such a war would to a greater part unset the existing principles of international law was clear to him, freed with an enemy like Bolshevism.

For he know its attitude toward international Law, which meant nothing else but to keep its hands essentially free in case of a collision with a "capitalist state". (Compare also the opinion of University professor MAURACH, Document BOOK OHLENDORF II and SANDBERGER II-A). by the wry, expressed a similar opinion for the case of total war (British Yearbook of International Law 1944, P. 72):

"But original proceeding before the municipal courts itatively the existing Law on subjects of controversy".Total war has altered the complexion of many rules.

At a time when the "scorched earth" policy with regard to the belligerents own territory has become part of a widespread practice, general destruction of property ordered as an incident of broad military strategy will not property form the subject matter of a criminal indictment." war strong shock effects may be obtained by certain draconic measures, which as a final result may cause the weakening or disintegration of the enemy's will to resistance. Measures of such effect were regarded as admissible in the war against Japan.

Henry L. STIMSON, 1940 - 1945 secretary of War reports in his article: The decision to use the atomic bomb (Excerptly):

"to extract a genuine surrender from the emperor of Japan and Empire.

Such an effective shock would save more lives, both American and Japanese, than it would cost."

the conviction by such measures to nip the partisan war in the bud or to suppress it effectively.

The welfare of the whole front was menaced by the unrestricted partisan war. HITLER may have expected a shock effect from the measure he ordered, which in the end would save the lives of an infinitely greater number of German soldiers. I have proven that just in the Estonian Territory the Soviet leadership put great importance to partisan movements in the widest sense of the word. It even left the most important officials back in Estonia in order to organize as extensive and effective an underground movement against the Germans as possible. 2.) Was the Fuehrer-order to that extent admissible according to international law. the territory occupied effectively by the German Wehrmacht. Inasmuch as Communist functionaries actually distrubed or threatened the security, as active directors of sabotage or espionage organizations, or by sabotage, incitements and other hostile acts, murder, espionage, possession and use of weapons, they could be shot according to the law of war (war rebels). Here the same principles would apply as have been developed for the illegal levee on masse in the occupied rear of the troops.

So says i.e. OPPENHEIM Vol. II, Par, 116, Page 278/279:

"What kinds of violent means may be applied for these purposes, and imprisonment are lawful means for those purposes."

surrection and resistance or other serious crimes and inasmuch as such acts were proven to them, they could be shot in accordance with international law. Greek northern border.

The Basic Field Manual, Rules of Land Warfare states in No. 12:

"Uprising in occupied territory - If the people of a country, or their protection."

It states further in No. 349.

"War rebels - War rebels are persons within territory under hos forces or against the authorities established by the sane.

If upon to do so by their own expelled government and in ("the event kind by overt act of hostility".) And in No. 350:

War treason: Examples of acts which, when committed by inhabitants follows:

Espionage, supplying information to the enemy: damage to aiding prisoners of war to escape; conspiracy against the occupying forces or members thereof;.... and circulating propaganda in the in terests of the enemy."

3. What has Sandberger done?

The defendant Sandberger was active only to this extent. In so far as Communist functionaries were shot in his area and under his command or on his responsibility, this did not take place in the form of mass execu he was not able to establish such.

Nor was it necessary. According to No. 356 of the Rules of Land Warfare, too, regular proceedings are adequate to establish the lapse and guilt of "war rebels. The more detailed arrangements for these proceedings must naturally be made in accordance with circumstances and possibilities Pt the time. ings were carried through. Over and beyond that, however, it has been proved by numerous depositions that Sandberger always behaved correctly, decently and fairly. the behavior as a whole of Dr. Sandberger in Esthonia, I quote as especially typical, one part from the deposition of the Swedish Major Mothander who was in Esthonia for 2 long time as? representative of the Swedish government. The latter says among other things about Sandberger: "He was generally regarded as a decent fellow. A natural tendency to human kindness and justice was often evident in his nature. Therefore he was always open to what is called Argumentum ad hominem! He showed himself to be a gentleman through and through both as official and as man". 4.) Sandberger acted in full consciousness of the legality. this. For every state it is an elementary precept of self-preservation to suppress resistance in the actually occupied area in all circumstances. The Supreme Commander decides what measures are to be taken in the individual case. He alone can decide what military necessities command him to do. This is the conception too of the expert on International Law, Hyde, (international Law chiefly as interpreted and applied by the United States 1945 Vol. II, section 655, War Dept. Rules of Land Warfare 1940).

"If the term military necessity implies great latitude and is invoked the law of options itself permits in case of great emergency and allows a belligerant commander to be the judge of the existence and sufficiency of the need".The measures against Communist activists were severe.

But in view of the general war situation and the special position in Esthonia, they were, the defendant was convinced, justified. The resistance which naturally became manifest on receiving the Hitler Order as connected in the first place with the extensive measures timed simply at the Jews, that is, regardless of whether they had become active as partisans, war rebels, or war traitors or belonged merely to the civilian population, it was connected also however with all collective measures against other people who had no individual guilt as far as acts endangering security were concerned. Now when he came to Esthonia and had convinced himself on the spot of the horrows which the Communist activists had perpetrated there, he was also convinced that such measures were in the end unavoidable against war rebels and war traitors of the kind. This was an elementary precept of self-preservation, the self-preservation, which in particular is fully recognized in Anglo-Saxon international law. For the conviction of having acted in defense against a state of emergency which actually existed - a conviction to be claimed for Dr. Sandberger as for all defendants - reference is made to the detailed statements of Prof. Dr. Maurach in his Counsel's Opinion in the Ohlendorf Document Book II and in the Sandberger Document Book IIA. The Prosecution has not proved that Sandberger, in the measures against Communist activists, behaved contrary to the principles of International Law. Instead, it has the onus probandi the more so because I have proved that Sandberger was judged to be correct, fair and upright in general and even in Esthonia. 1.) Was the Internment an international offence? issued on the basis of this order, to proceed against the Jews in the occupied territory, were the basis of his order.

The inner opposition which had arisen naturally in the defendant Sandberger when the Fuehrer Order was made known was connected above all with this part of the order. Sandberger was, as I have proved by countless affidavits, a morally pure personality who, from the beginning, had adopted a humane attitude in the Jewish question, which deviated from the official Nazi doctrine. He condemned, too, the measures hostile to the Church and protected a number of prohibited student institutions in the religious sphere. In view of these facts, what Sandberger stated about his inner attitude to the Fuehrer Order is credible without more ado. He said: The contents of this Order were so completely foreign to anything I could previously have imagined that I simply could not conceive its realisation. In particular I could not imagine that I myself could be capable of doing it and, on the other hand, I did not believe that I could demand something of my man that I could not do myself.......I considered the Order inhuman concerned, in so far as ever was possible without however offering open resistance which would certainly have been senseless.

This also explains all the subsequent action of Sandberger's. He disapproved, too, the collective internment of the Jews and did not order the internment as a preliminary measure either for the killing measure which he disapproved of all the more but as a substitute measure enforced by his order in place of the far worse measure. He ordered the less farreaching even if equally disapproving of measure of deprivation of freedom which was nevertheless bearable rather than the destruction of human life. This internment cannot be disapproved of from the point of view of international law as the result of the enforced weighing up and down. When, for example, in the Boer War, a general laying waste of the country was started, innumerable women and children of the Boers were brought into the concentration camps which were newly created at that time, to avoid something worse.

I quote from Oppenheim, Page 324' "It is also lawful when, after the defeat of his main forces and than let them perish on the spot.

The practice resorted to during the South African War of housing the victims of devastation in concentration camps must be approved." ternational law, was sanctioned here because it was not to prevent worse things, or because worse things were to be prevented.

The very same applies also to the case of Sandberger. The measure of internment was to prevent worse things, namely death. Therefore, no objection against this measure can be raised from the point of international law. Besides that, it represented an emergency measure to prevent the Jews from being killed and, Sandberger, in order to ward off the violation of the right to live, was compelled to violate the right to liberty even if this was done only under compulsion. 2). Why has Sandberger confined his measures to the internment? he could prevent the execution of the Jews. He was convinced of the fact that the lawless order for execution of the Jews would lead to enormous difficulties or even complications in the occupied territory. At a time when the United States of Worth America had not yet entered the war, he was right in assuming that the lawless execution of the Fuehrer order would lead to an aggravation of the international situation and that HITLER, in spite of all, might yet decide to mitigate or limit the order.

This hope was by no means unjustified. For in the following period it also occurred repeatedly that Fuehrer orders were limited. In the course of 1942, for example, the treatment of the Soviet prisoners of war was considerably cased. Moreover, inmates of concentration camps were, contrary to the original tendency, assigned to an increasing extent to economically essential work. The prisoners taken in the fights against partisans were used later on predominantly as workers. executive authorities to achieve a change or cancellation of the execution order, is also shown in the statement by Erwin LAHOUSEN which the Prosecution itself presented in the rebuttal document-book 5 D under Doc. No, 2894, Exhibit 228. SANDBERGER's intention to intern the Jews is also substantiated in the situation report No. 111 submitted by SANDBERGER's deputy in the latter's absence. According to that report all Estonian Jews were to be housed in camps. At the same time arrangements were made for the permanent financing and feeding of the camp inmates. If Sandberger, however, intended to arrange for a long term financing and supply with food, he certainly did not order the internment as a preparatory measure for an execution following shortly thereafter. If an early execution would have been contemplated it would have been quite unnecessary for him to make any efforts for furnishing and enlargement of an internment camp.......when in San forger's absence, without his knowledge and consent, Stahlecker ordered the execution of a part of the Esthonian Jews, the former, after his return, had the rest of the Jews transferred to the Pleskau camp. If he had approved in his innermost of Stahlecker's aim to make Esthonia free of Jews, he then would have carried out the execution immediately and would not have arranged for the transfer of the Jews to the Pleskau camp which was located beyond the borders of Esthonia.

This in addition to the fact that, according to human foresight, the life for the interned Jews in Pleskau was by far safer than in Reval. The Headquarters of the Army Group North was in Pleskau. No reasonable person could expect that such an execution would be ordered in the immediate neighborhood of the headquarters as this was then ordered by JECKELIN, again without SANDBERGER's knowledge and consent, for the Jews interned in Pleskau. 3. In carrying out the executions SANBERGER's subordinates acted under In both cases the execution was ordered by SANDBERGER's superiors and carried out by subordinates of SANDBERGER.

In one case the chain of command led from Stahlecker to Carstens, in the other case from Jeckeln to Bleymehl. This order was absolutely binding for both. Active or passive resistance, or any kind of disobedience would have entailed capital punishment for desertion, insubordination or underlining the permit of the armed forces. The sane principles were enforced in the SS. In consequence of a special decree, issued on 9 April 1940, the entire security police including the SD were alerted for special operations. If the penalties, pronounced by the Wehrmacht court martials, were harsh, those of the SS-courts were draconic. The simple death penalty was comparatively mild. Intensified kinds of death led certain death by way of the concentration camp or special probationary units. Compare Doc. Book I for the defendant Blume. Tribunal II had to deal with in the case of Milch. There the Tribunal stated:

"It has never been our intention nor did we ever suggest resulted in the loss of his life."

But then, is a punishment admissible for acts which were ordered or committed under the compulsion of a dictated order?

Is a punishment admissible if a violation of such an order was threatened by such draconic penalties that "no other choice was left"?

The Military Tribunal No. IV has stated in Case No. V that the Reich was "ubiquitous", "ready for action and in a position to inflict cruel punishment immediately on everyone who did something which could have been interpreted as sabotage or opposition against the execution of decrees or regulations issued by the government." (German record, page 10736) acting under compulsion. large extent. How should Sandberger then be hold responsible for ations in which he did not participate, of which he was not informed, which he did not want, and the perpetrators of which are besides exculpated to a large extent by the state of emergency in which they were?

4) Sandberger had no criminal intent either. the reason that the Fuehrer Order was not yet carried through within Sandberger's sphere of command, although the number of Jews was only small. This is explicable. For it was declared to the defendant Sandberger, especially by his superior Stahlecker, that he was not severe enough for the things in the East and that he showed no understanding for the requirements of the time and space (Transcript of the sessions, page 2223 of the German text).

Sandberger did not order the internment as a preparatory measure for the killing of the Jews, but, on the contrary, in order not or not yet to have to order their being killed.

It cannot be said: Jews were killed within Sandberger's sphere of command, therefore he is responsible. This more responsibility for the result of a crime is not recognized in criminal law, it is on the contrary rejected. A crime exists only whore a serious guilt exists. If the mere responsibility for the result of a crime is not even recognized in criminal law the less so in International Law. The International Law hitherto existing declined the criminal liability of individual persons. It was introduced on this scale and to this extent by the Nuernberg Verdicts only. It will also in future remain an exception and will, probably be applied partially only, that means not against members of the victorious powers. Thus it is an exception. Now, according to an old legal principle, valid for millenniums, exceptions are to be interpreted restrictively. If thus the responsibility for the result of a crime is not recognized by criminal law, the less so by International Law, if it is indeed intended to punish individual persons for delicts within the meaning of International Law. Also for that reason a liability of Sandberger within the meaning of criminal law must be declined.

5) Sandberger was not connected either with the killing. the internment. Thus, Sandberger had "been connected" with their being killed. If this tern of the Control Council Law-claims to have a reasonable meaning, a merely external connection with a committed crime is not sufficient, Whoever supplies the weapons with which prisoners are shot, contrary to International Law, is not connected with the crime of killing. He knows indeed that the weapons are suitable and destined for the killing of men. He creates a not at all unessential prerequisite to the killing. This condition is, however, not taken into consideration in connection with the crime, since the supplier could not prevent the misuse and, considering it reasonably, the person alone is responsible who commits the criminal action.

the crime, and co-operates in connection with the crime by any legally essential actions or omissions, His responsibility is either constituted by the fact that he

a) actively participates in the crime

b) or inactively tolerates the crime, although it would be the meaning of the Control Council Law refer to active actions. The "being connected" with a crime refers, however, to those forms of co-operation in which an active participation does not exist, but still an objectionable passive participation, Such a participation is to be presumed, in those cases in which a commander does not supervise his subordinates sufficiently or does not prevent excesses, although ho can foresee them. This is probably also meant by the Prosecution in stating (German Transcript of the sessions, page 64):

"The rank and the position held by these defendant comprises the authority to supervise their subordinates.

This authority command renders them unequivocally penally responsible."

and acts pertaining to the execution. Penally relevant are all acts pertaining to the execution, and that from the first commencement until the completion of the crime. Preparatory activity is, however, not punishable, unless it constitutes a punishable act in 9 Feb 1948_A_MSD_19_1_Hoxsie (Juelich) itself.

The thief who brings a ladder to a certain place in order to commit a burglary prepares by this the burglary. In so far he cannot yet be punished. He only renders himself punishable in the very moment in which he begins to execute the burglary, that means to climb the ladder, in order to execute the burglary then in immediate connection with this. The act pertaining to the execution thus is an unbroken chain of events with regard to time.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Von Stein, in order that we may not misunderstand you argument in this respect, do you contend that if Mr. X is aware that a burglary is to take place and then does nothing further that he is not liable criminally for having taken the ladder to the place of the crime? Is that your illustration?

DR. VON STEIN: What I meant was - if I want to stick to this example - if the person concerned knows what action others intend and he assists them in some manner, however, and assists them to such an extent that it makes it easier for the perpetrator to commit a crime, then he is punishable.

THE PRESIDENT: Then your illustration is not correctly put in your summation "because you say here he only renders himself punishable at the very moment in which he begins to execute the burglary, that means to climb the ladder, be he doesn't have to climb the ladder if he has taken the ladder there so that it may be used in a burglarious enterprise.

DR. VON STEIN: Your Honor, the example may not quite apply here. With a ladder it would be like this; if the person concerned only places a ladder there but knows nothing about the plan and does not commit any other action then he is not liable to punishment

THE PRESIDENT: If he -

DR. VON STEIN: --but the example was as follows:

THE PRESIDENT: Just a moment, Dr. Von Stein. If you contend that he know nothing about the burglary and took the ladder with the understanding that it was to be used for painting a house, certainly there is no crime committed, but we didn't understand your illustration to be that.

If you say now that he knew nothing about a burglary then the illustration is of no consequence whatsoever.

DR. VON STEIN: Your Honor, I merely wanted to determine a preparatory work from the point of view of time. Preparatory work can have been done so much earlier that it can no longer be considered a punishable act from a legal point of view. What I wanted to say is when preparatory work is liable to punishment. I said principally that preparatory work is irrelevant from a legal point of view unless this preparatory work as such constitutes a criminal act. That was my principle statement.

THE PRESIDENT: It does not constitute a criminal act unless the preparatory work is done knowingly, that it is part of a criminal act.

DR. VON STEIN: Your Honor, there are certain crimes according to the German law which refer to preparatory work, and they are only liable to punishment because the legislature determines them as a punishable act expressly. Apart from that preparatory work is not liable to punishment from a legal point of view. The example I have chosen with the ladder, it is like this, that because of the preliminary work an action rises which can be described at the beginning of the commission of the crime, that is the getting up on the ladder. That is what I was trying to explain.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, we understand that you understand that if an individual obtains and carries a ladder to a certain place knowing that a burglary is to be committed with the use of that ladder and the burglary then does actually take place that he is particeps criminis. That is correct statement, is it not, from your point of view?

DR. VON STEIN: Well, your Honor, may I repeat? I will stick to the example of the ladder. If somebody merely brings a ladder and that is all he does, and he knows nothing about a crime apart from that, that the ladder is to be used for a burglary, then he is not liable to punishment.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well.

DR. VON STEIN: Although the ladder was perhaps necessary in order to enable the criminal to commit a crime this preparatory work is of no importance from a legal point of view. But if the person concerned himself climbs the ladder hut the burglary is not committed then this preparatory task is an attempt to commit burglary. That is why it is of importance from a legal point of view "because something is added.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, but carrying your illustration further, if the man did not know that the ladder was to be used for burglary and he climbed the larger not knowing that he was going to commit a burglary then, of course, he is not guilty. could have climbed the ladder to elope with his sweetheart, and that is not considered a crime in any country.

DR. VON STEIN: Your Honor, I want to say something to this example.

THE PRESIDENT: Let's take it up after recess. The Tribunal will be in recess fifteen minutes.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

MR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, the Tribunal will certainly recall that the prosecution objected against an affidavit by the affiant, Jauer, and asked to cross examine this witness. As far as I am informed by the marshal, the witness will arrive tomorrow afternoon. Up to date the prosecution has not received a copy of the affidavit in question. I have asked Dr. Riediger, who promised it to me, and I have asked his assistant this morning. In order to be able to prepare the cross examination, I respectfully request that the marshal may inform Dr. Riediger to furnish prosecution with a copy of the affidavit on which I am supposed to cross examine the witness.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Mr. Hochwald, the situation is simply this, that the witness will be in court and since the affidavit has not been introduced in evidence, you may have that affidavit unless Dr. Riediger wishes to give it to you. If he wants to submit it in evidence, then naturally he must present it to you, but if he does not then -

MR. HOCHWALD: If Your Honors please. I understood that the affidavit will be admitted under the circumstances that the prosecution will be permitted to cross examine the witness. If the witness comes here, I am supposed to cross examine the witness on the affidavit. I do think I should have a copy of the document.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Yes, if Dr. Riediger still ;intends to submit it, then by all means you should have a copy of the affidavit.

MR. HOCHWALD: The original request of Dr. Riediger's was not for the calling of the witness, the original request was for the introduction of the document. I have requested to cross examine the witness on the contents of the affidavit, nothing else is subject of the -

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. The Secretary General is instructed to contact Dr. Riediger, counsel for the defendant, Haensch, and instruct him to turn over to the Secretary General the affidavit which is the subject of this discussion so that Mr. Hochwald may have a copy of it for the purpose of cross examining the witness.

when the witness takes the witness stand.

MR. HOCHWALD: If I may add, Your Honors, a German copy will be entirely satisfactory to me. Thank you very much.

DR. GICK: Gick for Strauch. Your Honor, I have submitted the affidavit of the wife of my client, as an exhibit and after conferring with my client, I have to say that my client agrees to it. if the prosecution wishes to cross examine this affiant.

THE PRESIDENT: Mr. Glancy, I don't know whether you heard the statement of Dr. Gick. It is to this effect, that the defendant, Strauch, has no objection to the calling of Mrs. Strauch as a witness for cross examination in view of the fact that he has submitting in his own behalf the affidavit made by his wife, Mrs. Strauch. The prosecution is so informed,

MR. GLANCY: Thank you, Sir.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, indeed.

MR. GLANCY: We will take it under consideration later and see whether or not we wish to call the witness.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, Dr. Gick. Proceed, Dr. Von Stein. And I don't think that you need to elaborate any further on what you have already told us with regard to the ladder episode. We all admit, I think, it is understood that if one is entirely unaware of the purpose to which a ladder is to be put -- unaware of any criminal use, that naturally he can't be charged with any crime. You seem to be still in a state of quandary about it. You don't think that anyone would accuse Romeo of having committed a crime because he went with a ladder to take Juliet away, do you?

DR. GICK: No Your Honor, I agree with you. I just would like to point out that the example chosen by me was a different one.

I merely concerned myself with one person and not with a number of persons who were supposed to be involved in a burglary therefore, the misunderstanding.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well.

Dr. GICK: The execution of the crime of killing did not yet begin with the internment of the jews, but in the very moment in which the order to kill was pronounced by the commander who had the authority to do this. Responsible for the killing is that commander who was connected with the order to kill and its execution. He is likewise responsible for such killings which were committed without his express order, which he could, however, have prevented.

In the case under consideration Sandberger gave.. the order to intern the Jews, This can possibly be considered in itself as a delict within the meaning of International Law. On the other hand, the internment is no act pertaining to the execution of the killing which took place at a later date. If Sandberger had approved of the later killing, a (punishable) preparatory activity could perhaps be seen in the internment, Since he disapproved, however, of cases Sandberger did not participate in the execution of the crime of killing. On the one hand not by active commitment. For in both cases he neither participated in the issue, nor in the forwarding nor in the execution of the order. But he did not either by default as passive participation. For, in both cases he was not in a position to prevent the killing because of his being absent. More., over, he had expressly declared to Carstens that he did not approve of the Fuehrer Order and that he wanted to do whatever possible in order to keep himself and his Kommando out of this. In the case of Bleymehl, Sandberger did not know at all that Bleymehl was informed of the Fuehrer Order, and besides, in view of Bleymehl's chapters he thought he could be sure that the latter would by no means act independently.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Von Stein, as we see it now, the issue before the Tribunal is whether Sandberger knew that once he placed the Jews in the internment camp they would probably be executed, and the determination of that issue can only come from all the facts in the case. If it is not reasonable to suppose that he could have anticipated their execution, then there was no crime. If reasonably, as a normal thinking persons he could have anticipated that the act of internment was but one stop removed from the act of execution, then there would be criminal knowledge. Does that conform to your view of the law?

DR. VON STEIN; Yes, but I wish you would consider, Your Honor, that furthermore one must consider the compulsory situation in which Sandberger found himself. Sandberger had received the order, first of all, to carry out the killing. Sandberger did not carry out this order. Afterwards Jeckeln again threatened him that he would have to carry out these matters, and Sandberger always postponed it. In other words, Sandberger was faced by the question of what he would now have to do. He could not always keep on postponing the matter, but once he had to act in same form and then Sandberger weighed the problem what to do. On the one hand, he has to violate the right of liberty, namely, the internment; on the other hand, he would have had to order the execution as per order. While weighing these two problems, Sandberger chose the violation of the law of less legal value. There was no third possibility for him. It was excluded. When Sandberger was faced by this choice he believed that perhaps after all there might be a possibility that beyond that a further execution might perhaps be prevented, be it either that the order might be revoked or that other incidents would happen and this thought of Sandberger had been taken from his finger-tips. He thought that perhaps orders might be changed later on or that they might be revoked.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. We understand your position thoroughly.

Of course, we have also the other feature as to whether merely interning the Jews was not of itself a crime, depriving these individuals of their human liberty. When we come to that, then we must consider the question of superior orders. The more fact that he locked up these Jews even without any thought of their execution would not of itself he an innocent act unless he was acting under what you might regard as compulsion and then we come into the field of the determination of the defense of superior orders.

DR. VON STEIN: Yes, Your Honor, Already before I have stated in my plea that perhaps the interment could he an international delict, but I have also pointed out how one could hardly consider internment under international law, I have also cited from the scholars who have commented on this question of the internment and who consider internment as permissible according to international law. But in principle I agree with Your Honor, and I also say that even if one says that Sandberger had made himself liable to punishment because of the internments one would still have to consider the compulsory situation in which he found himself, especially the superior order under which he acted.

THE PRESIDENT: That is the point we wanted to make. The deprivation of the liberty of any person without justification is a crime. We start out with that premise, the defense is that the human liberty was deprived only because of a compulsion, influence, a superior order, and of course that takes us into another field of discussion which, of course, will be resolved.

DR. VON STEIN: Yes. May I continue?

THE PRESIDENT: Please do. been in a position to prevent his subordinates from killing. For the order to kill was given by a higher superior directly and was executed by a subordinate of Sandberger.

Dr. Sandberger's membership in an organization declared criminal by the I M T.

Dr. Sandberger is charged with having belonged to organizations declared ciminal by the IMT.

1) as a member of the (SS) of the NSDAP

2) as a member of Office III, IV and VI of the Reich Main Security Office. Dr. Sandberger too, had been conscious of the criminal character of the organization which he joined.

1. Dr. Sandberger became a member of the SS only as a member of the SD. He was never a member "of the SS" in itself - irrespective of his membership of the SD. He was neither assigned to a unit (A "Sturm", a Standarte, or perhaps a staff of a higher command) of the "General SS", the political force of the SS, not to a unit of the Waffen SS, the Military branch of the SS. He came to the SS only via the SD and his "membership" in the SS is not thinkable and cannot be judged separated from his membership in the SD, above all it cannot be proved with regard to criminal activity and taking an active part therein, or taking a "consenting" part in crimes of others by approval or even by a mere membership, in consciousness of a criminal nature of an organization. He can only therefore as a member of the SD have belonged to an organization declared criminal.

2. Dr. Sandberger joined the SD in 1936. At the beginning he occupied himself there with the reporting on the so-called "spheres of life". It was sufficiently discussed during these proceedings of what nature this activity was.

I may be allowed to refer to all argumentations advanced by other defense counsel with regard to this especially to the exhibits and statements advanced by the defense counsel for the defendant Ohlendorf. Even the presiding judge himself stated in the course of the discussions on the SD reporting activity of a defendant during his activity as Chief of Office III in a Einsatzkommando that the lawfulness (consequently by no means criminal nature) of this activity is acknowledged. It is also shown that the SD most strictly opposed all features of public life which were contrary to an idealistic conception of National Socialist aims, including all kinds of excesses against Jews or other encroachments by the Party, by a disapproving manner of reporting. Neither at the date he joined the SD, nor during his membership could the defendant Sandberger therefore have been conscious of a furtherance of, much less of a participation in crimes. Add to this that from 1937 until February 1940, i.e. just the time during which the Nazis gradually proceeded to a policy of force, Dr. Sandberger really was only a formal member of the SD. He worked during that period in the internal administration of the Land Wuerttemberg and in the Reich Student Leadership, and from October 1939 onwards in the Immigration Center. For the rest, the SD never identified itself with this policy of the NSDAP which resulted in an increasing distrust towards its members, finally - as was shown by the direct examination of the defendant Ohlendorf - even in an actual prescription by these forces which more and more governed the Party machinery (as f.i. Goebbels, Ley and Bormann, finally the formal head of the SD himself, Reichsfuehrer SS Himmler, and the Chief of the Security Police and the SD). Of all things, the later "abandoning" of the SD and its members by the special top command, which the SD had jointly with the G on oral as, the Waffen SS, the State Police, the Criminal Police, etc.

, shows the singularity of the incorporation of this intelligence organization into a formation which had its control agency in the Reich Security Main Office. At all events, the theory of a criminal activity, participation in or furtherance of crimes by Office III (SD Inland) and its subordinate agencies cannot be maintained after the evidence produced in this trial, since these indeed directly opposed and unlawful development of the Party activity. other agencies and their subordinated agencies committed or supported any criminal activity or whether their members even without any personal participation had to be or could be aware of any such activity by branches of their agencies. In any case, Dr. Sandberger had not, could not and was not obliged to have become aware of any such activity by other offices even after he had been appointed Referent of Office I in the Reich Main Security Office, Due to lack of any criminal intent and actions of the Security Service, Dr. Sandberger had also no cause to leave same up to the beginning of the second World War, but he endeavored to bring about his release after the war had started in order to serve in the army and to do so he removed first of all the impediment which consisted in his rheumatic ailment. But these endeavors of his were blocked already by the then valid strict order against any withdrawal from service, Membership in the SD was not voluntary any longer; release was now only and alone at the discretion of the common high command, shared also with other semi-military and military organizations, which extended their compulsory orders intended for organizations of this kind, also to the SD, entirely unsuited to this by its nature.

The facts about the impossibility of a withdrawal from this time on, were proven by me in a number of testimonies; I refer in this instance to these exhibits contained in the Document Books. The Einsatzgruppen- and Kommandos were then formed for the campaign against Russia and Dr. Sandberger was ordered to Einsatzgruppe A as Commander of SK la. As a member of the SD it was to him in no way discernible or to be expected beforehand, that for a member of the SD every anything else but purely informational, especially police executive functions could come under consideration, for the one reason, that the SD had a common High Command with other organizations. Sandberger had no knowledge at all about the tasks of Einsatzgruppen before he was detailed for duty. Valid for his detail were regulations regarding police units on special duty. Insubordination was threatened with severest penalties by SS and Police Courts. Due to his enforced activity with a Sonderkommando Dr. Sandberger became aware of measures forming the basis of these proceedings. He himself however has refrained from any criminal activity, Actual participation in a crime is therefore not the case. His membership, while aware of criminal plans and acts of others, was nevertheless compulsory, it could not constitute any participation or activity. Despite of this Dr. Sandberger proved his intention to quit his activity. From the end of 1941 Dr. Sandberger tried 7 times to get released for service in the Armed Forces, always without success. In this respect I refer to the testimony of the witness Spengler and to the testimonials in this respect submitted by me as evidence.

Verona, Italy, he was finally able to return to mere SD reporting activity in the scope of which Sandberger acted now as before neither criminally, nor was he able to gain any knowledge about such an activity of others there, the SD had remained true to his rejection of such active or passive participation. He was now in his capacity as an SD member also under the authority of SS and Police jurisdiction, to which also SD agencies were subject.

Dr. Sandberger was finally yet head of a group in Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office, in this position he took care of technical administration tasks, he came into contact with the relevant tasks of the office in connection with the "Egmont Report". But just this contact shows again no characteristics of criminal implication, sanctioning of such an activity or the awareness of participation only by membership. On the contrary it was the aim of this report to make highest quarters well inclined to an immediate cessation of hostilities at the price of capitulation, by giving a clear picture of the Reich's hopeless state. connection with the foreign news service operated by it, should ever have been in contact with criminal intentions or a criminal activity, then this was surely not the case from the year 1944 on, the year in which Dr. Sandberger took over his post there. participation in such an activity, favoring, or conscious support due to mere membership while aware of such acts as a member of the SD or the Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office; do therefore not apply to Dr. Sandberger. But mere membership without these characteristics can not be liable to punishment.

His membership after the 1 September 1939 was besides not voluntary, nor his membership of a Sonderkommando either. Valid is in this respect what caused the IMT to exempt certain groups of persons from membership in criminal organizations.

Exempts must be those persons who "are drafted by the State for membership in such a manner that they had no choice left. not made himself liable to punishment in the sense of Count I, II, and III of the indictment. I beg the honorable Court to pay due consideration to this result of the trial by a just sentence.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, Dr. Koessl.

DR. KOESSL: Attorney for the defendant Ott.

May it please the Court! this trial is concerned with the crime of genocide, which in the theory of the Prosecution was incited by the fundamental teachings of the Nazi doctrine. The Prosecution logically requests that the Tribunal, by imposing a punishment in accordance with international law, will confirm the fact that human beings have the right to live in peace and dignity, whatever their race or their religious faith may be. The prosecution, therefore, does not raise the charge of murder within the meaning of the facts constituting this crime in national legislative codes. None of the defendants is charged in the Indictment with the murder or mistreatment of any one specific person. If this were the case the Indictment would doubtless name the presumed victim.

criminal act covered by national penal code, but it does not base the Indictment either on par. 211 of the Reich Penal Code or on the corresponding paragraphs of the Soviet Penal Code as the law governing the place of the crime, but apparently only wishes to cite thereby a fundamental criminal act, just as reference was also made in the course of the trial to God's 10 Commandments as the root of the moral conceptions of the civilized world. These legal and moral Prohibitions against killings are the foundation, not the subject matter, of this trial. for persecutions which "attain the proportions of national campaigns" and which "are intended to exterminate large groups of human beings." whether there was any participation in an extermination program and if so of what kind it was. For the accused members of the Einsatzgruppen these questions are identical with the questions: 1) Was the Fuehrer Order forwarded to the Einsatzgruppen in Pretsch - Dueben - Schmiedeberg an order for extermination? 2) To what extent and in what way did the individual defendants participate in the execution of this order? The first question will be discussed by my colleague, Dr. Aschenauer, both for the defense as a whole, and also the significance in criminal law of the order in general and the Fuehrer Order in particular, insofar as it becomes of acute importance for the defendants.

the defendant Ott which appears to justify the conclusion that Sonderkommando 7b executed 27 Jews on the basis of the Fuehrer Order while under Ott's command. This document is to be found in Document Book II B, English p. 60, German p. 52, bears the number NO 3276, and is submitted as Exhibit 66. This Operational Situation Report No. 194 of 21.4.1942 contains a list showing the number of executions which the individual Kommandos of Einsatzgruppe B presumably carried out between 6 and 30 March 1942, in which the number of persons killed by each Kommando is divided up according to groups of persons, from the description of which the reason for the execution, can be understood. evidence showing that these Operational Situation Reports were exposed to many sources of error and therefore possess only qualified value as evidence. The Operational Situation Reports represented summarized reports of the RSHA, which for their part were again based on summaries Which were prepared on the staff of the Einsatzgruppen. Each revision changes the picture of the original report, especially if it is combined with abbreviations and ideas directed at some specific purpose. that Operational Situation Report No. 194 does not constitute any proof that Sonderkommando 7b executed 27 Jews between 6 and 30 March 1942.

1. In the first place, the given period of time from the 6th to the 30th is not named as a reporting period in any other month, and as a matter of fact the regular reports were prepared on each occasion. in the middle and at the end of a month for the preceding 14 days, but never for 3 weeks or for 24 days.

2. This unusual report period is given here for all Kommandos of Einsatzgruppe B, so that it is apparently an arbitrary summarization by the staff of Einsatzgruppe B or the RSHA.

3. Through the submission of Doc. Book 1 for the defendant Ott it was proved that there were many gaps in the reports of Einsatzgruppe B between December 1941 and April 1942 and that no figures at all on executions were reported in this entire period up to Report No. 194 of 21 April 1942, although in some reports occurrences were reported which doubtlessly led to executions.

This very much speaks in favor of the supposition that the figures given in Operational Situation Report No. 194 also include executions which dated back before the time given; presumably these figures include executions which took place after the last numerical report in December 1941.

4. Activity and Situation Report No. 11 covering the period of 1- 31 March 1942, which has been submitted in Ott Doc. Book II as Ott Document and Exh. 4, does not mention, any executions within the area of Sonderkommando 7b.

5. The strongest proof for the assertion that it was impossible for Sonderkommando 7b to have executed 27 Jews on the basis of the Fuehrer Order during the period from 6- 30 March 1942 is furnished by the defendant Ott's own statement on the witness stand (transcript English p. 3744, German p. 3805 et seq.). Ott proved that he has a good memory and recalled many details. It is clear that just the events during the first month of his activity in Russia remained particularly vivid in his memory and that therefore he would have to remember such a large number of executions as is mentioned in the Operational Situation Report No. 194. (See also Engl. transcript P. 3793, German P. 3856). cross-examination by the Prosecution again confirmed possibly that not before 16 March 1942 did he take over responsible Command of the Sonderkommando 7 b and that up until then his predecessor Rausch made all decisions, held conferences with Wehrmacht agencies and signed reports (Engl. Transcript P. 3781, German P. 3843). Even supposing the Operational Situation Report No. 194 was correct, the possibility would still remain upon that the executions mentioned there, were ordered by his predecessor Rausch, or under Rausch's responsibility during the first half of torch, without the defendant Ott knowing about it, since he was then only getting acquainted with his work and did not overlook the Commando yet and therefore also had not yet taken responsibility.

outline of his activity in Russia, and disproved all misleading interpretations of his affidavit of 24 April 1947 NO 2993 - (Pros.Exh. 67 in the Doc. Book II B, Engl. P. 64, German P. 57.) He has stated that his Commando 7b has during the whole time he was in command of it, which after deduction of 2 longer interruptions amounted to approximately 6 months, executed not more than 80 - 100 persons after careful investigations. (Transcript Engl. P. 3733 - 3735, 3741, German P. 3795 - 3798, 3803). testimony with Mr. Wartenberg and during cross-examination, forbidden his Sub-Commando leaders, to act independently, and ordered them to submit to the Commando all protocols and interrogation records for reexamination. Minor offences were punished with imprisonment differentiated in time, so that the degree of guilt could find proper consideration, (Fig. 7 of the affidavit Ott, Pros.Exh.67).

The Execution of only 80 - 100 persons during all of Ott's activity in a distinctly partisan area, the concientious reexamination of each individual case and the imposing of differentiated detention penalties in minor cases, show that Ott did not consider his unit as an extermination instrument for Asiatic peoples and that he did not use it as such. initiative of his own. He did not carry out any action to find Jews and execute them after seizure for the reasons mentioned in the Fuehrer Order. (Transcript English P. 3718, German P. 3799). To be sure, the Army-territory was in general considered as already free of Jews, when Ott came to the Sonder Commando 7 b, but yet it was known that here and there Jews kept themselves hidden. If Ott had been a man of this kind as the opening speech of the Prosecution characterized the defendants, then instead of the numerous, dangerous reconnaissance actions against the skillfully fighting partisans he would at least have carried out a few safe searching raids for Jews, Ott did not search for Jews and also he did not have defenseless old men and children executed.

The few women executed were active partisan fighters, (Transcript Engl. P. 3760, German P. 3822). that Jews were seized only in connection with sabotage -, partisan - or. communistic units and that about 20 Jews were executed on the basis of the Fuehrer Order. (Transcript Engl. P. 3753, 3754, German P. 3816/17). it did not become clear, whether these Jews were shot only bee use of their race or because of partisan activity, At any rate after the crossand re-direct examination the President asked some more questions, obviously to clear up this matter. (Transcript Engl. P. 3791 ff. part. P. 3793 - 3795, German P. 3853 ff, especially p. 3856 - 3858). Operational Situation Report No. 194 were not executed under his respossible Commando leadership and that the total number of 20 executed Jews admitted by him extend to his whole activity in Russia, there with present the total number. He repeated his previous statements that all Jews were seized in Band - territory and that there the Jews were doubtlessly very capable of defense. To the question: "But some were entirely defenseless?" Ott answered: "Yes, some were among them". (England Transcript P. 3795,... German P. 3857/58).

This is the central question in the case Ott: Do these facts meet the specifications of a crime against humanity according to Count I of the Indictment and of War Crimes according to Count II of the Indictment? of Communist agitation and sabotage troops or some other Partisan groups. Since Ott could not advance into the heart of the Partisan area with his small forces, it was without doubt one of those active harrassing units which the Partisans had operating on the main railway stretches behind the lines.

There were neither children nor old or feeble persons among those captured, only people of both sexes who were capable of carrying arms. carry their arms openly, and also did not abide by the rules of warfare, they could, according to existing rules of warfare, be shot after their capture. Since the Presiding Judge asked the defendant Ott on the witness stand if there were also defenseless persons among the Jewish Partisans, I would like to refer here to the changeable Partisan tactics, which depended completely on surprise and the most elaborate use of deceit. Harmless appearing women suddenly drew hidden weepons and shot down unsuspecting soldiers. Unarmed Partisans in civilian clothes did intelligence work, signalled to the riflemen who were hidden in perfectly camouflaged ambush positions by means of unobtrusive signs and, after completing their job, themselves joined the armed conflict. These scouts and messengers can't be called "defenseless" even when, for the moment, they are unarmed. The really defenseless people stayed in the heart of the Partisan territory, where such small reconnaissance units such as Ott led, could not go. Stronger forces usually found empty nests after marching for days, as in operation "Polar Bear",Ott Exhibit 5. through the statements of individual members of same or through our own observation must, under such conditions, be sufficient proof in regard to those members, too, who refuse to make a statement. I, as defense counsel for the defendant Ott, was astounded when he, on the witness stand, unexpectedly admitted applying the Fuehrer Order in 20 instances. own earlier motives, for Ott has emphasized, now as then, that these 20 Jews were also captured as Partisans. The meaning of his statement is merely that he could not show Jewish Partisans any mercy, because the Fuehrer Order had authoritatively established the fact that the entire Eastern Jewry was involved with the Bolshevist system in such a way as to endanger the security and that Jews were even to be shot if no connection with the Partisans could be proved in the individual case.

cutions were dictated by military necessity alone. show how great the Partisan danger was, by describing the strength, armament, organization and fighting methods of the Partisan bands, (for example Prosecution Exh. 66, 85, 87, 93 etc, and Ott Exh. 1,4 and 5). so weird that it can only be comprehended if you consider how immense the space, how impenetrable the forests and swamps and how difficult to comprehead the ideas and mental processes of the Asiatic peoples and the peculiarities of the Bolshevist ideology and methods were for the European, and add to this the picture of a relentless ideological bottle which used every means of warfare, from the methods and tricks of primitive tribes to the most modern weapons of technological war. These are the conditions under which one must consider the Russian campaign, and especially the Partisan war, if one is to establish the boundaries of "military necessity." at the battle front in Russia was more than "enemy" and "enemy territory." All conceptions of the Occident concerning man and state, space and time, technology and war and might and right were exploded in this unfathomable land of released demons. In such a situation the Fuehrer Order also had a different aspect than it now has in retrospective contemplation from the view point of a world that is at least formally at peace. In this case, every retrospective verdict can use knowledge which is denied to the man acting in the present. And so the defendant Ott also did not have an extermination program in mind when he came to Russia, but rather, he saw, first of all, the destruction of two German engineer companies in a treacherous Partisan attack using unlawful measures of war.

When he was told of his duties, on the spot, his predecessor told him, in Briansk, of the Fuehrer Order, which had been issued "for security", as he was told. Ott did not understand that defenseless women and children and the aged were to be shot "for security", but his Chief also acknowledged to him that the Supreme War Commander had ordered this. With the sound instinct of a plain man, Ott led his Kommando like a military police unit to secure the rear and the lines of communication of the most advanced troops. Because Ott saw the duties of his Kommando exclusively from the view point of military necessity, he was brought back to Russia by General Schmidt as Commander-in-Chief of the 2nd Panzer Army, after he had already been transferred back to his job at home. (Record English page 3714, German 3775). Sonderkommando 7 b only killed proved Partisans under his leadership. And approximately 20 Jews were also members of Partisan groups. Their execution was permitted by the rules of warfare and did not have to be based on the Fuehrer order. The boundaries of the security of his own combat troops Naturally, he could not deny the fact towards the leaders of this subkommando that the Fuehrer order remained formally in effect (Reocrd English page 3752/53, German page 3816), but in practice the Fuehrer order no longer had any meaning in his territory while Ott was in command of the Kommando. (Record English page 3782, German page 3844) The territory of the Army could be considered as free of Jews since long before (Steimle Exhibit 20, 33 and 38), and the security tasks had to be carried out where the danger threatened, that is, in the territory of the Partisans and against them. The Security Police functions of Ott and his Kommando were exhausted in the defense against the Partisans and their sabotage activities. Ott also took measures to maintain strict discipline in his subkommandos, he examined all interrogation records in order to prevent frivolous decisions (Record English page 3782, German page 3844). In minor cases, despite the proximity of the front and the attendant increased need for security, he permitted clemency and gave only short prison sentences.

(Prosecution Exhibit 67, subsection 7) These limiting measures indicate the responsible way Ott carried out his police duties. Since they are a result of his own initiative they show his tendency to use milder means which, on the front lines, is equal to saving lives. In Russia, too, Ott helped the civilian population that did not participate in the fighting. Through complaints to the German Labor Office in Brjansk he was able to stop the conscription of laborers. (Ott Document 10, Document Book III). This behavior corresponds to his readiness to help the French population, which the Mayor, elected in 1947, of the village in Lorraine where Ott lived before and after his assignment in Russia, confirmed voluntarily. (Ott Exhibit 2, Record English page 3697, German page 3758). After what has been said, the way Ott commanded Sonderkommando 7 b cannot be considered as a criminal activity, His Security Police activities and his military assignment served exclusively to secure the occupation troops and the rear of the fighting front. Even if the executions of a total of 20 Jews are supposed to have been backed by the Fuehrer Order, yet it remains proven that these 20 Jews were, as well, members of the partisan units, so that they could have been shot according to the general rules of the laws of war too, In these circumstances, no participation in crimes of the murder of peoples can be seen in these 20 cases. Actions which are unobjectionable from the point of view of international law can prove no connection with carrying out of a crime in the sense of Article II, No. 2 of Control Council Law No. 10. The position as Commander of a Sonderkommando Within an Einsatzgruppe can, in itself, entail no criminal responsibility. As Ott did not use his Kommando for actions the purpose of which was the registration of Jews and their execution because of their race, he withdrew his Kommando from a purpose of the kind.

I do not need to verify whether other Kommandos of the Einsatzgruppe B carried out such actions in Ott's time, for, even if they did it, Ott did not take part in these actions and was not a member of a participating unit. The Einsatzgruppe as such was no tactical unit, which carried out restricted and uniformly conducted actions, rather the individual Kommandos operated independently, Ott had no connection with the other Kommandos of Einsatzgruppe B and of other Einsatzgruppen. (Transcript English, page 3760, German page 3823). Nor had he a clear picture of the activity of other Kommandos (Transcript English, page 3785, German page 3847). Thus the applicability of Article III, No. 2 e of Law No. 10 drops out too. Since Ott committed no war crimes and crimes against humanity, took part in no such thing in any form and was otherwise in no way connected with the committing of such, there remains only examination of the question whether Ott, through his knowledge of crimes is to be ranked in the category of persons of an organization declared criminal. First of ally there is no doubt that Ott was familiar with the Fuehrer order and that he knew too that it was carried out in Russia by the Kommandos of the 4 Einsatzgruppen, the leadership of which was principally in the hands of members of the Security police and the SD. This knowledge, in my opinion, does not suffice, because Ott could not see in such a use of individual members of the SD a criminal characteristic of the Organization SD, any more than he could regard as activity of the SD the activity of many SD members on account of their employment within the Wehrmacht. The Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos were mobile units of a peculiar kind with military tasks of a securitypolice nature. When he came to such a unit he had no knowledge of the Fuehrer order so the conspiratorial idea of promoting, by membership in this unit, the realization of the Fuehrer order was missing.

Had he had something to hide then he would not have extended the responsibility for Sonderkommando 7 b to a longer period than was necessary according to the documents submitted. From Ott Exhibit 5 it is evident that Ott, as early as 24 July 1942, was no longer designated as Commander of Sonderkommando 7 b, and yet he has assumed responsibility for the later period of its commando. The Prosecution wishes presumably to make good the lacking evidence of culpable behavior on Ott's part by reference to his long membership in the Party. Proofs must be more effective which in Ott's case are produced by the actual behavior of the defendant in the most difficult situations than such a piece of evidence as is based on the idea of collective responsibility. We must not forget that the proceedings before the Nuernberg Tribunals represent a first attempt to interpret power struggles of secular significance in terms of a legal trial by using figures which were utterly unknown in the theater where those power struggles were enacted. If one has already dared the novel innovation of making individuals answerable, from the point of view of International Law, for political and historical events, then, in no event, should this penal responsibility be extended to persons who themselves were never the determining factors but always merely victims of those power-political disputes. Control Council Law No. 10, looked at from a legal point of view, is a much too controversial creation to be regarded as a recognized development of International Law. There is as yet still no court of judicature in the world which could create International Law by means of legislation. If however Control Council Law No. 10 merely intends to fix what is valid International Law, in so doing, it would only take upon itself the task reserved at all times for the Courts.

Besides, this law furnishes characteristics of a particular offense and forms of participation which were entirely foreign to the continental legal system up to now, and, accordingly, can constitute no basis for judging, from the point of view of penal and international law, events which took place in the past before the law was issued, in the time of the war on the Continent. How entirely different is the attitude of the Signatory Powers of the London Agreement and Control Council Law No. 10 in legal thought is revealed by the different interpretations of the meaning of the State form "democracy". However, welcome the effort is to check the methods of political power struggles by international standards yet contemporary events show that experiments with development of international law in the sense of the Nuernberg principles are not yet established on a common practice and legal conviction of all civilized people in the world, This common conviction and practice is however the only real indication of genuine development of International Law. In particular, however, expiation of violations of International Law, on the part of the conquered only, must be avoided, for uniformity of law and similarity of law do not affect merely the extent to which the law can be enforced but are a property of law itself, especially of international law which is built up on reciprocity. If, however, Control Council Law No. 10 is to be looked at in individual part as national law and as legislative work of the Control Council as representative of the Reich Government, then it can not be applied to events prior to the issuing of this law. All these ideas prompt me to ask the honourable Tribunal to acquit the defendant Ott of guilt and punishment.

THE PRESIDENT: I presume you will be ready tomorrow morning to present the summation in behalf of the defendant Schubert.

DR. KOESSL: Your Honor, tomorrow morning a number of colleagues want to present their pleas and I think they would be so jealous that they would not let me do so first and I would rather complete the plea for Schubert in the turn in which it comas regularly. I shall agree with my colleagues about who is to present his plea.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well.

DR. KOESSL: I think my colleague Kink and several other people want to come before me.

THE PRESIDENTS: The Tribunal will be in recess now until tomorrow at 9:30.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 10 February 1938, at 0930 hours) of America, against Otto Ohlendorf, et al.

THE MARSHAL: The Honorable, the Judges of Military Tribunal II.

Military Tribunal II is not in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

Dr. HEIM: Dr. Heim for the defendant Blobel. Your Honor, before beginning with my final plea, I would like to make a brief statement about the final brief of the Prosecution. Some weeks ago, already, I submitted my closing brief for Flobel to the Tribunal, which concerned itself with the facts and legal consideration of the evidence submitted by the Prosecution against the defendant Blobel. The viewpoint expressed there is maintained even in view of the closing brief submitted against the defendant Blobel by the Prosecution. I ask the Tribunal to take into consideration the statements in my closing brief when arriving at the judgment. In order to avoid unnecessary repetitions, I shall, therefore, not discuss the documents in detail. but I must point out a few significant mistakes in the mentioned documents of the Prosecution, First of all, as for dates in Document No-3140, Exhibit No. 30 which mentioned the conference in Schitomir, and about the execution to be carried out in order to shoot Jews who were living there, this is mentioned on page 6 of the closing brief of the Prosecution, and is listed as having taken place on 10 September 1941. In the session of 29 October 1947 ----

Mr. Glancy: If it please the Tribunal, the Prosecution is of the opinion it is hardly the time or the place, or is it hardly appro priate for a discussion, or the debating of the broad merits of a docment as presented. This is time for a final plea. This can very well be taken care of. and I an sure it has been in the closing brief which the Doctor said has been submitted to the Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Heim, you are now about to argue your case, and you have your summation prepared.

DR. HEIM: Your Honor, I have seen the closing brief against the defendant Blobel made by the Prosecution, and I have only received it after my final plea had already been completed and submitted,

THE PRESIDENT: Well, do you intend to file a closing brief yourself, or you already have filed one?

DR. HEIM: Yes, I have already submitted one, Your Honor. Your Honor, in only one and a half pages I merely want to comment briefly on the closing brief of the Prosecution. because I could not consider the statements of the prosecution in my final plea.

THE PRESIDENT: Mr. Glancy.

MR. GLANCY: I think it should be well and definitely understood, Your Honor, that the functions of a closing brief, that is, of the Prosecution and the Defense. although related, are independent of one another. Totally independent of one another, As the Prosecution gives their interpreation of the evidence as a function for their closing brief, likewise. the same is performed for a closing brief of the defense. It is merely our interpretation or their interpreta tion. They are independent of one another.

THE PRESIDENT: That is correct, Dr. Heim, each side gives its own version of the interpretation of the evidence in the case in the briefs, and, we can not go on replying to each brief back and forth, ad infinitum.

DR. HEIM: Your Honor, I shall then start with the presentation of my plea.

THE PRESIDENT: If in your closing remarks you want to make some reference to a document which has been touched upon by the Prosecution in its closing brief, you certainly may do soo but it is not the place here to argue the brief itself.

DR. HEIM: May it please the Tribunal. the countries of Europe and have in addition to destruction misery, want and hunger left behind millions of dead. These men in the dock have been charged with having caused the death of one million people, whereby this million of people is alleged to have been murdered upon the instigation of the defendants. The defendant Blobel alone is held responsible for 60,000 murders. may it please the Tribunal that I give in short outline a picture of the defendant Blobel since I regard it as being of a very great importance for judging his person and for understanding this case. son of a master carpenter. At the ago of 5 he came to Remscheid, attended school there, learned the carpenter's trade, passed the journeyman's test, worked then as mason and by studying without a teacher acquired the necessary knowledge so that he could attend the building trade school. This training was interrupted by World War I during which he spent four years at the front as soldier. After his return Blobel resumed his interrupted studies and by industry and energy he as a practical and ingenious man attained the respectable profession as a freelance architect which he practiced from 1924 on. Coming from a modest environment he had led an irreproachable, honest and true life. By untiring efforts Blobel became a successful architect. He was then able to realise his dream of owning his own home. He was able to make use of his abilities his entire knowledge as an architect in designing his own house and its furnishings. He could surely look back with pride upon the past years of hard work which finally had not been without success. His diligent activity, however, could not for ever postpone the impending fate. The years of economic "false prosperity" were followed in Germany all the sooner by a decline, which dragged many absolutely secure existences into its destructive whirlpool.

Thus also the economic rise of the defendant Blobel achieved with great effort was suddenly interrupted by the economic crisis of the years 1928/29. he solid existence for which he had fought and worked untiringly was smached by the general economic collapse. New orders could not be obtained, outstanding fees could not be realized. The years of distress that followed consumed his last savings. The mortgage interest could no longer be paid. Due to the general economic crisis Blobel "was doen to his last shirt". This is only one fate which so many people of that type experienced. Nothing indicates that Blobel was particularly interested in politics or sympathized with any of the parties existing at that time. If there existed an association of ideas at all then Blobel only occupied himself with the socialist parties Since he himself came from the workers' class. But the substance of Blobel's life was the establishment of security in his job, his family and profession. of the quarrel between the large political parties which was becoming ever more violent; they all promised the German people a removal of the distress which was taking on the proportions of an avalanche and a restoration of sound and just social conditions. This situation alone makes the subsequent behavior of the defendant Blobel comprehensible It can only be interpreted correctly on the basis of the extraordinary situation at that time. What may appear reprehensible objectionable today was at that time regarded as a panacea which could lead out of the diastrous years. persons. For 4 1/2 years he had nothing but the most modest state support to depend upon. Thus the immense economic depression, as it is again being experienced by the world a second time - at present after this World War II- caused him simultaneously to become a member in the SPD as well as the SA reserve. By joining these two organizations he did not so much pursue political goals; economic interests were much more decisive.

He hoped his membership in the parties would make it easier for him to overcome the economic crisis and he expected finally to use it for building up his destroyed existence again. In 1932 Blobel became a member of the SS. Not fanatic eagerness to fight for the ideology of National Socialism, not the irresponsible acceptance of the platform of the NSDAP were decisive for his membership in the SS but solely the conviction that this was a way which might lead out of the economic chaos. Finally. after the seizure of power by National Socialism he was for one year employed by the municipal administration in Solingen receiving a more than modest monthly salary. His position was by no means commensurate with his training and knowledge. And when then in 1935 he received the order as an architect to furnish the office of the SD in Duesseldorf he in no way declined this offer in view of his economic situation but accepted it without long deliberation since he could again work in his line. Since his economic situation had not yet by any means essentially improved and the building business still was stagnant he readily accepted the offer to stay there as coworker in the office he had just designed; in the time thereafter he was placed in charge of the intelligence work for the SD covering all spheres of public life in the Duesselderf territory. at the same time resulted in his leaving the Allgemeine SS; he had entered into relations which he in the time to come he was unable to sever in spite of all efforts. duties and the nature of the SD. The SD, and NSDAP agency, had been established for the sole purpose of communicating to the leadership of the Party and in view of the unity of Party and State - also to the leadership of the state a true picture of all spheres of public life within the Reich. Its task exclusively consisted in collecting news from all spheres of life, in ascertaining public opinion in pointing out abuses, in short, to give the Party and State leadership a picture of how the man in the street reacted to the measures and decrees of Party and State.

The SD never had executive power, since being an organization of the NSDAP it could never authorized for that. Then SD may properly be compared with the I attitude for the Study of the Public Opinion, especially since the SD had many coworkers who did not at all belong to the NSDAP. In this respect it was an entirely objective source for intelligence. the reason why he was declared to be indispensable by a general order of the Reichsfuehrer-SS according to an agreement with the OKW, i.e. that for the duration of his indispensable status, he was at the disposal not of the Wehrmacht but exclusively of the Reichsfuehrer SS. This activity as full-time SD leader was also the cause for Blobel's being ordered to Berlin in June 1941, According to the agreements reached between Wehrmacht and the Reichsfuehrer-SS this was placed on the same level with a draft into the army, i.e. it corresponded to an induction notice such as millions of German men fit for service received during the war. Non-compliance with the draft order was equal to a refusal of military service which was subject to severest punishment. This was, however, not a typically German institution. None of the belligerent countries contented itself with an appeal to voluntary enlistments, not one country could in this world - wide struggle renounce the conscription of its men fit for service. World War II toward a withdrawal from his service of fulltime SD in order to be able to devote himself to his former profession as an architect had been in vain, it had now become completely impossible due to the order of the Reichsfuehrer-SS. Once ought in this vicious circle there was no retreat. From the time of his transfer in June 1941 Blobel was considered soldier and was subject to the regulations of maritial law; in case of a refusal he would undoubtedly have been placed before an SS and Police tribunal.

The statements made by Streckenbach and Heydrich at Pretsch were also to the same effect. Thus the defendant Blobel had slipped into this assignment without intending it and without in the least having made any efforts in this respect, nay even without having known in advance what his assignment actually meant. SD, The refusal of his spureior office did not per it him to materialize this plan. his remaining with the SD at all have been regarded as criminal ommission taking into consideration his knowledge at that tiie of the activity of the SD? By no means. activity with the SD and to turn his back upon this organization for his duty merely was to collect information without making comments and to pass it on to the competent offices. That this never can be a criminal activity and never has been so was an established fact for the defendant Blobel at that time and still is so at present, Quito on the contrary. he had to regard this activity of his as a proper and admissible instrument for informing the government about the actual state of mind of the people and the suitability of the adopted measures, a means which - if duly applied and evaluated would necessarily be of benefit to all nationals of the Reich and in thepositive sense of an inestimable value. charged with having occasioned the murder of 60,000 persons as leader of Sonderkommando 40. what now did Blobel actually do as long as he was leader of Sonderkommando 4a? Has he made himself liable to punishment on the grounds of war crimes and crimes against humanity in the East according to the presentation of evidence by the prosecution?

long as it was commanded by Blobel, beginning from the first day on always was in every respect exclusively subordinated to the Army in the combat area under the command of Field Marshal von Reichrenau, and that this subordination resulted in a situation for Sonderkommando 4a which was entirely different from that of other Kommandos, and which is of fundamental importance for the judgment under criminal law of the defendant Blobel. The very name "Sonder"-Kommando (special Kommando) refers to the direct subordination of the unit under unit of the army. Neither is this refuted by the draft of an order for the commitment of the Einsatzgruppen of the Secutiry Police and the SD (Doc.

NOKW-256, Exh. 174). The document involved is merely a draft and the Prosecution has not been in a position to prove that it was carried out as such. The fact of subordination under an army unit also accounts for the essentially smaller number of personnel which amounted to about one quarter of that of the remaining Kommandos of Einsatzgruppe C (BLOBEL statement, German Transcript, page 1531). In this connection the following circumstances must be pointed out; The frontline in the East extended from North to South over a distance of much more than 1000 kilometers. In this vast area 4 Einsatzgruppen with an average of 4 Kommandos each were in charge of Security police tasks which had to be carried out in cooperation with Wehrmacht and Constabulary. The purely military operations were incumbent on 3 Army Groups: Army group North Field Marshal Ritter von LEEB --, Army Group Center Field Marshal von BOCK and Army Group south-Field Marshal von RUNDSTENDT-Several armies and special military formations were subordinated to every Army Group. As has been shown at all times during military actions the person of the army commander is the decisive essential, It is his initiative which lends the special character to the orders coming to him for execution from the supreme authority. This is ultimately the reason why the situation was entirely different for the individual Einsatzgruppen and oven more so for the individual Kommandos. Sonderkommando 4a was appointed for commitment in the area of Army (AOK) 6. The chief commander of AOK 6 was Field Marshal von REICHENAU. As will be shown later, von REICHENAU as military commander exercised a decisive influence on the activity of Sonderkommando 4a; in doing so he wasperhaps in opposition to other generals who -- perhaps intentionally -- hold themselves aloof from the units of the Security Police and the SD and from their sphere of duties. Von REICHENAU was an army commander of an entirely different past. His eminent person asserted itself also insofar as he exercised an influence on everything that in the least degree would touch upon the military interests of his zone of operations. In order to elucidate what has been said up to now, the following must be noted:

The German generals did not form a homogeneous unit. They were different in their conceptions and view. At the time when National Socialism seized power in 1933 there were on the whole only a few generals who could be regarded as absolute followers of HITLER. However, one of these few was von REICHENAU. His words: "The Wehrmacht will be National Socialist or it will not exist", are typical of his attitude at that time and also later. His absolute subordination toward Hitler made him contrary to many another army commander -- an obedient and passionate executor of his directive. In this connection I wish to refer especially to the statements made by the USSR member of the International Military Tribunal Brigadier General (?) of Justice L.T. Nikitschenko concerning the "inaccurate decision with regard to the General Staff and the OK Which in their latter part in detail deal with von REICHNAU's person. the commander -in-Chief of AOK 6. On this occasion he was informed of the order from OKH which had been directed to AOK 6 directly. According to this order, Kommandos of the Security Police were subordinated to the military commanders in their area whereby it was the task of the Kommandos to handle the-circles of political opponents according to security police principles and to bring about the absolute elimination of all elements insofar as these would in any form impinge the security of the military units and the military operations. In addition to this order of the OKH it was left to the discretion of the commanders of the forces to issue the corresponding implementation provisions. (BLOBEL statement. German Transcript pages 1532/33). Accordingly, Field Marshal von REICHENAU ordered that Sonderkommando 4a be attached to AOK 6 with regard to movement and supply. As regards its activity it was subordinated directly to department C of AOK 6, its duties being the handling of security police matters. (BLOBEL statement, German Transcript, page 1533). This order by REICHANAU was, while still in the discussion stage, laid down in writing and passed on to the units involved (division commander and commander of the army rear area). In accordance with the chain of command von REICHENAU immediately ordered the splitting up of the Kommando into 3 sections and the subordination of those sub-kommandos (Partial Kommandos) under the division commanders (BLOBEL statement, German Transcript, page 1532, BLOBEL Doc.

No. 5 Exh. 5, HAEFNER Affidavit, para 4). In the period from 28 June 1941 to the end of August 1941 the situation of Sonderkommando 4a was as follows: In its entirety it was completely subordinate to the Commander-in-Chief of the AOK 6 Field marshal von REICHANAU. The leadership of Sonderkommando 4a. received its orders directly from Department C of AOK 6, which corresponds to the G-2 in the American Army. In order to prevent every overlapping and contradictory orders, the directives of Einsatzgruppe C for Sonderkommando 4a were routed through Department C of AOK 6, Moreover, directives from Einsatzgruppe C could only be of minor importance, since Sonderkommando 4a was assigned to the combat zone and here exclusively AOK 6 was competent, whereby it must be taken into consideration that Sonderkammando 4a was attached to AOK 6 as military Security Police unit. men including drivers, mess personnel and office, was divided into three subkommandos and into one tank obstacle clearing kommandos. These subkommandos were in charge of the handling Security Police matters, that is, the search for, seizure of, and collection of enemy records, the interrogation of persons, the compilation of files on incidents and also the carrying out of executions that had been ordered. The subkommandos were for reasons of expediency subordinated to the divisions of the AOK 6 and accordingly received their orders from these directly, that is, from their Departments C, whereby these orders because of their urgency only in exceptional cases were routed through the office of Sonderkommando 4a, and in such cases merely forwarded.

(SS BLOBEL statement, German Transcript, page 1534 to 1540; Doc. Book I BLOBEL Document No. 1 Exhibit 1) BLOBEL himself stayed with the rest of Sonderkommando 4a consisting of orderly room, messing personnel, as well as of an interpreter. Handicapped by the bad read conditions, the structure of the vast combat area and the state of the operations, during the advance a connection between the subkommandos and the rest of Sonderkommando 4a was absolutely out of the question; however, even apart from that it was hardly possible, since Sonderkommando 4a and the subkommandos possessed no radio communication and merely depended on courier service by messenger. As chief leader of Sonderkommando 4a BLOBEL was not competent to make independent decisions, he was solely subordinate military agency which carried out the orders received from AOK 6. In a Edition, the subkommandos were more or less separated from the chain of command, from Sonderkommando 4a; they were only subordinated to this in personnel matters. To whom could thus BLOBEL have given orders in view of this situation. STRECHENBACH had announced in Pretsch, i.e. whether the extermination of all communist groups and Jews had been ordered or merely the elimination of these elements who imperiled the security of troops and thus the military operations. Even as blanket orders it was of no importance whatever for BLOBEL since Sonderkommando 4a only was the executive agency of AOK 6. It was only of importance for those officers whose unit was not directly subordinate to a military unit. For BLOBEL exclusively and solely the order received from von REICHENAU and issued by the OKW was decisive, whereby its execution in every single case was ordered by AOK 6. According to the statements of BLOBEL which have not been refuted this order merely contained the directive that those elements should be exterminated who attempted to prejudice the course of the military operations in a way contrary to international Law. Thus the "Fuehrer decree" is of no importance whatever for judging the activity of the defendant BLOBEL so tint there is no need for further details concerning this question.

underwent no change even in August 1941 when 28 to 30 men of the police as well as two platoons of the Waffen-SS were ordered to Sonderkommando 4a and thus caused a certain re-organization of Sonderkommando 4a. These attached units were with regard to orders subordinate to the competent Wehrmacht units -- as was Sonderkommando 4a itself. BLOBEL had no competence whatsoever to give them orders or directives since they were completely outside of his jurisdiction. of the Waffen-SS to the subkommando South, since pursuant to a directive by the AOK 6 to begin with only 2 subkommandos had been found BLOBEL statement, German Transcript, page 1552/53), of which later -- as had already been provided for the Advancekommando Kiev -- was found with the strength of 2 leaders and 8 men. army units and within their assigned area received their orders directly from the Wehrmacht Kommandant. They were in addition, also subordinate to the Chief of Einsatzgruppe C who, however, chiefly received his orders from Department G-2 of AOK 6 as well as from the Higher SS and Police Leader JECKELN. We particularly refer to the statements in the closing Brief (page 31) concerning the person of JECKELN. In agreement with this commitment and the subordination of these Subkommandos to the Wehrmacht Kommandants there existed, no connection whatever with regard to orders between the rest of Sonderkommando 4a and the Subkommandos. The office and the supply column of Sonderkommando 4a comprised merely 3 leaders, 6 non-cons and men, as well as one or two interpreters. The subkommandos were also assigned to fight against the guerillas.

together with units of the Wehrmacht, the local Kommendantures, the Ukrainian militia with the army units and formations, which were exclusively subordinate to the Higher SS and Police Leader JECKELN. (BLOBEL statement, German Transcript, pages 1555/56, Doc. Book BLOBEL I Doc. BLOBEL No. 2, Exh. 2.). Corresponding to the commitment of Sonderkommando 4a in the combat area ordered by the Wehrmacht, BLOBEL could exercise no influence whatsoever on the activity of the subkommandose, neither on executions possibly carried out by them. It is incontestable that the subkommandos were integral parts of Sonderkommando 4a and that its officers were subordinated to BLOBEL in disciplinary ratters, this does, however, not imply any authority whatever to issue orders concerning their activity in carrying out security police measures. Those measures were exclusively meant to guarantee the security of the Wehrmacht and a smooth course of the military operations as possible, and to avert impingement of any kind.

Since Sonderkommando 4a only was employed in the direct combat zone, the exclusive responsibility rested with the Wehrmacht Commander who was in charge of the control and performance of the military operations. This very fact proves that the defendant BLOBEL even at that time never had any authority to give orders to the subkommandos with regard to security police matters. The rest of Sonderkommando 4a was far away from them, its functions more of a purely administrative character and with a view to its small number of personnel it was not taken into consideration for any security police measures. BLOBELS activity merely consisted in the handling of purely administrative duties, however, in the widest sense.

In discussing Doc. NO-3140 presented by the Prosecution as Exhibit No. 30 the Kiev operation and BLOBEL's participation in it were dealt with in detail in the closing Brief for the defendant BLOBEL (page 23), Reference can be made to it in this respect. If it is mentioned again, then it is done only because the Prosecution offered in rebuttal an affidavit by Karl HENNICKE as evidence with which it wishes to prove BLOBEL's participation in the execution in Kiev, (see Doc. IX-4999, Exh. No. 202). Incidentally we wish to note that HENNICKE was not an officer of Sonderkommando 4a, asis erronesouly assorted on page lit in the Closing Brief of the Prosecution, According to his own statement HENNICKE was the official in charge (Sachbearbeiter) of Ant III with the staff of Einsatzgruppe C (see Doc. NO-4999, Exhibit No. 202, Subparagraph 3). First of all, we establish that the executions in Kiev were by no means carried out by BLOBEL's order, but Kiev were not carried out on Blobel's order at all but on the basis of a joint large-scale action of the town commander and the Higher SS and Police Leader Jaeckel by the forces of the Constabulary and the Security Police (Blobel testimony, German transcript, page 1606), Since a town commander, of the Wehrmacht had been appointed who was in charge of the entire area of the town, only he -- in agreement with the Higher SS and Police Leader -- could be competent for executions of that kind, BLOBEL himself had suffered a head wound during the dynamiting of buildings at the time of the entry into Kiew and as a consequence was not fit for duty (Blobel testimony German transcript, page 1603) Document Book Blobel II, Affidavit Hennicke, Doc.

No. 7, Exhibit 7; Affidavit Ostermann, Doc. No. 12, Exh. 11; Affidavit Haefner, Doc. No. 6, Exh. 6, Section 4). This testimony of BLOBEL, which is substantiated by several affidavits cannot be refuted by the prosecution not upon by the affidavit of Hennicke of 4 September 1947 (Doc. NO-4999) Exh. 202, which they submitted. does not follow at all that BLOBEL was personally present during those executions, it leaves completely obscure the question as to whore and in what capacity Hennicke supposedly saw the defendant BLOBEL, In addition, his statement is obviously incorrect, since he claims to have seen Calsen also. Calsen was one of the candidates for a supervisory position, who had already left Kiew before 29 September owing to their having been ordered to return to Berlin, The affidavit is in no way suited to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the participation of BLOBEL in the executions in Kiew because of its inaccurate formulation and because of the incorrect statements proved in the above mentioned paragraph, as a witness on his own behalf, BLOBEL has not denied (testimony Blobel, German transcript, pages 1598 ff) that men of SK 4a had been assigned to that large -- scale action; that fact however does not establish a criminal responsibility, since the Higher SS and Police Leader and the town commander were in charge of all of the detachments which had been assigned to the executions; SK 4a thus merely had been ordered to supply the required number of enlisted men.

In connection with that it must be considered that BLOBEL -- as already mentioned -- was not at all fit for duty due to his head injury and thus could not have had a hand in those transfers. preparatory action or the actual execution, that fact alone cannot be considered a criminal act by the defendant BLOBEL in accordance with the provisions of Control Council Law No. 10. An analysis of the text of the Affidavit by Hennicke (Doc. NO-4999, Exh. 202) -- its doubtful value as evidence has already been pointed out -- leads, to no other conclusion than that BLOBEL actually had been only a spectoator, and that he himself had no authority to order or to carry out the executions in Kiew. November 1941 was stationed in the same place -- Kiew -- as Einsatzgruppe C, necessitated a change in the chain of command, even though it was only of a minor nature. The Remaining sonderkommando - 4a - was directly subordinate to Einsatzgruppe C. Even though it had been intended for commitment in the combat zone, it had remained at the headquarters of Einsatzgruppe C due to personnel changes, and was utilized there for patrol and security duty. (See Affidavit Ostermann, Doc. BLOBEL No. 12, Exh. 11). Both of the Subkommandos were located in the frontline-zone; there they were subordinated to the 0-2 sections of the individual divisions and received their orders directly by way of AOK 6 - Division. Einsatzgruppe C was completely excluded in regard to the Subkommandos. The channel of commands between AOK 6 and Einsatzgruppe C continued to exist. (Testimony Blobel, German transcript, pages 1632/33; Document Book Blobel I, Doc. Blobel No. 3, Exh. 3) During this period also, BLOBEL, who was with the Remainingkommando of SK 4a had no authority to issue orders to the SK-4a Subkommandos, which were committed in the combat zone.

the Remaingkommando of SK 4a arrived there after a trip which had been made difficult by the unusually severe winter, on or about 10 December. Almost at the same time the two Subkommandos arrived. SK 4a thus for the first time in many months was almost full strength i.e., 4 Officers and 42-45 non-commissioned officers and men, except for a decrease in personnel due to sickness. Kharkow was in the combat zone and. was the focus of the Russian winter offensive for the reconquest of that strategically important town. The situation was extremely precarious and necessitated the commitment of all available forces for the defense of Kharkow. The severe Russian winter, to which the German soldiers were not accustomed and which in addition reached temperatures lower than any recorded for a long time, had in conjunction with all other difficulties -- undoubtedly impaired their fighting power. The over-all situation had as a consequence that from December 1941 SK 4a was released from its security police tasks and was committed next to combat units in the defense belt around Kharkowin a purely military function. Thus in its entity it was subordinate exclusively to the competent Wehrmacht commander of that sector (Blobel testimony, German transcript, pages 1634 - 1637; Doc. Book Blobel I, Doc. Blobel No. 4, Exh. 4). defendant BLOBEL (Doc. NO-3824, Exh. 31) in connection with his testimony as a witness on his own behalf regarding his criminal responsi bility (German transcript, pages 1646 - 1654): they had been ordered by the Commander-in-Chief of AOK6. These included persons who had been arrested by the Wehrmacht and the SK 4a because of guerrilla activities, attacks on German troops, disrupting of supply lines and acts of sabotage.

Those cases were examined by Field Marshall von Reichenau himself together with his Judge Advocate on the basis of the documents, after the accused had been thoroughly interrogated and given fair hearing. Thereupon, BLOBEL was ordered by the Commander-inChief, Field Marshall von Reichenau, to have those executions carried out under his personal supervision. (Blobel testimony, German transcript, pare 1649). In addition, it is a fact that the maximum number of persons who were executed in actions in which the SK 4a participated in any way, be it only by furnishing a few non, amounted to approximately 10-15,000 including the Kiew action (Blobel testimony, German transcript, page 1649). Apart from a few reprisal measures and actions which had been ordered because of special incidents, by C in C, AOK 6, and/or the Higher SS and Police Leader, executions have been carried out by the SK 4a only on the basis of unobjectionable ordinary procedure and the decision of the C in C of the AOK 6 or the officers, assigned for this purpose. At no time did BLOBEL hold independent authority to execute an operation (statement Blobel, German transcript page 1648-49). Not one single document of the prosecution proves that any executions had been carried out by order or by instigation of Blobel. Not one single document states that BLOBEL had knowledge of executions carried out by the Subkommandos. All assertions of the prosecution to the contrary are merely conclusions without being substantially proofs. BLOBEL, i.e. whether he actually became liable to punishment for murder by his action in the sense of International Law, according to the charge preferred against him by the indictment.

Before appraising BLOBEL's activity in the light of criminal law may I define the criminal act of murder more in detail. Control Council Law No. 10 in connection with the London agreement, which has established the rulings on which this trial is based, mentions among other things, murder, without, however, specifying the elements which make it a criminal act and the criterion for killings which are permissible in war.

One solution of this extraordinarily grave problem is possible only by explaining it rather from the actual meaning than from the mere wording of rules of International Law. According to this, where now is the difference is between the permissible and non-permissible, between "military necessities" and offense, between sanctioned killing and murder? century-whether as customary law or legal maxims - ware exhaustively codified by the first and second Hague Peace Conferences of 1899 and 1907. Even if it is true that the community of nations adhering to International Law, has alienated itself from the spirit of the Hague Rules of Landwarfare in the time following these conferences, and above all by the ordeal by fire of two world wars, the existence of a general International Law corresponding to the Hague Convention cannot be denied. acknowledged the Hague Rules de jure, or have ratified them. This is especially true with regard to the Soviet Republic. I will enter later on into the discussion of the question as to whether as a consequence of the lack of a formal ratification by the Soviet Union legal inferences may be drawn, Moreover, in this respect, I would like to refer to the previous exhaustive discussions, because this concerns a general question, which affects. the case in chief of all defendants. War and its unavoidable consequence of the killing of human beings, constitutes from time immemorial an institution of International Law, Most of all, under the effects of doctrine of natural law, it was bound to become one of the most important tasks to find a suitable limit which divides the two basically recognized spheres of law, that of the state and that of the individual. The Hague Rules of Land Warfare is one of those laws, which aspires to fulfill this task by ore erecting barriers for the protection of the enemy soldiers and the civilian population against a belligerent or victorious sovereign power, occupying; a particular area, according to Paragraph IV of the introduction to the basic agreement it tries "to draw a certain line" in order to restrict that is, to "limit" the hardships of war.

It merely confirms something, which had already existed before, similar to the proclamation of the King of Russia of 11 August 1870: "I wage war against the French soldiers, not against the citizens of France. Therefore, they will continue to enjoy complete security with regard to their persons and their property and as long as they do not deprive themselves of this privilege by undertaking hostile actions against German troops, I will accord them my protection." in cases where human beings are killed in violation of the rules of International Law. It is true that paragraph VI of the introduction to the basic agreement emphasizes that the "necessites militaires" the the "military necessities" have precedence over alleviating the hardships war. "military necessity" can be defined as those acts.

which are indispensible for the carrying out of combat missions, or for the protection of one's own soldiers, for instance against attacks or sabotage on the part of the civilian population. Therefore, it should not be forgotten that human rights become secondary in relation to "military necessities"; in other words, infringement of the internationally recognized human rights are permitted only insofar as they serve the purposes of military necessities, that is, the protection of military personnel or of war operations. In practice, every independent state decides autocratically as to the limits of the military necessity of its measures on the one hard and the human rights on the other, provided however, that the sovereign state can neither arbitrarily alter the Hague Rules of Land Warfare, nor the laws and usages of war. International Law recognizes two kinds of intentional killing of human beings: the permissible one, i. e. killing in the course of hostile actions during the war and the non-permissible one. The latter constitutes murder, not only according to International Law but also according to the national laws of civilized states. The two executions which were carried out under the supervision of the defendant BLOBEL do not violate, the rules of International Law. Civilians perpetrated hostile acts against the German troops and because of the fact that the prerequisite of article 1 of the supplement to the Hague Rules of Land Warfare did not apply., they forfeited the rights of protection granted by this treaty. Whether, according to the standards of International Law and in consideration of the fact that the Soviet Union did not sign the Hague Convention and often violated the laws and usages of war during the belligerencies, it can be assumed that there is a justified claim to arbitration and thus to legal hearings, must be left open. However, the evidence in that respect had proved that in all such cases interrogation officials of the SK 4a and of the Wehrmacht made thorough investigations, interrogated the accused and finally submitted each case to the C in C AOK 6 for decision. Von Reichenau examined the documents together with his court officer and passed sentence.

This procedure was completely sufficient and without doubt corresponded to the conception of human rights and humaneness as conceived in the Hague Rules of Land Warfare, If the SK 4a carried out executions of which BLOBEL was previously informed, that is those for which he forwarded the orders of the competent Wehrmacht units to his Subkommandos, this does not constitute murder. Every single case had been thouroughly investigated by interrogation officials, the defendant had been granted a hearing, documents were made up for each case and each case was submitted to the AOk 6 for decision. Even if the AOK 6 should have made decisions concerning executions without a thorough examination of the documents at least, the subjective prerequisite of murder with regard to the defendant BLOBEL is lacking; he could assume that on account of the regular orderly examination of the documents by the AOK 6, such an examination was actually made; moreover, the defendant BLOBEL had no authority and also no possibility of establishing the fact that the procedure of the examination had been omitted. Finally, it must be taken into consideration that the defendant did not possess the necessary training in order to be aware of a possible irregularity or illegality. The authorized military commander has to be held responsible for a possible objective violation of International Law in cases of ordered executions or procedural infringements. As an executive official BLOBEL was obliged to obey the military order, believing that it was a correct one.

(The legality of reprisals.) by the competent Wehrmacht Commanders, or by the Higher SS and Police leaders in each case, it must be said, that they too cannot be considered as criminal according to the indictment, as far as they were executed by the SK 4a. Here too, the Hague Rules of Land Warfare try to define the two opposites in the so-called reprisal law in order to reconcile the individual in need of protection and claiming his human rights, with the independent state, insisting upon its judicial omnipotence.

Therefore on the one hand, the individual, who will always consider it a hardship and injustice to be punished wrongly for the mere assumption of a crime, and in addition for the reasons of state of an enemy state. On the other hand, there is the military power of the belligerent state, the military necessities of which demand complete subjugation and supremacy. usages of war alleviation should be achieved by drawing a boundary line between state and individual. The point of view of the state is taken into account by recognizing in principle the right of collective punishment; that of the individual by limiting this right. These limitations are drawn up along three lines: according to purpose, the punishment and the persons to be punished. introduction to the basic agreement. Pursuant to this Paragraph collective punishment is permissible for assassination, attacks and acts of sabotage against the fighting or occupation forces, in order to deter others from similar actions. Concerning the penalities, Article 50 states that they should consist of "fines or other types of penalties". If according to this regulation a fine is to be imposed death penalty is permissible, whereby the International Law does not provide for any proportional relations. Apart of this, Article 50 also limits the category of persons, whose punishment is permitted. Such persons have to be found "jointly responsible for individual actions". It is not stated when human beings are jointly responsible as one body for an individual act. At any rate, it cannot mean that the state occupying a country, may determine that according to its own discretion, since the moral responsibility constitutes the prerequisite of a criminal act according to the established standards of the Hague Rules of Land Warfare, that is, the occupying state may decree a collective punishment for a definable individual act only for those persons guilty of voluntarily perpetrating such an act.

Evidence or incriminating circumstantial evidence must be furnished against the individuals concerned. number of documents which prove beyond any reasonable doubt that the conduct of the Russian enemy was contrary to International Law, and which prove above all that the guerilla warfare had been planned a long time before the outbreak of the war and that the population had been systematically trained for it. Faced with this situation, the German Wehrmacht and the Police units subordinate to the Higher SS and Police leaders could not guarantee the security of the occupation forces without carrying out severe collective punishments. The Soviet Union conducted the war against German troops with methods which not only were in direct contradiction to international law, but also would never have been used by any civilized nation of this world. Men, women, children, old men, in short everyone capable of using a weapon was forced to participate in the system of guerilla warfare prohibited under International Law. A long time before the occupation, an extensive and very detailed organization had been created for the purpose of functioning behind the front lines following the occupation by enemy troops, that is, exclusively for the purpose of causing damage to the personnel and equipment of the occupation forces by malicious and surprise attacks as well as by acts of sabotage wherever and whenever possible. The man left behind, even women and children were used as snipers who attacked individual soldiers and convoys and who did not even hesitate to desecrate the dead in a bestial manner. Women and children acted as spies and informers their primary duty was the safeguarding of supplies for the partisans. There can be no doubt about it, that guerilla warfare conducted in such a way is not permissible under International Law simply because this wan has been declared a war of defense against an agressor. It can never be decisive which one of the warring states is to be considered as the agressor with regard to the illegality under International Law.

lines was well known to the German authorities. Thus, in each raid and act of sabotage, the entire population of this Particular area was always guilty of giving willing assistance, and they were backed up by this superbly operating organization. The fact that in carrying out reprisals innocent people can also be affected and unfortunately are affected, is unavoidable, from the outset, it is the purpose of the reprisals to be mainly directed against innocent persons. Only such reprisals which are carried out according to plan against any kind of a majority of persons regardless of the guilt of the individual are illegal under International Law. to the defendant BLOBEL, that the SK 4a participated in the executed reprisals with the full knowledge of BLOBEL, without first examining as to whether it was a planned crime on the Part of the population.

Your Honors! I believe that whosoever witnessed in Russia these cruelties and inhuman acts perptrated on German soldiers, whosoever saw or even suffered on his own body the horrors and bestialities of Russian warfare, will understand the reprisals carried out by the German troops and will not doubt that they represent genuine "military necessities". danger, because the sovereign state decidesas judge on its own behalf, that is, it transfers the decision to its officials. Its doubtless subjective opinion is the guide for the subsumption of its executed measures according to the standards of International Law. was at all bound to follow the regulations of the Hague Rules of Lana Warfare, in view of the totally different conditions of warfare prevailing in the East - at least according to the propagated opinion of the supreme authorities at that time:

It is true that in international law the non-observance on the part of one party does not relieve the second party from his obligation of observance, but this principle is in no way an exception and especially could not be applied in the war in the East. It is true that the individual who suffers in the conflict between governments and states i s the real object of protection, that is the population and the individual soldiers end prisoners-of-war. Further, it is true that all these individuals, be they military personnel, be they civilians, require this protection all the more in the occupied territory if their army collapses; international law is primarily created to assure the safety of these individuals in such a situation. However, as was the case in the campaign against Russia, when a large number of the inhabitants of this land, whether young, old, man, woman, or child, contrary to all acts of humanity and against every provision of international law, cowardly carries on a war from abmush against the occupying army, then certainly one cannot expect that the provisions of international law would be observed to the letter by this army. That would mean sacrificing oneself and surrendering without benefit of protection to the innumerable influences acting in direct contradiction to international law. The strict implementation of the principle: "Vivat justitia pereat mundus", would mean an irresponsible sacrifice of one's own soldiers, namely if the opponent does not intend in principle to observe on his part" the existing customs of civilized nations, the laws of humanity and the demands of public conscience". In this connection the fundamental question must be asked whether today general international law applies at all. The legal interpretation of this question seems to me to be of great significance with respect to the acts which re under indictment in this trial. For be it from me to lose myself in a maze of juridical observations, I wish only to offer incontestable facts. The allied Powers have imposed a series of provisions of the Hague Convention of Land warfare which are quite obviously not valid law -- and denied Germany the right to impose a corresponding customary law.

In this connection are included the provisions of Articles 46, 47, 50,53, 55 and, 56. These facts, it is true, should not be submitted to critical examination, however, they must be ascertained, since it is unequivocally and incontestably clear from them that the Allies as the occupying ofrces, as well, have declared on their own initiative that provisions of international law are not applicable. According to the principle of equality in international law, Germany should also be accorded this same Light in its conduct of war. May I just add a few comments to the fundamental statements on the subject "Order", which was already presented from the opposing side: As leader of an executive organ Blobel had no other alternative than to carry outthe orders given him by his superiors. The possibility of open insubordination and resistance to superiors existed in Hitler-Germany only under the simultaneous risk of an SS and police proceeding, which could mean the most serious personal disadvantages - loss of freedom and possibly of life, but conceivably did not necessarily have to result in this way. In the final analysis this was contingent upon matters which were beyond the influence of individuals. However, there is a sufficient number of examples on hand to prove that neither one's position of rank or undeniable merits could keep one from the fate of death or the concentration camp. That does not mean that everyone had to pay the high price of loss of life or freedom for such acts. However, could the taking of such a great risk be expected? What should Blobel have done in his condition of constraint into which he had been forced by conditions of war in June of 1941? In all events, would he have been able to achieve anything through insubordination, which would undoubtedly have placed him jeopardy? Another would have taken his place with the same order. The charge of unconditional obedience against the government of Hitler is fundamentally unsubstantiated, since then the whole world would collapse in anarchy if in every state every citizen were permitted to subject the legality of every order of a formal competent organ to scrutiny, every citizen of every state would be logically entitled to the rewards and culpability of everything good and bad achieved by any of the agencies of his state, provided he obeyed the supreme legislator.

In every army loyalty and obedience still apply as the highest military virtues without which it cannot carry out the duties assigned to it. but having obeyed blindly is too lightly raised. Unfortunately, the true picture of the authoritarian state is too lightly misunderstood by all those who have been spared by fate from a life under such a system of government. If it were so simple to disrupt themotivating power of such a government machine, organized down to the n'th degree, then the history of not only of Europe but of the entire world would Present an entirely different picture. The technical means of suppression have in the course of history been perfected to an immense extent. At the time of the storming of the Bastille a comparatively small number of people were able to carry out successfully a unique uprising against weapons which were primitive when compared with those of today, Today they would have been dispelled with a few machine-guns and in all probability it would have required several million martyrs to overthrow the ancient regime. Our era is well aware of the techniques used in controlling the masses and evidences this knowledge through the appreciati n they accorded, among other things, to the atom bomb. As concerns the indictment for membership in the SD declared by the IMT as a criminal organization, neither can Blobel be condemned for this fact. According to the wording of the judgment of the IMT, the prerequisite for the judgment is that the member of the organization did not declare his intention to resign after 1 September 1939 in site of his knowledge of the criminal character of the organization. It can be seen from previous statements that in the action of Blobel there was a lack of subjective facts, that is, that hemust have considered the executions carried out in harmony with international law and so considered them, with the result that the found himself in a credible error of judgment.

It would have been incumbent upon the prosecution to present evidence for this fact, yet it did not produce evidence that Blobel was aware of the criminal character of the organization. In addition, service in the SD was not voluntary, seen from the viewpoint of the conditions of war. This point has been treated in detail in another passage. a man who had been successful in a recognized profession through his assiduity and honest endeavors, who never strayed from the straight path of personal decency, obedience end loyalty, and who, through conditions of war, was placed before a task that today is under severe indictment. Do not consider his case only from the legislative point of view, but also call upon your humanitarian feelings and understanding for the position from which he like many of his comrades found no escape. And now, your Honors, render a judgment that is conceived before God and your conscience, affix your names to a judgment that is an expression of wisdom and justice. Remember the words of your President Woodrow Wilson: "America has raised the torch that will shine for all generations and will light the way of humanity to the goal of justice, freedom and peace."

THE PRESIDENT: Do you want to say anything further now on the matter of documents presented in the closing brief by the prosecution, or do you think you have sufficiently covered it?

DR. HEIM: Your Honor, may I ask one question please? The Tribunal has ruled that after the final pleas of theprosecution, the final statement of the prosecution, the defense may immediately reply to it. I will take the liberty, if the Tribunal agrees, during this reply to make these statements briefly.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, very well. We would like to repeat, however, that this additional reply which will be permitted defense counsel must be directed to something entirely novel, unique and new presented by the prosecution which the defense did not have a chance to reply to or meet in its argument.

present in court this morning. There should always be two or three lawyers here to proceed with the further business of the court. Now it so happens that we are just about at the recess period so that no time will be lost, but if Dr. Heim had finished sometime prior to the recess period we would have lost considerable valuable time which is inexcusable. with regard to further counsel ready to present their summations? that you, Dr. Heim, will inform other counsel that they must not take too lightly this business of presentation of their final pleas.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Durchholz.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Durchholz for the defendant, Schulz. Your Honor, I would like the defendant , Schulz, to be excused tomorrow morning from participation in this session because I would like to have a talk with him.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant, Schulz, will be excused from attendance in court tomorrow morning. Dr. Gawlik, are you ready to proceed?

DR. GAWLIK (Attorney for the defendant Seibert): D from the middle of July 1941 until June 1942. He did not volunteer for the assignment to the group staff in the capacity as Leader III, but was ordered to the group staff of Einsatzgruppe because of his former activity in Office III of the RSHA. Neither did Seibert work voluntarily in Office III during the war. with the Wehrmacht and was recalled from there without his knowledge and without his volition. I refer to the affidavit of Arthur Bau which has been submitted by me. This affidavit proves that, at the beginning of the war, the defendant Seibert was serving with a Wehrmacht unit where he held the rank of officer. Against his wish, he was recalled from his unit to Berlin, to the RSHA, Office III. This is likewise confirmed by the then leader of the department "Personnel" in Office I of the RSHA, Gottfried Klingemann. His affidavit proves that the department for mobilization orders in Office I, on 1 September 1939, the date of the outbreak of the war, sent orders for their immediate return to the RSHA to all members of the RSHA who were serving with Wehrmacht units at that time, and that Seibert numbered among the re-called, and that Klingemann himself had seen and welcomed him in the RSHA, on which occasion, in early September 1939, he was still wearing the army uniform of a lieutenant. fore, was not a voluntary one, but was based on the Reich Defense Law. The affidavits of Dr. Ehlich and Hennicke which were submitted by me, prove that the defendant Seibert did not volunteer afterwards for Einsatzgruppe D, but was officially assigned there in the capacity of Leader III. The statements of the said persons tally with the findings of the IMT, namely that members of the SD had no possibility of choosing freely their fields of activity, during the war, and that refusals of accepting definite positions, in particular in the occupied territories, could have entailed severe punishment.

For this reason it is not a matter of voluntary transfer to Einsatzgruppe D as the Prosecution asserts in its Closing Brief on page 2. Seibert worked as Leader III, and his work consisted in making reports, in particular about the various fields of daily life, such as about economy, administration, folkdom and culture and about the mood and situation in general. It was therefore not merely a matter of making economic reports as the Prosecution will have it on pages 2 and 3 of the Closing Brief, where, by the way, some mistakes are made as regards the denominations and the activities of Seibert in Office III and as Leader III in field service. The intelligence work of Department III was one of the tasks of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos which fact has been proved by the hearing of the evidence. addition, been commissioned with the task of "liaison with the 11th Army", i.e. with the Wehrmacht, by the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe D, owing to his being an officer in the Army. While the defendant Seibert was a member of Einsatzgruppe D he never exercized any functions in either an Einsatz- or a Sonderkommando which alone, as has been clearly proven by the evidence submitted.,- had the task of carrying out executions. Seibert for part of the executions carried out by Einsatz- and Sonderkommandos of the Einsatzgruppe D. A decision on the Question as to whether the defendant is guilty within the sense of the indictment, depends upon an answer to the following 5 questions, namely which I have already mentioned in my plea for Naumann. These are:

1. Did the defendant personally participate in executions?

2. Were these executions. carried out by his directives or orders?

3. Before the executions were carried out, was he aware of this fact?

4. In case the answer is in the affirmative, did he either have the power or the opportunity to prevent or stop them?

5. Should this also be answered in the affirmative, did he neglect to act and thus became particeps criminis and co-principle?

Concerning question 1: Neither did the Prosecution contend that he did, in fact, do so. However, he neither participated at executions. persons having committed acts of plunder and sabotage. His presence was, however, merely due to chance and was in no way postulated by his tasks with the Staff of Einsatzgruppe D. These tasks merely demanded the carrying out of trip of inspections pertaining to his sphere of work as Leader III, but did not include superintending of executions. On the occasion of these journeys of inspection, it was the task of Seibert to talk to the expert III of the Kommando he was visiting, to give him directions and to visit, jointly with him, the offices of the Army Command or Division of the letter. On most of those trips Seibert was accompanied by the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe. When accompanied by the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe, Seibert's activities or tasks did not differ from the ones he usually undertook when he was alone. That is to say, when he was accompanied by the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe, he merely executed tasks pertaining to his sphere of work, namely that of reporting events. Twice, on trips undertaken jointly with the Chief of Einsatzgruppe, Seibert happened to arrive in time to witness executions, carried out by Kommandos. anything beforehand of these executions. Their presence at these executions was therefore not the purpose of their trip, Whilst en route, Seibert and Ohlendorf merely happened to come upon these execu tions.

Only after the lender of the Kommandos had talked to the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe, did Seibert learn of the details. In this connection the defendant Seibert learned in both cases that the persons about to be executed had committed acts of plunder and sabotage. These, therefore, were not executions based on the Fuehrer Order, The defendant Seibert never admitted, as is contended by the Prosecution in their Closing Brief, page 9, that possibly the victims had only been executed because they were Jews. On the contrary, Seibert has stated (records page 2526 Engl.) that he learned that these persons had committed acts of plunder and sabotage. Neither did the defendant Seibert in his cross-examination by the Court state, as is contended by the Prosecution, referring to the record, page 9 of their Closing Brief, that he knew what the purpose was. Seibert's testimony pertaining to this point, according to page 2523 Engl., is as follows: "Beforehand, I know nothing at all of the execution." Seibert as a subordinate officer could not very well stay in the car, but had to accompany him. Under those circumstances, the presence of the defendant Seibert at the executions does not render him a party to the crime. This is the generally accepted principle of the penal code of laws of all civilized states. I refer in this connection to the arguments of Wharton in his book on "Criminal Evidence" 1935, Vol. II, page 1237, where he says:

"Mere presence at the time a crime is committed without interfering, does not make one a party to a crime, unless his interference was a duty by reason of some position held by him, or unless non-interference operated ans was designed to operate as encouragement or protection." This corresponds also to the judgments regularly passed by the American Courts. For this, I refer to the decisions of the tribunals in the individual states of the USA, listed under note 16 on page 1237 of the quoted work, I further refer to the decision of the British Military Court for the Trial of War Criminals, held at the Court House, Almelo, Holland, on 24-26 November 1945, printed in Low Reports of Trials of War Criminals, Vol.

I, pa, 35. From this decision of the British Military Court the fact emerges that the mere presence does not suffice, but that, according to the Established Rules of Criminal Law of civilized Countries, only those are responsible as aiders, abetters, accessories, etc., who in some way supported the action. Hence there must be added a support of the crime by some kind of action in order to create a responsibility as aiders, abettors, accessories, etc. with the judgments regularly passed by German Courts according to which complete inactivity never suffices to make somebody responsible as an accomplice in a crime of commission, not even if the inactive person knew about and approved of the punishable action of the other. Especially his mere presence at the place of crime is not sufficient. realization of the crime (I here refer to Eber-Mayer-Lobe-Rosenberg, Reich Penal Code 1929, Article 47, Note 2b and decisions listed there of the Reich Supreme Court in penal cases). Also the rendering of assistance as an accomplice is a crime of commission in German Penal Law and therefore cannot be found in a purely passive attitude (Sec Olshausen, Commentary on Penal Code, 1927, article 49 Note 10). happened to witness as a spectator, were not measures on the basis of the Fuehrer Order, but measures which probably had been taken in accordance with the law after carrying out proceedings against plunderers and saboteurs. During his presence, Seibert neither had the right nor the obligation to interfere with the carrying out of the executions, because he only accompanied Ohlendorf on his two journeys, owing to the great distances between the locations of the Kommandos in order to take advantage of the Einsatzgruppen-Chief's car, and because his presence at executions did not belong to the service tasks which were incumbent on him in the Staff.

Moreover, it would not have been possible for him to prevent the executions in the presence of his superior Ohlendorf. His non-interference therefore does in no way mean a support of the Kommandos who carried out the executions.

Covering paragraph 2: of Einsatzgruppe D never gave directives or orders for the carrying out of executions. reason that the Fuehrer's Order had been transmitted by Gruppenfuehrer Streckenbach in Pretsch to the Sonder- and Einsatzkommandos already before the beginning of the Russian campaign. Neither would Ohlendorf's temporary absence have given any cause, owing to the order which in Pretsch had been clearly transmitted to all Kommandofuehrers for giving any execution orders or making decisions in this field. In this connection I quote the statement of Einsatzgruppen Chief Ohlendorf (page 533 of the German, 523 of the English transcript) "The orders for the executions in the East given in Pretsch, went to all Einsatzgruppen commanders or Einsatzkommando leaders who went along during the beginning of the Russian campaign.

They were never revoked. Thus they were valid for the entire Russian campaign as long as there were Einsatzgruppen. Thus it was, therefore, unnecessary at any time to give another order of initiative. Therefore, I did not give any general order of initiative and did not give any individual order to kill people." ing to Ohlendorf's own statement, had been transmitted in writing by himself to the Kommandos. I also refer to the statement of defendant Schubert on this point, who testified that there existed written directives by the Einsatzgruppen Chief to the Kommandos.

authority in the Kommandos under his charge to decide whether a person was a Jew, a Gypsy or a Communist and to order his execution, Ohlendorf declared: "That was a matter of the Kommandos". Also codefendant Braune has testified during the cross-examination by the Prosecution that the final establishment of the fact whether a person was a Communist or a Soviet functionary rested with the Teilkommandos. not the responsible deputy in charge of the Einsatzgruppe during the absence of Ohlendorf. February 1947, 24th February 1947 and 7th of December: 1945 to which the Prosecution has referred as evidence, that the defendant Seibert had been the deputy general of Ohlendorf. In the statement dated 24th February 1947 Schubert testified:

"In October 1941 I was assigned to the Einsatzgruppe D. Otto Ohlendorf was the chief of the Einsatzgruppe and Willy Seibert was his deputy, I was assigned as adjutant to Ohlendorf, and stayed in this position from the time of my arrival until the end of June 1942". conclusion by the Prosecution that Seibert had been the responsible deputy of Ohlendorf within the entire Einsatzgruppe. Schubert stated merely, as is evident from the context of his testimony, that Seibert represented the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe Ohlendorf within the Group Staff. During his hearing on the witness stand Schubert has made it absolutely clear, that he wanted to state only this, when making his statement, and that his explanations could only be understood in this sense. Schubert testified to this as follows:

"What can be meant here is only that Herr Seibert in the Staff of Einsatzgruppe D and only for the staff of the Einsatzgruppe D was the deputy of Ohlendorf, only in this one function, but never, and that is what I said, the ease could have happened in which Seibert would have been the deputy of Ohlendorf for the entire Einsatzgruppe D. Therefore I would lie to explain this particular wording Seibert was his deputy,' and that is what I said, I think, in my interrogation very clearly, and I certainly did not put it into this very general form."

proof as compared with the affidavits. For this reason the oral statements are to be given preference. When analyzing the affidavits of Schubert, it should be taken into consideration also, that the statements dated 4th and 14th February 1947 were not composed by Schubert. Rather, they were drawn up by the interrogator Wartenberg on the basis of Schubert's statements and were merely given to Schubert for his signature, as has been confirmed by Wartenberg in the witness box. In the index dated 7th December 1945, Seibert is listed under the heading "staff". Schubert stated with regard to this in the witness box:

"I mean to express by this phrasing, what I actually expressed was what was the actual case. Seibert was the Permanent Representative in the Group Staff of Einsatzgruppe D." justify the assumption that Seibert was the deputy general for the Einsatzgruppe D. The statements of Jonas are much too general. The statements of Jonas are hearsay, which, according to the general rules of evidence, are not admissible. Jonas has only voiced his opinion, that Seibert had been the representative of Ohlendorf in the Einsatzgruppe D, without giving the least indication, how he came to have this "opinion". Jonas was at that time officer in the Company of the Police and - as he himself stated in his affidavit - was assigned to the Sonderkommando 11 B, which up to November 1941 was never stationed at the location of the Group.

He was with the Kommando 11 B in Simferopol, the location of the Group, only at the time, when the defendant Seibert was on leave in Berlin (November/December 1941), and he himself left the Sonderkommando 11 B and with it the Einsatzgruppe in the middle of December 1941, according to his own statements. These statements have been confirmed also by the testimony of the former Kommando Leader 11 B, B raune, during cross-examination. during cross-examination and to the affidavit of Bekhof. the statements of Ohlendorf in his affidavit dated 2 April 1947, in order to substantiate its claim, that Seibert was the responsible plenipotentiary for the entire area of the Einsatzgruppe. Ohlendorf did not have a Deputy General, but the four Group-Leaders of his office represented him each in his sphere of activity. This is evident from the affidavit of Dr. Ehrlich, who knew from the way in which Ohlendorf used to conduct his work and command in RSHA, that Ohlendorf during the 6 yea rs of his activity as Amtschef had never had a deputy. Dr. Ehrlich mentions in particular with regard to this question:

"In his absence, even if lasting for a longer period of time, he was represented by the competent Group-Leader in matters pertaining to his specific sphere of activity. This ruling applied also for the long period of absence of Ohlendorf as Chief of the Einsatzgruppe D in Russia. In the absence of Ohlendorf, the Group-Leader signed with "I.V." (by order, in Vertretung), if it was a matter of letters from the Amtschef, without, however, thus being or becoming the Deputy general for the entire Amt III. This applied also for the time, when Ohlendorf was present as Amtschef III and the Group-Leader signed a letter concerning his Group-area."

Spengler find the affidavit of Dr. Roessner. appointed as deputy of Ohlendorf by the ESHA. Ohlendorf himself has never appointed him as his deputy for the entire area of the Einsatzgruppe D nor has in fact permitted him to be active as such. He could not even have done it without the ESHA. I refer in this matter to the statements of Ohlendorf in the witness stand. he was the senior officer after him, had been entrusted with the duties of a deputy during his (Ohlendorf) absence. These statements however refer only to the position of Seibert within the Staff, but not to his position within the entire area of the Einsatzgruppe. This has been indicated very clearly by Ohlendorf in his hearing as witness. In this connection, Ohlendorf testified as follows:

"Seibert was the senior officer after me, in my staff out, not in the Einsatzgruppe, but in the Einsatzgruppe there were at least two people who were senior to him in rank, and at least two others who had the same rank as he held; therefore, it means that he was my deputy on the staff of the Einsatzgruppe, but not deputy for the entire sphere of the Einsatzgruppe." prosecution. To be sure, on page 5 of the Closing Brief, the prosecution, referring to page 727 of the record, makes such assertions. But this is not true. Ohlendorf merely said as follows:

"The co-defendant Seibert was my deputy in the staff of my group". (Record p. 737 German). Brief: "He supervised the smooth running of the affairs" (Record page 728 Engl.) On page 5 of the Closing Brief, the decisive phrase "in the staff" is missing.

on the witness stand, are a better proof, too, then the written statement of Ohlendorf.

According to Ohlendorf's additional credible statements Seibert could never have deputized for Ohlendorf in the entire spheres of the Einsatzgruppe because he had no authority over commanders whose rank was superior to his, as for instance, Seetzen, who commanded 10 A, or Standartenfuehrer Mueller of Kommando 12, This very fact proves that Seibert was not Ohlendorf's deputy in all the spheres of the Einsatzgruppe, and not a deputy with authority over the Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos. This would also have created conditions which were entirely impossible from military aspects, as it would hardly be possible to make a Major the superior of a Colonel or Lieutenant Colonel - if we want to make comparisons with military life.

This proof is in no way invalidated by Seibert's own statements. Seibert has never admitted that , in absence of Ohlendorf, he could have forwarded orders to the Kommandos with the notation "for your compliance". This fact does not become evident from the page of the Record as quoted by the Prosecution on page 8 of its Closing Brief (page 2616 German). Seibert has only stated that he forwarded such a communication "with the request to take official notice", which does not mean "for your compliance". There is a considerable difference between forwarding orders "to take notice" and "for your compliance". The phrase "for your complance" at the same time, has a commanding meaning, which the phrase "to take notice" has not. This invalidat es also the conclusions which the prosecution wants to draw from this unproven assertion of Seibert's having been an important link in the chain of command. the situation with the leader of the Kommando in an urgent case and that he took steps at once, it is unmistakably proven by the Record that this statement of the defendant Seibert had nothing to do with immediate steps in connection with executions, as the Prosecution would like to have it, but referred to circumstances like the example of the surprise attack of partisans, as mentioned by the Presiding Judge.

The statements of the defendant Seibert about the interrogation of PW's have likewise not the meaning which the Prosecution, on p. 8/8a of the Closing Brief, wants to attribute to them. The defendant unmistakably said that it would have been impossible for him to conduct police interrogations for the gathering of information from a PW, in the framework of an investigation, but that he, just as any other soldier, could have asked only general questions of a prisoner who had been taken to his presence, in order to learn which agency would have jurisdiction for the questioning of the PW. relevance as to Seibert's guilt. Only what Seibert did can have decisive value, and not what he would have done. in rank within the staff of the Einsatzgruppe and that he therefore took over all the tasks "within the group", whenever Ohlendorf was absent from the group, In this respect, the fact must be stressed that Seibert did not formulate the affidavit himself. As Seibert testified on the witness stand, he did not alter this formulation beca use, in the usual phraseology, the group staff too was meant when the term "group" was used. This interpretation of the term "group" clearly emerges from the affidavit, because Seibert, in the same affidavit, but shortly before, stated that he was never declared as the deputy of Ohlendorf as regards the Einsatzgruppe D. This sentence would make sense only if the staff of the group is meant too by the germ "group". That the term "group" was frequently used when the staff of the Einsatzgruppe was meant, has been repeatedly proven in the hearing of the evidence.

Thus the defendant Graf said for instance, on page 4769:

"Current reports went to the Kommando Leader first who then passed them on to the competent agency or to the Einsatzgruppe itself," "Around the end of September 1942, I was to take over a sub-commando too.

I rejected this, saying that I had only been ordered to set up Department III, that I had been furnished by the group for this purpose and I was only man who dealt with SD reports," On p. 4895; to the question:

"Did you know that the commando leader made reports to the group", the defendant Graf, cross-examined by the Prosecution, replied as follows:

"Yes, I knew that because my reports wont through my commando leader to the group". put the following question to Graf:

"Would you say that your position in the commando corresponds to the same position in the group?" in his cross-examination, according to page 36-6:

"Who wrote these reports to the group?"

And his answer contains the following sentence:

"But it is also possible that, at that time, reports were submitted to the group directly from there, from the sub-commando, because it was nearer."

The Defendant Noske once used the word "group" and another time the word "staff" though in both instances he meant the staff of the group (Gruppenstab). According to page 3607 of the German text of the record, the Defendant Noske in cross-examination, was asked the following question by the Prosecution:

"......, thus you would have omitted to mention this in your report to the Einsatzgruppe D?" mitted to him shortly afterwards, in the following manner:

"The report was sent by my Kommando, and I know, that the report was approximately 3 to 4 times as voluminous.

That is has now been cut, I perceive.

As to who has done the cutting, whether cannot say."

the questions, used the word "Einsatzgruppe" in the sense of staff. During the cross examination of the Defendant Schulz two pages of the records mention "Einsatzgruppe" seven times, though they can but refer to the staff itself; this applies both to the questions of the Prosecution and the replies by Schulz. It is to be noted in this connection, that in the German Military parlance it is common usage to talk of the "Regiment", though only the Regimental Staff is meant. I do not believe that the arguments of the Prosecution concerning the interpretation of the word "group" as used in the affidavit of Seibert could be refuted more precisely. Finally, the documents submitted by the Prosecution do not in any way prove that Siebert was Ohlendorf's deputy-in-toto. If Seibert signed these reports with the letter i.V. on behalv of Ohlendorf, he did this merely in matters pertaining to his sphere of work: namely that of making reports for the Army. As regards his sphere of work Seibert also acted as deputy for the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe when the latter was on duty. In this connection, I refer to the statement made by Ohlendorf, that the letters "i.V.", on behalf of, do not mean that Seibert had, in effect, been his deputy.

Ohlendorf testified as follows:

"But it was the general, habit that chiefs of certain branches signed "By order of". That was the usage in the RSHA and par ticularly in my office III.

Therefore he signed "by order of" my deputy in his branch."

This very lucid statement of Ohlendorf's proves that the conclusions drawn by the Prosecution from his affidavit in its closing brief pages 4 and 6, are erroneous. I furthermore refer to the testimony of the witness Dr. Spengier. These statements are confirmed by affidavits given by the following persons: Dr. Ehlich and Dr. Roessner. In addition, the then Chief of Staff of the 11th Army, General Koehler, to which the Einsatzgruppe D was assigned, stated in his affidavit that he was not aware of the fact that Seibert had been a deputy of the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe or had been designated as such. Koehler was the 11th Army officer who had received the reports in question signed by Seibert. He therefore would have known if Seibert was Ohlendorf's deputy in the latter's capacity as Chief of the Einsatzgruppe. been the deputy-in-toto of Ohlendorf, we must not forget to consider the fact that Seibert accompanied the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe on most of his duty trips. The questions directed to defendants Ohlendorf, Schubert and Seibert by the Prosecution were based on this fact. Among others, the defendant Seibert thus visited Prague to attend, jointly with Ohlendorf, a congress there at the end of April/beginning of May 1942, as is evident from the statement of Seibert and also from the affidavit by Dr. Ehlich. This fact in particular refutes the assumption that Seibert was the deputy in-toto of Ohlendorf. If Seibert had in fact been Ohlendorf's deputy-intoto for the entire Einsatzgruppe, then his presence with the Einsatzgruppe during the absence on duty of the Chief would have been absolutely and particularly necessary.

the statement made by Ohlendorf and the information that Schubert has given us each Kommandofuehrer had to make his own decisions necessary for his sphere of work during Ohlendorf's absence. He became thus a do facto deputy of Ohlendorf in matters pertaining to his own section. If a decision concerning the entire sphere of action of the Einsatzgruppe would have become necessary, then the ranking Kommandofuehrer would have had to make it. This ruling corresponded to the actual situation, as anyhow, the Kommandofuehrer had to act independently owing to the enormous size of the area occupied and the great distances between their location and the group. entire sphere of action of the Einsatzgruppe cannot be concluded, as it is done by the Prosecution, by the fact that he had access to the secret files of the Einsatzgruppe. All files and orders, inclusive of secret reports and secret orders were, as has been evidenced by Ohlendorf, Schubert and Seibert filed in the office. Neither had the defendant Seibert been commissioned with the task of keeping special secret files of of safeguarding them. If the reports filed in the office were accessible to Seibert in his capacity of Leader

III and for his duties connected with the making of reports, it remains incomprehensible how anyone could deduce from these facts that Seibert had held a special position with the sphere of action of the Einsatzgruppe as a whole. while being cross-examined by the Prosecution, immediately confirmed that naturally he had access to the secret files. Without considering this unequivocal statement of Seibert concerning this matter and by incorrectly reproducing Seibert's statement, page 5, closing brief of the Prosecution the latter tries to prove that Seibert has denied this fact.

In reality, however, the defendant Seibert even on page 2590 English, 2639 German, of the record quoted by the Prosecution itself, states that he naturally had access to the secret documents. The remark of the Prosecution that in this connection Seibert had given a very sly reply indeed, is completely out of place. assertion that the cooperation between Seibert and the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe Ohlendorf was of necessity close and complete and that the defendant even knew about top secret matters with which the Einsatzgruppe was engaged. During the cross-examination of the Prosecution, Ohlendorf replied to the question whether Seibert was one of his few close friends in the Einsatzgruppe D:

I quote:

"I do not consider military connections as friendly connections." During the cross examination of the Prosecution Ohlendorf was likewise unable to corroborate the statement that he trusted Seibert to be the man who would see to it that all orders and instructions from Berlin as well as from the Army would be carried out as conscientiously as he himself would have done it, had he been present. Seibert discussed the execution of Jews, gypsies, Communists, with Ohlendorf etc., is incorrect in this form. According to the page of the Record quoted above, Ohlendorf said that he did not recall any concrete discussions. on page 5 - page 730 of the English Records, that Seibert would have had the power and authority to remedy abuses in the Kommandos or Tartarean companies, I refer to Ohlendorf's statement who literally said the following:

"I have just said that I do not remember that he was sent by me to inspect any executions.

If I sent him on any inspection trips, had special authority to remedy bad conditions there.

That was the purpose of the trip."

more contained on page 3 and 10 of the Closing Brief of the Prosecution:

Defendant Seibert never stated that he was Ohlendorf's representative in questions concerning economy (Department D III). On page 2474 of the English Record which was quoted by the Prosecution itself, Seibert merely said, that he was not deputy chief of the Einsatzgruppe. At another passage Seibert declared that he represented Ohlendorf in the staff, in his sphere of work III, that is in all matters relating to SD-reports (which does not refer exclusively to economy) and in matters concerning communication with the Army. This points to the incorrectness of the statement on page 10 of the Closing Brief of the Prosecution, according to which Seibert is said to have defended himself by stating that he was in charge only of the administration and business routine.

Not even the enumeration of Seibert's duties, which, as I have pointed out, are represented incorrectly and one-sidedly, entitles the Prosecution to draw the conclusion that these duties are "the normal and official duties" of a deputy chief of the Einsatzgruppe. Because then even a staff officer, as for instance the administrative officer, or the transportation officer, who makes inspections, could be called a deputy chief.

This might be sufficient proof that Seibert never was Ohlendorf's deputy for the entire area of Einsatzgruppe D, and consequently had no authority to issue any commands whatsoever for any execution measures.

Concerning this Ohlendorf declared that this was a mere imaginative denomination. staff for security problems. The staff of Einsatzgruppe B itself never dealt with executive tasks. This was clearly shown by the statements made by Ohlendorf, Seibert and Schubert, True, a specialist for executive questions had been attached to the staff at the time of the activation of the Einsatzgruppe; however, Ohlendorf requested the Reich Main Security Office to remove him already at the beginning of the operations because the staff of Einsatzgruppe D itself had no executive tasks, a specialist for this subject thus being unnecessary. So this specialist was subsequently relieved. If the defendant Seibert accepted also reports from the Kommandos dealing with executive matters, he had, however, - in contrast to his reporting on the Dept.

III - domain proper - neither the right nor the possibility of checking such matters or even of giving orders and directives in connection therewith. The two activity reports mentioned on page 9 of the Prosecution's final plea, which partly fall into the time of Ohlendorf's absence, therefore cannot be regarded as incriminating Seibert, particularly because due to the absence of the chief of the Einsatzgruppe only the Kommando leaders as the letter's appointed substitutes might be mentioned in connection with the events described in the activity reports. ordered the co-defendant Schubert to inspect the executions in Simberepol in December 1941. In this connection the Prosecution referred to Schubert's affidavit dated 24 February 1947. In this affidavit Schubert declared that he had received an order from Ohlendorf or Seibert for the inspection of the executions in Simferopol in December 1941. Even the contents of this declaration make it doubtful as to who gave this order. To this must be added that Schubert when questioned in the witness box declared unequivocally that this order could have come, not from Seibert, but only from Ohlendorf. During his interrogation in the witness box Ohlendorf testified that it was he himself, not Seibert, who gave the order for the inspection of the executions in question. Moreover, the order cannot have come from Seibert for the mere reason that he had not been in Russia at all during the time in question. Seibert, in the period from mid-November till about end December 1941 was on recreation leave, which he spent in Berlin. This follows from Schubert's testimony in the witness box. Schubert's testimony further shows how the wording came about, according to which Ohlendorf or Seibert had destined Schubert to supervise the shooting of 700 to 800 human beings.

Schubert stated;

"Where it is said that "in December, 1941 - I do not remember people."

This wording "or Seibert" is completely wrong for feropol at all.

I think I have already clarified this point by saying that I told Mr. Wartenberg that this was wrong, but he because, allegedly, I had said in the interrogation "Ohlendorf or Seibert". November and December 1941 Seibert had been on leave in Berlin for about 4-5 weeks.

I make further reference to the statement made by the codefendant Braune to this point. In addition there are two more affidavits which confirm that the defendant Seibert was on leave in Berlin at the time in question. order to supervise the executions from the defendant Seibert. the Prosecution quoted also Ohlendorf's affidavit dated 2 April 1947 in which Ohlendorf declared that the only people whom he committed in genera to inspection duties had been, besides Schubert, Willy Seibert and Hans Gabel. There is no mentioning of any executions. The Prosecution has arbitrarily added this to its quotation on page 5 of the final plea. to Seibert in connection with executions. dated 2 April 1947, as follows:

"This formula was no doubt the result of long discussion with "that I did not know anything whether, or to which executions I sent the two persons named last.

The inspection task I refer also carried out regularly; he inquired about order in the thing he had to deal with, or of any event occurred."

Upon my question put after this to Ohlendorf:

"Is it therefore correct that in this sentence you wanted to express that Seibert did not inspect any executions?"

I received the following answer from Ohlendorf;

"I expressed that I do not remember any such executions, there fore, I do not remember that Seibert inspected any."

satzbruppe D answered in the negative to the question I put to them as to whether the defendant Seibert had inspected an execution carried out by their units. did not supervise any executions. or Sonder Komnandos or for their further commitment. In the reports presented by the Prosecution as evidence, Seibert only passed suggestions and plans of the Kommandos on to the 11th Army without having himself any power of decision. It should be noted in this connection that the suggestions made in these reports were not originated by Seibert, but by the Einsatz and Sonder Kommandos. The only reason why Seibert passed on these reports was that he had been entrusted with the task of collaboration of the staff of the group with the 11th Army. nection as the Prosecution tries to imply on page 7 of its final statement. If Seibert stated on page 2587 English: "Decision rested solely with the Army", he was referring to the assignment of the Kommandos. On pages 2588 and 2589 of the English Record, however, no more mention is made of these assignments. The point at issue was the power of decision in case of necessary local transfers of Kommandos.

interview on 11 October 1941, he did so within his sphere of work and not by any means as Ohlendorf's Deputy-General. In this capacity, he accordingly signed the report "I.V." on behalf of, that is acting as deputy in his sphere of work, The respective comments on page 7 of the closing brief of the Prosecution to the effect that he had admitted having signed as deputy of the group chief, is incorrect for it says on page 2578 of the Record, quoted by the Prosecution itself, that Seibert was with regard to the staff (Stab), the permanent deputy of the Group Chief in his sphere of work, and, as such, signed these reports, This is also proven by the affidavit of General Woehler.

Woehler was Chief of Staff of the 11th Army and it was with him that Seibert had the interview, referred to in the document. That an interview with General Woehler did take place is proven by the photostat copy of Document NOKW-629Exhibit 159, Volume III D, which shows Woehler's initials and the handwritten annotation: "Took place on 11 October in Novnikolajewka. W". Woehler stated in his affidavit that Seibert whose sphere of work comprised economy, administration, public health, ethnic and cultural questions, never reported to him about executive measures or executions, nor about executions of Jews. It had not come to his knowledge, he states, that the defendant Seibert acted or had been appointed as deputy of the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe D. of the Kommandos of Einsatzgruppe D, between 1 February and 16 April 1942 deals with executions of Communists and the burning down of the village of Laki, that does not prove at all that the defendant Seibert had any influence whatsoever on these actions. The measures described in the report could not, by any means, be based on an order or on instructions by the defendant Seibert, because Seibert was never informed about the activities of the Kommandos until afterwards. In this connection I would refer in particular, to the deposition of the chief of the Einsatzgruppen, Oh lendorf, These reports in no way supported or promoted the carrying-out of executions as per Hitler's orders.

In particular, no connection can be proved between these report and the carrying-out of the Hitler-orders. This was not possible, alone for the reason that these reports were made only after the aforementioned events had taken place. The reports, therefore, cannot have any bearing on the carrying-cut of the aforementioned measures. the defendant is blamed by the Prosecution is just a summary of Kommando reports. In regard to the executive powers of the Kommandos, Seibert neither had the right, nor was it his task, to make any further enquiries, to check on matters or to pass decisions. It is therefore incomprehensible how the Prosecution proposes to deduce from the contents of the two documents Seibert's responsibility for the events mentioned in the reports. davit by Generaloberst Halder, formerly Chief of Staff of the Army, submitted by me. In this affidavit, Halder pointed out that in putting his name to a report, the undersigning staff officer does not assume responsibility, for the acts referred to therein, but only for the correct rendering of the report.

In view of the fact that Seibert was a "Referent III", viz. an intelligence officer and reporter - I wish to mention this fact because it was under discussions during his interrogation - it is not possible to connect him with the collection and realization of the objects taken from persons selected for execution, The Prosecution has not been able to present any incriminating evidence against the defendant in connection thereto. The Prosecution probably was laboring under a misapprehension because it cannot possibly have been one of Seibert's function to have dealt with confiscated objects. had been formed at the order of the 11th Army cannot, in any way, be con nected with the executions carried out by the Einsatz and Sender Kommandos, These companies had nothing whatever to do with executions carried out on the basis of the Fuehrer-order.

These companies had been quartered in ondangered villages, as a protection against raids by partisans; that was their only function, as shown by the documents presented by the Prosecution itself,

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Gawlik, shall we suspend now, and, Dr. Link, you will be ready to follow Dr. Gawlik?

DR. LINK: Yes, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, the Tribunal will be in recess until 1:45.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal will be in recess until 1345 hours.

(Noon recess taken, to 1345 hours 10 February 1948.)

(The hearing reconvened at 1345 hours, 10 Feb 1948)

THE MARSHAL; The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. GAWLIK: I shall continue on page 32; supervised the military training of the Group been proved. With regard to this question the Defendant Seibert stated that he had carried out one or two driving manoevures with the drivers in Dueben, shortly before the departure of the Einsatzgruppe and that he had nothing to do with this any more after the arrival at the point of departure of the Einsatzgruppe in the East. Moreover, it is to be pointed out, that there is no proof whatever that the Defendant Seibert had participated in the screening of Communists or other persons in Russian Prisoner of War Camps. This is proved not only by his own affidavit, but also the statements made in direct and cross-examination through the Prosecution leave no doubt, that Seibert has never been implicated nor that he had any knowledge of those cases of screening during his stay with the Einsatzgruppe D. During cross-Examination Seibert testified convincingly to his affidavit.

"I told Mr. Wartenberg at the time clearly that I cannot give any detail, and I do not know at the moment whether this general knowledge was based on an order which I read or whether I heard it through conversation. I do not know exactly." order from the Army to the Einsatzgruppe for the execution of hostages. He merely informed the Einsatzgruppe of a remark made by the General von Schobert, who was dissatisfied with the situation in the army area and had therefore made the remark, that he had ordered or was going to order the taking of hostages and that he would have them shot, if anything happened. But it was not the case of transmitting an order, ashas been stated convincingly by the Defendant Seibert in cross-examination by the Prosecution.

in addition, even the absence of Ohlendorf and on his own initiative, issued the necessary orders for the murder and mistreatment of Russian citizens, the Prosecution has not even attempted to submit any evidence. had never been carried out by instruction or order of the Defendant Seibert, The activity of the Defendant Seibert in the staff of Einsatzgruppe D, which I have analyzed in detail, did in not way support the carrying out of executions either.

As for question 3: ordered the execution of Jews, Gypsies and Communist functionaries, Seibert was not present at the meeting in Pretsch, where Gruppenfuehrer Streckenbach informed the Chiefs of the Einsatzgruppen and the Chiefs of the Einsatz- and Sonder-Kommandos, who were present, of the Fuehrer order, because his sphere of activity in the Staff of the Einsatzgruppe D had nothing to do with the ordered executions, For this reason and I want to stress it particularly, he was not even invited to take part, when the order was issued. He only heard of this order, as he explained convincingly on the witness stand, on the journey to the Einsatz area. as a criminal participation in carrying out the order. First of all, it would have to be proved, that Seibert knew of the respective executions, before these measures had been carried out. carried out, because the executions, as I have explained in detail, did not belong to his sphere of activity. He can only have hoard afterwards of the respective executions through the incoming reports of the Einsatz- and special Kommandos.

Besides, even knowledge before the carrying out of the respective executions would not be sufficient to warrant a conviction of Seibert. This opinion is generally acknowledged by the literature of criminal law and jurisdiction. I refer in this matter to the expositions of Wharton in his publication, which I have mentioned already, Criminal Law, Volume II, Page 1236, Par. 734. It is stated there:

"The knowledge that a crime is being or is about to be committed cannot be said to constitute one accomplice." power and the opportunity to prohibit the carrying out of the order or to halt it, and that he criminally neglected to do so. This proof had not been brought by the Prosecution. Quite to the contrary, there can be no doubt in view of the submitted evidence, that Seibert Could not prevent the carrying out of this order in the course of his reporting duties, and that neither his position within the Einsatzgruppe nor his rank gave him the necessary power or authority to do so. one of Hitler's orders, the execution of which was supervised by the men, Himmler and Heydrich, who were among the most powerful people in Germany? question. But if that question remains unanswered, then it cannot be stated either that Seibert had the power and the chance to prevent the execution of the order issued by Hitler. In conclusion the above may be summed up as follows:

1. It has not been proved that Seibert knew in advance of measures to be carried out.

2. Seibert had neither the authority nor the chance to prevent these executions from being carried out or to halt them. Nor can, for the same reasons, a responsibility of Seibert be deduced from the fact that he failed to prevent the carrying out of the executions.

recognized as proved that Seibert took part in any of the crimes of which he is accused by the prosecution, it would be unjustified to find him guilty: for Seibert acted on orders. Here, I am refering to my general arguments in so far as they deal with the fact that, according to general principles of international law, a person having acted on higher orders cannot be found guilty. In any case, however a considerable mitigation of punishment would he justified.

Within Einsatzgruppe D. Seibert did not hold a position of command. He was a subordinate of the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe who alone was responsible for the actions of the whole Group. including the actions of the Staff of the Einsatzgruppe, and whose orders Seibert was bound. to obey. Seibert could not fell any independent decisions. In particular, he had no authority to make decisions with regard to executive measures. Seibert, while on the witness stand, declared credibly and convincingly that, according to his inner conviction, he thought the Fuehrer's order to be wrong. (Records: page 2551 English, page 2602 German). In the course of the subsequent interrogation, Seibert reaffirmed his attitude towards the Fuehrer's order and declared that be would not have carried out an order, if conveyed to his through military channels, to shoot two persons only because they were Jews (Records: page 2725 German). furthermore, he has stated that, as an officer, he would not have been bound by duty to obey such an order. Under Count 3) of the indictment the prosecution has asked to find Seibert guilty of membership in the A. the SD and B. the SS, organizations which were found criminal by the verdict of the International Military Tribunal.

First of all I shall deal with Membership in the SD. The defendant Seibert was a full-time employee of Office III (SD) of the Reich Main Security Office. But that fact alone does not justify a verdict of guilty because of membership in an organization which has been found criminal by the verdict of the IMT. The IMT has expressly stated:

"The mere membership is not sufficient for a person to be affected the these findings." (Records: Page 16503 German). that the fact that a group of persons has been declared a criminal organization must not result in wholesale convictions of its members. (Records: page 16503 German transcript) But if the mere membership were found sufficient for a verdict of guilty, then the result would be mass convictions.

DR. GAWLIK: I shall interpolate something here. I unfortunately find that outside in the denazification boards in the British as well as in the American Zones, mass convictions do happen of members contrary to these expressed statements by the IMT - mass punishment merely on the basis of the membership in a circle of people generally declared to be criminal.

organizations may be summed up as follows: Individual members may only be found guilty of membership in criminal organizations when the following conditions have been fulfilled:

1. The member must have supported the criminal aims of the organization in co-operation with the other members, because, according to the IMT verdict, a criminal organization is similar to a group of criminal conspirators (Records: page 16503, German transcript):

"In both cases, the co-operation for criminal purposes is the essential factor."

2. The member must have been cognizant of the criminal aims or actions of the organization. That also can be unequivocally concluded from the IMT verdict. According to the IMT verdict, those members who had no knowledge of the criminal aims or actions of the organization do not belong to the condemned group of persons. This limitation rests on the principle, expressly recognized by the IMT, that the criminal guilt be a personal one. The IMT has recognized this principle of personal guilt as one of the most important principles of criminal law. (Records: page 16503, German).

3. The membership must be voluntary, for, according to the IMT verdict, all those members are expressly excluded from the group of persons declared criminal I refer in particular to the statements of the Chief Prosecutor of the USA, Justice Jackson, and to the statements of the British Prosecutor, Sir David MaxwellFyfe, in the session of 28 February 1946.

Among other things Jackson has stated:

"Organizations with criminal aims are regarded everywhere as criminal conspiracies in keeping with their character, and their criminal character is viewed according to the principles of their conspiracy."1
1) Page 400 of the official text "The Trial against the Chief War Criminals before the IMT", Volume 8
Thus the following result may be obtained:

The fact of more membership does not suffice for conviction. The member must in addition have fulfilled the prerequisites of the conspiracy, and indeed a conspiracy to commit the crimes designated by the IMT in the sense of Section 6 of the Statute. facts of the conspiracy. the following must be differentiated:

1.) his activity in Group D of Office (Amt) III, 2.) his activity as Chief III in the Einsatzgruppe, With respect to 1): (The activity of this Group D of Office III)

a) The activity of Seibert as Group Leader III in the sphere-oflife work was concentrated on the Sector Economy. and of the Party in Economy and to work the result of these findings into reports. State and of the Party in question, to show up possible deficiencies. In the opinion of the IMT it was established that the SD (Office III) pursued tasks and aims, which are war crimes or crimes against humanity according to Section 6 of the Statute. a judging of this sort with respect to Amt III (SD) will not have a support in history. SD in the reasons for the verdice were not carried out by the SD. I have demonstrated this in detail in my final plea before the IMT. As a matter of fact the very evidence in the proceedings has shown that the organization Office was merely an intelligence service. the purpose of which was to investigate the frame of mind (Morals) of the people toward measures of the State and of the Party, and to forward the results of this work to the authoritative offices.

for example, as is set down in the judgment of the IMT, to shoot hostages, to arrest relatives within the blood kinship, to carry our the "Nacht und Nebelerlass" (Night and Fog Decree), "Kugelerlass" (The Bullet Decree), and the Kommando orders, to commit any given atrocities and murders in concentration camps and to put through the slave-labor program of the German Reich, In fact this very Court will know, for example, from the proceedings against Pohl and others, that other main offices bore the responsibility for the conditions in the concentration camps, and that one cannot ascribe responsibility to Office III for the latter. The findings may be presupposed before this Tribunal to be a fact known to the court. ever be regarded as a support of any criminal tasks in the sense of Article 6 of the Statute. The presiding judge of this Tribunal has declared this activity as legal in the course of this Trial (Record p. 2521 German). commission of war crimes or of crimes against humanity by being employed in Office III (SD), For that reason already the first premise is lacking, for the punishment of Seibert for belonging to a criminal organization because of this activity. justify a conviction of this kind, are also lacking.

b) Since the SD (Amt III) Was not party to a conspiracy for the commission of war crimes and crimes against humanity, article 6 of the statutes, the knowledge that Amt III was pursuing such aims does not obtain. ion of Seibert because of membership in the SD as a criminal organization is lacking.

with the Einsatzgruppe had knowledge of the execution of the Hitler Order.

The Einsatzgruppen were not an integral part of the SD. They were units of a specific kind. That they did not belong to Office III is demonstrable in particular from the following facts:

1. The formation of the Einsatzgruppen was not ordered by Office III.

2. They weren't under the command of Office III.

3. Not all members of the Einsatzgruppen were members of the SD.

Only a small percentage (approximately 3%) of the members of the Einsatzgruppen belonged to the SD.

The Police, the II A, page 1, submitted by the Prosecution. in the Document Books submitted, this classification regarding the composition of the Einsatzgruppen is not contained. entrusted to the Group Staff but to the parts of the Kommando charged with the executions. The carrying out of the Hitler order thus was not a task of Amt III (SD). Hence, the knowledge of the execution of the Hitler Order Decree was no know of the tasks and the activities of office III. For this reason having knowledge of the execution of the Hitler order cannot be looked upon as having knowledge of a criminal activity on the part of office III (SD).

c) The defendant Seibert was not a voluntary member of the SD during the war. In Seibert's case it is proved particularly clearly that this membership after 1 September 1939 could never have been a voluntary one. At that period, the defendant Seibert served with his army unit and was ordered back to the SD office III on 1 September 1939 without his knowledge and against his will subject to the National Defense Act. He therefore did not volunteer for service with the SD. His repented applications for a retransfer to the army were rejected as proved by the evidence mentioned heretofore. Seibert had already previously been a volunteer member of the SD. This opinion of the prosecution is not correct, however, The IMT verdict expressly rules that an activity before 1 September 1939 could on no account justify a conviction for membership in a criminal organization. The time before 1 September 1939 must therefore be eliminated when judging this case. The crucial point is, whether the membership after 1 September 1939 has been a voluntary one or whether it was subject to a lawful command.

Seibert's membership in the SD after 1 September 1939 was not voluntary. which would justify a conviction for membership in a criminal organization based on the fact that Seibert had been active in Office III.

Seibert's activity as Chief III in the Einsatzgruppe staff does not justify any such conviction either, because the Einsatzgruppen did not form parts of Office III (SD), as explained already.

Moreover, Seibert's activity as chief III in the staff of Einsatzgruppe D was not voluntary, but was subject to a lawful command, i.e. the German National Defense Act. Seibert had no means of evading this lawful command. He was drafted into this activity for the Einsatzgruppen staff.

verdict, whereby the members of the Security Police and the SD had no free choice with regard to their activities, and that a refusal to accept any particular post, especially for service in the occupied territories, could have meant severe punishment. (Page 16544 in the German transcript) member of the criminal circle of persons in the SS. have been expressly enumerated in the IMT verdict; they are the members of the General SS, of the Waffen SS, of the SS-Death-Head-Units and of the various Police Departments who had been members of the SS,(Page 16527 of the German transcript) as he has stated during his examination on the witness stand.

Document NO-2969, Exhibit. 162, Vol. III D, page 192,-proves that after 1 September 1939 and this is the date of importance, Seibert had only been a member of the SD.

As such he was a member of the SS-Special Formation SD. The SSSpecial Formation SD is not mentioned in the IMT verdict as being one of the parts of the SS which were declared criminal. from the SS which was declared criminal, because it was not an SS-unit, no part of an organization either, especially not a part of the SS or the SD. The Special Formation SD was in fact a mere enrollment of members of the State-Police, the Criminal Police, the SD and also that group of the Criminal Police Office V which was not declared criminal.

no special activity either, the members never met for a joint service, not had them any other joint meetings, There was no feeling of community in this circle of men. This group of men was not organized at all; e.g. it had no leaders. organization declared criminal by the judgment of the IMT, it would not be justified to pronounce Seibert guilty because of being a member of this group of persons. nor perform any common tasks, its aim cannot have been the commission of war crimes of crimes against humanity within the meaning of *rt. 6 of the statute, or, in other words, this group of persons could not participate in any conspiracy. consequence of his political attitude at that time. He never was a fanatic as the Prosecution istrying to make him out. It was not political fanaticism which prompted him to join the SD. after he had finished his studies, Seibert saw no chance of making a living as political economist. After his attempt to get a position as official in the armed forces had failed, he took advantage of the opportunity to work as a political economist for the SD then in the stage of organization, This was the reason why he joined the SD, during the whole time of his membership in the SD this attitude of Seiberts' did not change. He approached and handled all his assignments from a merely economic point of view. I refer to the numerous affidavits as proof for these facts. 1) Affidavit Borst, Doc. life, has never shown a fanatical attitude, not even towards people who had convictions different from his.1) In this connection it made no difference to him if the person concerned was Jewish.2) Thisis proved especially by the affidavit of Frau Bolte, a Jewess.3) Moreover, Seibert was a soldier. He was an officer of the German army. It would have been quite inconsistent with his soldierly mentality to concern himself with war crimes. 1) Affidavit Paul Seidel, Doc. THE PRESIDENT: Before you begin. Dr. Link, we would like to take inventory of the summations yet to be delivered. I am sorry that Dr. Gick and Dr. Koessl are not present here because they follow next in the order of the defendants. Nearly every defense counsel who has addressed the Tribunal has taken more time than that allotted, so because of that fact we have fallen behind somewhat iin the schedule perhaps we ought to have an evening session this evening in order to catch up.

Now, Dr. Belzer, will you be ready to follow Dr. Link?

DR. BELZER: Your Honor, certainly at the request of the Tribunal I will be ready at any time to present my final plea. For tactical reasons I would prefer personally if I could follow Dr. Ratz because in both pleas the same basic question of the emergency war status is treated, and the client of my colleague Ratz is first of all charged by the prosecution on the basis of this emergency war status, but, of course, I am ready to waive these personal reasons if the Tribunal wishes.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well.

DR. MINZEL: Your Honor, I am in a position to present the final plea for Strauch after Dr. Link if the Tribunal so desires.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. All right then, which two counsel will be ready to present their pleas this evening? You would be willing to do so, Dr. Fritz for the defendant Fendler, and who else would be ready? If we can have two this evening that will sort of even up the schedule. Anybody else ready?

(No response.)

TEE PRESIDENT: Well then, you will need to find Dr. Koessl.

DR. MAYER: Your Honor, I am prepared to present the final plea for the defendant Klingelhoefer.

THE PRESIDENT: Well then, I think that would take care of it. We will have Dr. Link now followed by counsel for Strauch, and then this evening Dr. Mayer for Klingelhoefer and Dr. Fritz for Fendler.

Is that agreed?

DR. MAYER: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. In the event that Dr. Mayer and Dr. Fritz should leave before we adjourn this afternoon, let it be understood that we will reconvene at seven-thirty this evening to hear those two pleas.

DR. MAYER: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, Doctor.

DR. LINK: May it please the Tribunal, two brief preliminary remarks. After the technical prerequisites now exist, I am now able to present the final plea for the defendant Ruehl. I am aware of the fact that it is not yet my turn actually. Secondly, I have to ask for the patience of the Tribunal. If my time is not quite sufficient I hope for the indulgence of the Tribunal because in the case of the defendant Ruehl the Tribunal does not need to work through a closing brief for the defendant Ruehl. I did not think it necessary to submit one. Finally I would like to say that up to this point I did not receive from the prosecution any closing statements against Ruehl either in German or in English, but I am certain that this Tribunal will give me the possibility of replying to it in the proper form as far as is necessary.

THE PRESIDENT: Proceed. DR. LINK: In my Opening Statement of 4 October 1947, I expressed my surprise at the fact that my client Felix RUEHL has been indicted in this case. In this respect I was able to refer to a large extent to the presentations made by the Prosecution, and to maintain that all the actual incidents on which the Prosecution seems to depend as a possible basis, do not permit holding the defendant Felix RUEHL responsible and sentencing him as requested by the Prosecution. I stressed the fact that, up to the serving of the indictment, Felix RUEHL never had the position which could and should have provided the Prosecution with a possible basis for its assertions.

Finally I expressed, my hope and confidence that it would he possible to prove these facts, if that would still be necessary at all, to the Court in the course of these proceedings in an absolutely clear and unmistakable manner. of which my client had only a very insignificant role for factual reasons, I am able to state complacently that all my expectations have come true. guilty of the crimes with which he is being charged, To be sure, such convictions will not always hold good as regards the judgment of the judge. It happens often enough, unfortunately, that the concientious counsel is subject to inner conflicts and backs the man whose interests he has to look after, only as a jurist.

That is not the case here. As a defendant in these proceedings, Felix RUEHL has not only been a client whom I had to defend to the best of my abilities, but he came closer also to me as a man because of his clean personal attitude. very outset and with all sincerity.

The defendant RUEHL was born in an industrial city in 1910. His father was a civil servant and wanted to impart to his son a good education and professional training. First Felix RUEHL attended and completed high school and then became a merchant and was thus removed from the middle-class surroundings of his parents home. His childhood and early adolescence fell into the troubled times which followed the First World War. The economic decline influenced the professional development of Felix RUEHL, After a three year's commercial apprenticeship and after a short stay in England which had to be discontinued for financial difficulties, he could not find employment in his profession, worked for some time as an unskilled industrial worker, became unemployed again, until, in the spring of 1931, he succeeded in getting a modest position with some public agency.

Like many other people in his age group whose lives were also early affected by economic need, he gave thought to the possibilities of contributing his share for the relief of the critical economic and social conditions which were especially blatant in his home town. At first he was an active member of the youth group of the trade union of the employees and remained a member from 1926 until it was dissolved in 1933. Besides, he advocated the goals of the Youth Association of Greater Germany which, without following the policies of any particular party, aimed at the moral and national education of the youth. The deliberations which were responsible for his getting into contact with the NSDAP have been explained by him to the Court on the witness stand. He became a member of the NSDAP not because he strove for radicalism in connection with the prevailing political situation, but because of the conviction that only a socialist Party would be able to basically improve conditions. The idea of class-conflict, as maintained by the Social Democratic Party, was alien to his middle-class education, and the anarchist slogans of the Communist Party were even more repellent. Neither then nor later, RUEHL took an active part in the development of the NSDAP, but, as young Party members used to do in the years prior to 1933, he joined the SA, and, at the end of 1932, was transferred to the SS. Since he was a member of an SS-company, he was chosen to become a police recruit by a committee which was in search of such recruits, but he himself had done nothing to that end. 1933, his future professional career was already cleanly outlined, RUHL, upon his own request, was assigned to the counter-intelligencedepartment and worked in this special field for a number of years until the fall of 1940. The affidavits submitted by me as RUEHL Exh. No. 8. 9, 7 and 27, disclose the nature of his tasks, his professional qualifications, and his personal attitude during these years. They prove the statements which RUEHL has made on the witness stand, namely that this activity did not emanate from National Socialism, but was an activity which is one of the main duties of the police of any civilized state.

The affidavit SCHMITZ of 21 January 1948 (Exh. No. 27) equally proves that the police officers who worked in the field of counterintelligence were a class by themselves, and that it would have been contrary to all custom to remove the individual officials from this special field of tasks. This was the situation in which RUEHL found himself in 1940. His career as a police official in the counter-intelligence service seemed to lie cleanly before him, That things nevertheless took another turn did not depend on him; this was due to decisions which were ordered with regard to him and to which he had to yield. the Berlin University as a candidate for the executive service. Harmless though these studies may appear to the outsider and harmless though they were themselves, RUEHL nevertheless was immediately aware that he was being removed from his previous professional career and that he had to expect employment in another branch of the police service later on. He therefore did all in his power to have this summons cancelled and began with his studies only when all his remonstrances had proved without success. It goes without saying that he could not foresee at that time that these studies would be interrupted and that he would be detailed to one of those units which played so crucial a role in this trial. On the contrary, the further events developed quite suddenly. In May 1941 all the candidates for the executive service studying in Berlin were told by the then chief of Amt I that, on the order of the chief of the security police, their studies had to be discontinued immediately. A few days later, the whole study group was collectively moved to Pretzsch and the people assembled there were finally distributed. Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos were being activated and the defendant was assigned to one of the latter. The history of the origin of the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos, which is pictured here only in a concise form, has been described in this trial repeatedly and in a manner not contested by the Prosecution, so that I can dispense with going more thoroughly into this matter.

That must be borne in mind is the fact that RUEHL, up to that date and even beyond it, was not prepared for the imminent commitment either indirectly or directly. The notions with which he approached the new task, which was unknown to him, were those of a police official trained on a peace-time basis who up to that time had performed his duties in the special police branch mentioned, in an objective and personally irreproachable manner and who lately had been working as a student for his further training. Prosecution seems to be of the opinion that, by reason of their previous political and professional development, all these defendants were predestined to play an essential part in the units which it termed extermination units. right from the beginning - as I think I have made clear. reluctantly - would have reconciled himself to his new task and there would have either himself committed any acts considered by you, Your Honors, as crimes, or if he would at least have held a position that had aided in, or permitted in any form, the committing of such acts, so that one night speak of a responsibility for acts committed by other persons. It will therefore be essential to make sure to what extent Felix RUEHL himself took part in the events which are the subject of this indictment, or what the position was which he held in his unit. attempt to incriminate my client. In my opening statement I claimed the prognosis of the Prosecution (Opening Statement page 59 English, page 35 German), according to which some of the defendants' direct participation in criminal acts might not he provable, for Felix RUEHL.

There has not appeared a thing in this trial which would decide against this supposition of the Prosecution, b within Einsatzgruppe D.

He was in the field with this unit up to the end of Sept. 1941, that is to say, for approximately 3 months. On 1 October 1941 he was recalled to the University of Berlin, just as were the other members of that group who, on higher orders, had had to interrupt their studies. This limitation in time has been unequivocally established in the course of this trial, among other things by the testimony on the witness stand of the co-defendant SCHULZ (p. 1056 English, p. 1069 German, dated 20 October 1947). In this I refer, above all, also to my RUEHL documents No. 23 and 24 (RUEHL Exh. No. 1 and 2). change during those 3 months but remained always the same - the Prosecution itself apparently is not sure. Already in my opening statement I pointed out that the indictment has mentioned RUEHL merely as an officer of that Special Kommando and also on its charts and maps has designated him as a mere member of that unit; but that, on the other hand, the Prosecution in its opening statement (page 24) appointed RUEHL deputy of the Kommando Chief who has died.

Concerning this the evidence has shown the following:

Already in his SS-home-unit, in 1932/33, RUEHL had been in charge of the administrative matters. Also later on, during his job as a police official in the counter-intelligence service, he was not concerned with tasks of the executive proper. The fact that he was selected to study jurisprudence offers a clue that in the opinion of his superiors he disposed of the mental equipment necessary for scholarly studies and that he was not chosen to be an executive official. It is therefore only a logical consequence that the co-defendant OHLENDORF as chief of Einsatzgruppe D made RUEHL economic and administrative officer within Kommando 10 b (Testimony OHLENDORF dated 14 October 1947, p.

606 English, p. 614 German). The field of activity connected with this position was the sane as in any peace-time or wartime unit of any country having military organizations.

It was clearly defined and extended to the administration of the agency both in personnel and economic respects, to housing. supplying and equipping its members. to do with the operations as such. Considering the absolute clarity of this range of tasks it is hardly necessary to go into fuller particulars in this connection. OHLENDORF as chief of the group, by the affidavits of a series of members of SK 10 b (Exh. No. 3, 4, 5, The above mentioned affidavits were made by witnesses who during those months in question had been continuously in official contact with RUEHL and never knew him in any capacity other than that of an administration officer.

It is also apparent from them that RUEHL was never introduced as Deputy of the Kommando-Leader or has put in an appearance as such nor that he has ever led a Teil-Kommando of that units Persterer did not have any deputy at all, - at least at the time when RUEHL was attached to the Kommando. Even in the case of a short absence of the chief, RUEHL's rank or seniority would not have entitled him to represent him, quite apart from the fact that no administrative officer, on principle, is ever appointed anywhere as deputy of the respective commander. Moreover,RUEHL was at that time Obersturmfuehrer (1st Lieutenant) and shared this rank with four other leaders in the unit, of whom at least two had the same, if not a higher seniority and would have been considered in the first place as entitled to present Persterer, in view of their status as sub-Kommando officers and Chiefs of an Executive-Department. Finally it must in particular be pointed out that the Kommando 10 b also had a Hauptsturmfuehrer (Captain) by the name of Finger, which fact would have solved the question of the deputy without difficulty, if it had become acute. (Compare in this connection the statements of RUEHL himself, transcript of the session on 18th December 1947, furthermore the Statement of Ohlendorf transcript of session on 14th and 16 October 1947.

It must be taken into consideration therefore: RUEHL was according to rank and seniority at the most-in the sense of the Prosecution-the 4th man. As far as his official position was concerned, he was out of the question as far as an independent responsible leadership of the Kommando or a part of same was concerned, even if only temporarily.

In his capacity as specialist I and II (Administration and Economics) he could not issue any directives to other Departments in particularly to the Department IV. As is disclosed by his statement in the witness stand he actually had never carried out or ordered interrogations, arrests or other executive measures.

has only the sworn statement of a certain Robert Borth (Doc. Book of the Prosecution No. 5 C, page 32 English, page 42 German, Prosecution Ex. Do. 232) The following can be Said with regard to this Document; an Austrian, in what capacity he had actually been attached to the Einsatzkommando 10b. He merely mentions that been "had been with the Einsatzkommando 10 b" during an undefined period of time.

All the moreas, as he himself speaks only of an absence of Persterer of 2 to 3 days at a time. affidavit and its author, which deprive the Document completely of its already small probative value. at the time when Ruehl took the stand. Ruehl was charged, with the statement of Barth made for the prosecution that Ruehl had been the chief of Advance which had been sent from Czernowitz to Chotin and allegedly carried out liquidations on a considerable scale (transcript of session on 19th December 1947, page 4455 English, page 4541 German) that Ruehl and his people had chased the Jews, whom they had driven together in Chotin, through the ruins and had shot at them (page 4457 English, page 4542 German). Furthermore Ruehl allegedly gave Robert Barth - also according to the cross examination carried out by the Prosecution-orders concerning the retransfer of the Jews in Mogilow-Podolsk, which will be discussed in detail later on (transcript of session on 19th December 1947, page 4478 English, page 4563 German). Ruehl in the witness stand had insisted that he has never been in Chotin, nor that he had ever led a Vorkommando to this place. He just as clearly contradicted the alleged statements of Barth with, regard to his.

part in the case of that re-transfer.

In spite of this, the Prosecution refrained from refreshing Ruehl's memory by introducing the sworn affidavit of Barth or putting him ion the stand. It confined itself merely to submitting that Exhibit No. 232 in the rebuttal (Doc. Book 5 D. page 32 English, page 43 German) which does not contain any of the points brought out during the cross-examination. I have no reason to doubt that the Prosecution is fully aware of the contradictions between the statements of Ruehl and the allegations of Barth. If, in spite of this, the prosecution has made no use of its incriminating material, I can only draw the conclusion that Barth has revoked these allegations, so important for the Prosecution, or that they did not seem to be of any use for other reasons. But then, apart, from any other things Barth cannot lay claim to any credibility with Exh. No. 232. of the Kommando, as well as the repeated and express testimony of the chief of Einsatzgruppe D - Ohlendorf - contradict his statement. established evidence the position and activity of Ruehl In SK 10b. itself has set up for the question of responsibility of the sphere of persons against which it prefers charges. Ruehl held neither "a responsible position nor a post of command", nor did he possess "by virtue of his position the powers to order executions", nor were his rank and his position of such a nature that they included the power and duty to exercise control over the subordinates, (Page 58 English, page 36 German Opening Statement) be explained by his position - Ruehl could have been connected with any of the events With which the Prosecution charges the unit as such.

Above all one might think that in view of the relatively small numerical strength of the unit, Kommando members, who according to their position and sphere of duty had nothing to do with executive tasks, also gained knowledge of this sort of events and became somehow tied up with them.

These theoretical reflections are confronted by the following facts; departments were under the personal command of the Kommando Chief. The latter issued the orders in person, and reports were made to him personally. There was neither a common file keeping between administration and the executive branch nor did the Kommando maintain a business office. In particular, Department IV, which was engaged in executive measures, worked wholly independently and even in rooms separated from the rest of the Kommando, so that only those who were working there in the immediate place had an insight into these tasks. Moreover, it must be added, that the Kommando was on the advance as long as Ruehl was a member, and that thus it was split up into individual groups, which established different local headquarters independently. Thereby it became more than ever impossible for a Kommando member to get a survey of events with which he was not occupied in line of duty.

THE PRESIDENT: It isn't necessary that you read those, Dr. Link.

DR. LINK: Yes, Your Honor.

Felix Ruehl. and suddenly to the SK 10b, and with what conceptions he approached the tasks which awaited him there. At first it was not even clear whether the marshalling of the most different kind of units, which pointed to use in battle, would turn to the West or to the East. When after the outbreak of the War with the Soviet Union there was no longer any doubt on this point, the whole group was sent off to the (Einsatz) the assignment with an address by the chief of the Sipo and of the SD in the customary military manner, without any special instructions.

Ruehl has neither taken part in the conversation with Gruppenfuehrer Streckenbach, which has several times been mentioned in this trial, nor did he learn about it. Nor did his unit commander instruct him in the sense of the presentation of charges. He explained the tasks merely to the effect, that certain actions of the enemy were to be prosecuted and punished with the application of the severest standards. Neither on this occasion nor subsequently was there any talk of liquidating individually guiltless persons without trial because of their race, their political convictions or similar reasons. (Compare Record of Session page 4373/77 English, page 4456/59 German and page 4382/85 English, page 4464/66 German.) drawn appropriate conclusions as to a general execution decree, at least through the knowledge of such events, even if gained only from hearsay, and whether he could not have helped but do so. which the Prosecution considers itself justified to reproach all those in whose case the evidence is negative in its opinion. What he heard in a roundabout way and by chance from his comrades he stated frankly.

This concerns three executions. In one case it was a measure against civilians who had perpetrated a treacherous firing-attack on Roumanian troops and members of the Kommando in Czernovitz. This measure was carried through upon orders by the Roumanian General in authority on Roumanian sovereign territory as far as Ruehl can remember, some 12 - 15 persons were said to have been shot on the basis of drumhead court-martial. This took place after many more suspects had been investigated and the guilty ones identified in due course. In another instance German fliers having made forced landings and got into Russian captivity, when forcibly dragged out of the prison by the population, abused and finally beaten to death in a bestial manner.

Also here, detailed investigations were made and the persons found guilty were shot in the end. about a third execution, by which at still another location agents and saboteurs were said to have been punished.

individual criminal acts, which everywhere are characterized as such. It is clear that from a knowledge of these actions, gained from hearsay, no conclusion of a general order for the execution of Jews, gypsies and communists could be drawn. part which Ruehl played, or could have played, during the three months of his membership in Sonderkommando 10b, and also his position and his activities, his considerations and possibilities without finding, a responsibility of his in the sense of the indictment. Prosecution has tried to connect with Ruehl, are commented upon below, this must not be misconstrued. It is done upon the risk of exposing Ruehl to the reproach by the Tribunal, why he should deal with matters which are no concern of his, as has already happened once during his hearing if on the stand. Since he has been accused and had to see this trial through, he also wants as I already emphasized in my opening statement, to contribute his part which necessarily is very modest - to the solution of the various contradictions and to the establishment of the plain truth by the Tribunal. He therefore insists on maintaining this line, already followed during the examination on the witness stand, also in these concluding statements.

THE TRIBUNAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. FICHT: Representing Defense Counsel Ulmer. Your Honors, I would like the Defendant Six to be excused tomorrow afternoon so that he cah confer with his counsel for a reply to a closing brief, and I have a similar request to make, representing Defense Counsel Dr. Hoffman, to the effect that the Defendant Nosske should be excused this evening, because he had arranged for a conference with him this evening.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant Nosske will be excused from attendance in Court this evening and the Defendant Six will be excused from attendance in court tomorrow afternoon.

DR. LINK (ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENDANT RUEHL): In detail I would like to make the following statement:

PERSTERER's report to Army Group South, (Document Book II-D English, page 45, German page 48, Prosecution Exhibit 92) in the first place admits of certain doubts in the truth of the facts reported in it. was bound to report immediately to the latter. It is therefore surprising that Sturmbannfuehrer PERSTERER, without any official reason, should make such a report to the distant Army Group South, yet neglect this very same duty towards his superior. (Compare letters of 11 July 1941 and 14 July 1941, with the statements from the witness box of the Defendant Ohlendorf on 9 October 1947.) of the Einsatzgruppe, in contrast to the far distant Army Group, would have found out the untruth of this report, in other words, PERSTERER wanted to feign a particular activity of his unit. in Czernowitz at all, because he only arrived there in the evening of the 9 or 10 July.

RUEHL-Exh. # 3, 4 and 6 and then the statement of Ruhl. PERSTERER's report was incorrect.

RUEHL for reasons of time. had been sent to Chotin. On 11 July this report was supplemented to the effect that the Teilkommando had been forced to withdraw again by the Russian occupation. The alleged measures of that Teilkommando, reported on 14 July, cannot be connected with RUEHL according to the time of their taking place, because he only arrived in Czernovitz after the dispatch of that Group and did not leave this town during the period in question. That is shown in Ruehl Exh. 3, 4, and 6. RUEHL himself testified under oath that he never was in Chotin and never gained knowledge of alleged actions on the part of a Teilkommando sent there. Einsatzgruppe gave instructions to the Kommando 10 b to influence Roumanian authorities to take action in regard to the Jewish problem. OHLENDORF himself, who gave this order, expressed himself in detail on this subject in the witness stand. This concerns an order, which the Sturmbannfuehrer PERSTERER received personally and orally on the occasion of an inspection. It is obvious that in the case of RUEHL all assumptions are lacking for his participating in the execution of this order. During his interrogation he even denied expressly the more knowledge of it. No. 90 states in regard to the activity of the Kommando 10 b in the area of Czernowitz that up to then 16 persons out of 1200 arrested Jews arrested Communist functionaries had been shot. In this connection, one is struck by the following facts: ings by the Kommando in Czernovitz. On the other hand, the report Of 14 July states expressly that Kommando 10b was scheduled to complete its assignments in Czernovitz in 3 - 5 days. Afterwards, the Kommando was to stay there, ready to join the advancing Army Corps. These assignments, however, as is evident from the reports of 11 and 14. July, did not consist in the liquidation of Jaws in Czernovitz. The contrary is the case. As shown by the statement of the Defendant OHLENDORF in the witness box, the commander of Kommando 10b was explicitly prohibited to carry out such a measure in territory under Rumanian sovereignty. That Czernovitz was regarded as territory under Rumania sovereignty is demonstrated conclusively by the report of 11 July which states that:

"The Rumanians have taken over the civil administra tion in Czernovitz", as well as from the report of 14 July stating:

"the Rumanians declare Northern Bukovina as territ ory under Rumanian sovereignty."

Consequently, the commander of Kommando 10b would have been acting in contravention to the explicit instructions of his direct superior, the chief of the Einsatzgruppe D, if he had taken part with his Kommando in the liquidation of the Jews in Czernovitz. As the Defendant OHLENDORF stated in the witness box during a tour of inspection in Czernovitz he found the commander of Kommando 10b in a state of great excitement, because the Rumanians had carried out liquidations in an unimaginable and unspeakable manner. PERSTERER had launched a most vigorous protest against these liquidations and, by this very protest, again rejected the invitation of the Rumanians to participate in liquidations. As a matter of fact, neither the Defendant RUEHL nor the signers of the affidavits HANSEN, KAUFMANN, NISPEL and WERNER had any knowledge of liquidations of Jews in Czernovitz. Consequently, the passage in the report of 1 August 1941 "in Czernovitz, 658 out of an approximate total with the Rumanian Police" was probably a deliberate misstatement inasmuch as the shootings were carried out by the Rumanians alone.

These comments, too, are made only for clarification, having regard to the documents presented in the course of this trial. The fact that RUEHL himself had been informed Court No. II, Case No. IX.

of only 3 executions which, however, were carried out, not for political or racial reasons, but as punishment for criminal acts and after due investigations had been made in each case, has bean mentioned by me in another context before. inasmuch as they concern that retransfer of Jews. I am going to demonstrate that there, too, RUEHL held not commanding function, as the Prosecution assumed, but was involved in that matter only in part and incidentally owing to purely external circumstances unrelated to the events themselves. several documents presented by the Prosecution itself; furthermore from statements of the Defendant OHLENDORF in the witness box, from the interrogation of the witness HARSCH and, finally from the exhaustive account which RUEHL gave as witness and which served as supplement and commentary to his affidavit presented in court by the Prosecution.

According to all that, what actually took place was this;

the Kommando. Consequently RUEHL could not possibly took a marching column, consisting, as it appeared, for the most part of Jews and escorted by Rumanian soldiers. There were men, woman and children in it, obviously a whole population on the trek; it was a proper procession of misery. On arrival in Mogilev-Podolsk, RUEHL talked with the leader of the local unit about his observations and learned that this procession consisted of Jews who had been compelled by the Rumanians to leave their homes in territory under Rumanian sovereignty to be shifted to German-held territory. RUEHL learned furthermore that a large number of these Jews, expelled by the Rumanians and utterly destitute were already in the German-held Mogilev area. According to what the local leader told, these Jews were without shelter, food and medical attention and, therefore, in a desperate plight. Their presence there also constituted a danger for the command of the German Wehrmacht, as they resorted to theft and looting and, moreover, were a potential source of epidemics. Finally, RUEHL also learned that the local leader had already notified the commander and endeavoured to prevent a further influx of Jews from the Rumanian sphere of sovereignty and interests. in Mogilev-Podolsk are borne out by Prosecution Exhibit No. 39 which mentions the prevention of an influx of Jews into the German sphere of interests. cumstances was there an occasion or even only a possibility for RUEHL to take any action. find out how the misleading statement of RUEHL in the affidavit taken Court No. II, Case No. IX.

down by Mr. WARTENBERG came to be made (Prosecution Exhibit No. 169) subsection 3. RUEHL himself never attempted to concentrate the Jews near Mogilev-Podolsk in order to return them as a body. came ever more untenable, Sturmbannfuehrer PERSTERER, in his capacity as Kommando leader, took occasion to report to Group Leader OHLENDORF and to ask for his orders. PERSTERER ordered RUEHL to accompany him on this trip and to bring the Group Leader's decision back to Mogilev, as PERSTERER himself would not return there immediately. OHLENDORF decided that the Rumanian Jews were to be sent back to their homes across the Dnjestr, RUEHL transmitted the Group Leader's order to the local leader and that was the end of his part as courier which he had had in this matter.

(Compare also deposition OHLENDORF Session Record.) thwarted by the stubborn resistance of the Rumanians. It turned out to be necessary to inform the Group Leader of the New development, and to ask for his further orders. It was only natural that RUEHL who already had accompanied PERSTERER on his trip to OHLENDORF once before should be charged with the job, the more so as PERSTERER had not returned yet and the leader of the sub-unit stationed in Mogilev was bound in his station. which was still in German hands. As this bridge was in the area of the neighboring Kommando 12 under NOSSKE, NOSSKE was instructed directly by OHLENDORF to take charge of that transport. OHLENDORF, when on the witness stand, remembered all these events in detail and confirmed that RUEHL acted as a mere messenger transmitting that order. given to anybody and that from the interpolation of RUEHL neither an authority of command with respect to the leader of the Teilkommando nor the capacity of deputy with respect to the leader of the Commando could be inferred. The locally competent leader had to see to it that also Court No. II, Case No. IX.

this second order was carried out. That is why RUEHL paid no attention to the moving of the Jews and did not accompany, indeed not even see, the column when it left. territory was effected smoothly and that nothing happened to them, has been unequivocally confirmed apart from NOSSKE's testimony by the witness HARSCH who was in charge of that bridge at that time. hibits No. 3 to 6 got to know of the shootings. Indeed, the Jews themselves did not consider their removal as a coercive measure; they expressed their joy and gratitude on being allowed to return home by enthusiastically cheering Adolf HITLER. had passed on their way back, Jews kept passing the bridge individually or in small groups, on their own volition and without escort. Upon explicit questions posed during the cross-examination, the witness stated that those Jews were not in flight and that at that time he had not heard of any executions or coercive measures, but, had there been any, he should have got to know of them. phase of that action, it is evident that he cannot give any detailed data on the number of Jews that were affected by it. He can only recall that altogether 12 - 15,000 of homeless Jews were mentioned. Mogilev, as ordered by OHLENDORF, with two Reports of Events of 26 and 29 august 1941, introduced as Exhibits No. 154 and 158, The first report mentions 4,000 Jews as part of the population of Mogilev, and another 7,000 who had been shipped to that region by the time the Roumanians took over the administration from the Germans. Finally, it mentions a transport of about 6,000 Jews who, in spite of considerable protest by the Roumanian in charge of the bridge, were transferred to the other side of the river Dniestr. Accordingly, the total number of Court No. II, Case No. IX.

Jaws who were not natives of the region around Mogilev amounted to 13,000. Thus it is possible that that report refers to the events in which RUEHL took part as transmitter of orders. Of the other measures described in Document Exhibit No. 154 (concentration of the Jews in a ghetto and three camps respectively, their assignment for work clearing the town of the rubble and collecting the harvest) RUEHL could have no knowledge, as he arrived there only at a later date. Anyway, the prosecution has never claimed that such measures would have been war crimes or crimes against humanity. mentioned transport of Jews from the region of Mogilev, at the time the Sonderkommando 10 b was stationed there, and the contents of the report of 29 August 1941 (prosecution Exhibit No. 58). In the first place, so much time elapsed between this report and this actual transport of Jews which took place, according to the statements of all witnesses already about the middle of the month, that the report cannot possibly refer to it. remotely with the figures which RUEHL learned in Mogilev. If 1265 Jaws in excess thereof had been shot in the area of SK 10 b, the members of the commando most certainly would have received information about such a drastic measure at least afterwards. I have already stressed the fact that this was not the case, and, in this respect, I have referred to the RUEHL Exh. No. 3, 4, 5, 6 and to the testimony of OHLENDORF. The credibility of the statements as made by RUEHL is fully confirmed, particularly by the testimony of the witness HARSCH who was interrogated while completely unprepared. of Svanzia played a part in the district of the Sonderkommando 10 b. that the report which is the basis of Pros. where the group had been stationed before. In effect, the Einsatzgruppe D had long left the district of Mogilev on 29 august 1941, and at that date was already stationed in Ananjev. In the beginning, the prosecution seems to have been of this opinion also, since, at first, this exhibit No. 58 had not been submitted as an incriminating document. But all these meditations are irrelevant as far as the defendant RUEHL is concerned. His share in that evacuation action consisted in the transmission of two orders by the group chief to the competent local leader of the Teilkommando. This did not have anything to do with his general official tasks, nor can any conclusion be drawn from it, in the specific case, as to even a single instance of his deputizing for the Kommando leader or as to any authority of command over the leader of the Teilkommando. the result could not be a different one. This would at least have to be conceded from RUEHL's point of view, who did not perceive the events, which were hardly objectionable in themselves, in their further course. The idea of the indictment surmising that those Jews had been, evidently driven to death as a result of the evacuation, is without any real foundation and, according to the evidence, contradicts the very opinion of the persons who were directly affected by that action. endeavored to treat and elucidate the case of my client RUEHL from all conceivable angles. because of his being a member of an Einsatzkommando, was connected with plans and enterprises for the commission of crimes and/or took a consenting part therein.

This kind of argumentation has already been rejected by the Military Tribunal II in the Pohl-verdict in the case of defendants to whom it believed to be justified in imputing the cognizance and knowledge of crimes committed by others. This Tribunal has emphasized that the expression "to be connected with a crime" signifies more than a mere knowledge or working together in the same building and at the same time with the principle and accessory in the same group or organization. For the assumption of an "assenting participation" the element of positive action is required, exceeding a mere "not objecting". of such considerations were missing already at that time for a variety of reasons, i.e. as regards knowledge of plans and actions to be considered criminal. not made himself liable to punishment neither as principal nor as accessory nor in any other form of participation within the provision of law on which this Trial is based. dictment. member, after 1 September 1939, of organizations which have been declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal, i.e.;

2.) Of the Office IV of the RSHA. SS, the following particulars must be of importance: SA to the SS quite spontaneously. On being taken over into the police service on 1 October 1935 he ceased to be an active member of the general SS and from that date on he has done no duty in any SS unit either in Luckenwalde, Berlin or any other place.

Purely formally he continued to be a member of the SS till 1935 or 1936, but that, too, came to an end, when Ruehl was transferred to the RSHA and enrolled in the SS-Special Formation SD. The particular role of this special formation has been explained several times during the presentation of the evidence and especially in the course of the concluding statements. In this connection I refer in particular to the fundamental statements in the Ohlendorf plea. Ruehl himself spoke at great length on this matter when he was in the witness box. In this connection it has been explained, on the basis of his personal documents presented by the prosecution, how and why the SS grades conferred on him were nothing but the logical outcome of the perodical automatic promotions in the service. The fact that Ruehl was a member of the general SS before the beginning of his official career did not have any influence on this. This could be explained by the fact that Ruehl, when he joined the police service, was even demoted because the rank he had then reached in the general SS was higher than the comparative rank (Angleichung Dienstgrad) prescribed for his initial position as an official. my client's membership in the SS, an organization declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal, is "no" at any rate for the period after 1 September 1939. opposite view, then it would have to be checked -- according to the meaning of the IMT verdict and the subsequent decisions of the Military Tribunals, particularly the Pohl verdict, - whether the defendant Ruehl, knowing the criminal aims, consciously collaborated.

This proof, which would have to be brought by the prosecution, could not consist of a mere reference to the fact that Ruehl was a member of an Einsatzkommando. The Einsatzgruppen and Kommandos, as proven by their history of origin, their organizational form, and their assignments, had nothing to do with the SS. They were assigned to the units of the Wehrmacht as mobile military units for police tasks. place the knowledge of the actions which the IMT took as a basis when it declared the SS as criminal. The defendant Ruehl, moreover, worked in Office I of the RSHA from 1 September 1940 until August 1943, in an office which does not fall within the group which has been declared criminal, and during the time of his assignment in Russia, when he was a leader in administrative and economic fields, he fulfilled only the tasks which corresponded to his formal membership in Office I of the RSHA. the meaning of the judgment of the IMT, we must finally investigate whether Ruehl, on 1 September 1939, still was a voluntary member of this organization. We would have to find that the contrary was the case for the following reasons: later, Ruehl took steps for his release for service in the army; supreme authorities finally rejected this petition in both cases. Exhausting all the means at his disposal, Ruehl, moreover, had opposed his assignment to service in the higher ranks and to the compulsory studies which were combined with this assignment, because, if he was not permitted to serve as a soldier, than at least he did not want to be separated from his professional activities in counter-intelligenge.

But this was futile also. His special formation had no fields of work of its own, and if he had renounced the rank which forced him to don the uniform of the SS, this would have meant that he would have been compelled to leave the Security Police And I think that it has been proven to the full satisfaction of the Court in the course of these proceedings that this was not definitely possible, at least while the war lasted.

Ruehl's conviction for membership in the SS would therefore be impossible because of the fact that this membership was not a voluntary one since 1 September 1939. member in an organization which has been declared criminal because he allegedly was a member of Office IV of the RSHA. When questioned under oath, Ruehl has denied that this assertion of the Prosecution corresponds to the facts. cution has submitted not one document nor disclosed anything that would point at such a membership of Ruehl in the Office IV of the RSHA. During the cross-examination of Ruehl which went into details very much in other respects, the Prosecution did not probe any deeper into this question. This assertion has remained unproven therefore, nay, on the contrary, in consideration of Ruehl's statement under oath, it must be considered as refuted. not been guilty in the meaning of the indictment.

concerning Ruehl's personality. that nothing more but also no less would be proved in this case as regards my client, than that his attitude was the clean attitude of a man who did his duties there where he was asked to do them, duties moreover, which were neither dishonorable nor criminal. I believe that I have not been mistaken in this. during his interrogation in his defense, in particular during his cross-examination, will have imparted the conviction not only to myself that his statements are credible to their full extent. political career of my client, I have therefore taken particular pains to disclose his personal opinion as regards the problems which are the nucleus of these proceedings. tified to in a manner commanding respect by his political opponents already prior to 1933. he was a humane and tolerant official later on, an official of a class of police officers against whom no objections can be raised. Finally, the Ruehl Exhibits No. 12, 13 and 26 prove that he was also averse to terror and a policy of constraint when he was a superior, and that he was highly esteemed because of his personally and professionally correct attitude. voices of those to thom Ruehl gave advice and help when they were persecuted in the Third Reich for racial and political reasons.

In an absolutely fundamental manner, they disclose an attitude which is diametrically opposed to the principles and measures which are being judged here. They also prove that the forcible interruption of the studies of Law was not able to shake the basic attitude of Ruehl, neither as regards his ethics nor as concerns his character. proceedings, then it will be the question of why my client has been accused here. He has been the only administrative leader in an Einsatzkommando who has been brought into the limelight in this case. For all those months I could not get rid of the idea that this has been done because there prevailed the assumption - an erroneous assumption, by the way - that it would be impossible to find any other representative of Sonderkommando 10 b. Ruehl not guilty.

DR. GICK: Dr. Gick for the defendant Strauch.

THE PRESIDENT: Proceed.

DR. GICK: May it please Your Honors: have to make on behalf of my client - that I do not consider discussing once more those questions which will have to be decided upon before this Tribunal will be able to pass to individual cases, i.e. fundamental questions with which these trials are dealing. Even that part of each individual case which, according to the view of the defense, applies to all defendants alike, I shall mention only insofar as its importance with reference to my client can be clearly seen. I am convinced that this tribunal will give careful consideration to all those matters which have already been discussed in full by some of my fellow defense counsels, to whose statement I am herewith expecially referring myself, and which I am making my own, on behalf of my client, and also examine their part they have played in the case of my client and will pass judgment with all due consideration of these fundamental objections and protective assertions.

I must also declare: It is still my point of view that the defense of the defendant Strauch has been hampered by his state of health to such a degree that it must be called insufficient. However, one may judge his state of health the following facts will still remain to be considered;

1.) The defendant Dr. Strauch is suffering from epilectic attacks. Such an attack was also the cause of an injury to his health which prevented the defendant from being present in court.

2.) In connection with the state of health following such attacks, a condition of semi-consciousness often ensued which made it impossible for weeks on end to discuss with the defendant the problems with which this tribunal concerns itself, namely the court-proceedings and the line of defense. A great deal of that which I am able to state in favor of the defendant Strauch before this tribunal is solely due to my studies of files and documents. This cannot, however, take the place of personal knowledge of circumstances which the defendant must undoubtedly have but which he could only very incompletely convey to me.

3.) In spite of his illness the defendant always wanted to put in a personal appearance in Court as a witness on his own behalf. He had already started to inform me, according to regulations, of the facts which he would be able to state as a witness, when, about a month and a half before he was supposed to appear on the witness stand, all further information became impossible.

The way in which the witness had then to be questioned on the witness-stand cannot be called a regular examination. The hearing had to be improvised and some of the most important points, for instance that of a basic description of the personality of the defendant and his attitude to the Fuehrer-order which is all important for the subjective side of his actions, could not be gone into because of considerations due to the state of health of the defendant. However, in this trial in which it is made so difficult for the defendants to find witnesses and documents, apart from those which the Prosecution has collected, it is of the greatest importance to have a regular examination of the defendant on the witness-stand. According to my opinion those facts present such flaws in the proceeding that the discontinuation of the proceedings against the defendant Dr. Strauch would be justified until the condition of his health has improved enough to enable him to take part in the trials personally, to give full informations to his defense counsel and to make correct statements in his own cause. I am, therefore, herewith repeating my plea for discontinuation of the proceedings, and refer in addition to my new statement of 5 February 1948 and the attached affidavit of Herr Dr. Spengler, the defendant Strauch's roommate at the city hospital here. now state such evidence which can be found in favor of the defense under the afore-mentioned restricted possibilities of information, i.e. from the documentary material, the statement of evidence and the examination of the defendant which is hampered by the difficulties already described.

of the indictment.

With reference to Count I of the indictment, the defendant Dr. Strauch has been accused of crimes against humanity, with reference to Count II of the indictment he has been accused of war-crimes, and according to the prosecution it is obvious that the actions with shich my client has been charged are supposed to be offenses against both counts of the indictment at one and the same time. He specialization has either been actually made or attempted. documents presented by the prosecution against the defendant Dr. Strauch. the prosecution makes it clear that it is of great importance to find out at what time incidents have occurred which are mentioned in these reports and if, at that particular time, the defendant could have taken a responsible part in these incidents, taking into consideration his official position and place of residence at that particular time. criminal actions committed in two localities: of acts committed in Riga (Latvia) and Minsk (White Ruthenia). If it can be established without doubt for how long Dr. Strauch was stationed first in Riga and then in Minsk we shall be able to take this as basis for our judgment of possibilities referring to time of his participation in the acts committed in near the other of these areas. responsible information, stated that he arrived in Riga on 10 or 11 November 1941, that he was transferred to Minsk shortly after his arrival in Riga, but stayed on in Riga until his fractured arm has healed, that he had left only on 20 March 1942 and arrived in Minisk on 22 March 1942. 1. In her statement dated 4 November 1947 (Strauch document Book I English and German p. 1, Exhibit No. 1) Frau Luise Strauch confirms that he husband received his order of transfer on 5 November 1947 in Koenigsberg, but he did not leave for Riga until on 10 November 1941 because he had obtained a delay of his reporting for duty in Riga because of a fractured arm. Further she confirms that in Riga he broke his arm for the second time and came from Riga several times to visit her in the Reich, and told her that he had again been transferred to Minsk hat need not go there before his arm had been completely healed.

From 10 till 16 March 1942 she was once more together with her husband in Berlin on which occasion he told her that he would combine the moving to Minsk with a visit to his brother in Rositten on 21 March.

2. The Defendant Dr. Blume stated as witness for the Defendant Strauch (Strauch Document Bock II English and German 0,48, Exhibit No. 22) that he remembers after Strauch had been ordered to Riga, that he received a telephone call from his. Because of the fracture of his arm Strauch had asked for a delay in his departure for Riga, and he (Dr. Blume) had agreed to a delay not to exceed 8 days. Hardly was Strauch in Riga before he was again transferred to Minsk whereas Dr. Lange was to take over his position in Riga. But then he suffered a new arm fracture which delayed his so that it was decided his arm should be entirely healed before he went to Minsk.

3. Strauch's mother, Frau Ida Strauch, in her statement dated 4 November 1947 (Strauch Document Book I English and German p. 4, Exhibit No. 2).

4. Strauch's father, Oskar Strauch, in his statement dated 5 November 1947 (Strauch Document Book I English and German p. 5 Exhibit No. 3).

5. and Strauch's aunt, Frau Paula Gunkel, in her statement dated 5 November 1947 (Strauch Document Book I English and German p. 6. Exhibit No. 4) confirm concerdantly that on the journey to Minsk in order to report for duty Strauch traveled via Resitten, met his brother, Dr. Osker Strauch, who was stationed there as captain (Med), on 21 March 1942 and that both of them tried to call up their father in order to congratulate him on his birthday.

6. The Defendant Dr. Rasch in his statement dated 26 January 1948 (Strauch Document Book III English and German p. 8, Exhibit No. 21) testifies that he visited Strauch at the end of January or during the first half of February 1942 in Riga and was billeted in his house.

contained in Strauch's personal files (Prosecution Document Book IIIa English, p. 20, German P. 29 Exhibit No. 106):

"From 4 November 1941 commander of the Einsatzkommando Latvia with the Chief of the Security Police "Ostland" "February 1942 Commander of the Security Police in White Ruthenia".From Strauch Document Book I, Exhibit No. 1 and from Strauch Document Book II, Exhibit No. 22, it appears that Strauch was ordered to Riga some days prior to his reporting for duty, the delay being due to the fracture of his arm.

The date given in the files of the RSHA; 4 November 1941, is then the day on which the order was issued in Berlin which sent Strauch to Riga and not the day on which Strauch actually reported for duty in Riga. With respect to the personal date, naturally the date of the order of transfer was decisive for the RSHA but this date is irrelevant for the responsibility with which Strauch is charged in this trial. Here everything depends on the actual taking over of the management of official business. proved indirectly by the contents of report of events No. 29 dated 5 November 1941 (Strauch Document Book II English and German p. 3, Exhibit No, 16). Here the preducesser of Strauch in Riga, Batz, is actually mentioned, but his name has been crossed out and substituted with "Strauch" in hand-writing. That means: some employee in Berlin substituted the name of Strauch for that of Batz in the copy of the report of events, apparently because in Berlin it was officially known to him that an order had been issued transferring Strauch to Riga, whereas in fact Strauch had not yet received this order at all, or at least had not yet arrived in Riga.

The wording of the garrison report is accordingly a result of the corrections made in Berlin and based on the orders issued from Berlin which however, had at that time actually not yet brought about the change of commands out there in the East which had been prescribed by the issuance of the orders. East at any time not directed by orders from Berlin were mostly not known in Berlin until some time later, so that commanders appeared in the Berlin reports who out there actually had no longer held the position referred to for some time.

In Riga Strauch served not as commander of Einsatzkommando No. 2 But as Commander of the Security Police and the SD, to which point I shall return later, but only for about 10 days when he broke his arm again, and was replaced by Dr. Lange in the position of Commander of Security Police. Even at this time he was formally transferred Minsk, but until the healing of the second fracutre of his arm he stayed in Riga where he was used for pure reporting activity by the Chief of the Security Police Stahlecker (consultant for the reporting on the "vital territories). This confusion of re-assignments, sickness, and legal emergency, solutions, which is evidenced also by the testimony of the Defendant Dr. Blume (Strauch Document Book English and German p. 48, Exhibit No. 22), is again reflected in the garrison reports:

Report of events No. 146 dated 15 December 1941 (Strauch Document Book II English and German p. 8, Exhibit No. 16) mentions Strauch still as the commander of Einsatzkommando No. 2, but the entry has been crossed out in hand-writing and substituted by: Commander of the Security Police Latvia, Dr. Lange. Not until this time apparently, was it known in Berlin that since 20 November 1941 at the latest Strauch was not at all functioning in Riga as Commander of the Security Police but had laready been replaced By Dr. Lange, The date of the report on this event in the Berlin report - approximately 3 weeks after the event had taken place in the East - is in aggrement with the general fact, proved in this trial, that it took between 2 and 3 weeks to forward the reports.

(of Sandberger Document Book Ia, Statement of Fumy dated 12 January 1948, English and German p.50) when in report of events No. 148 dated 19 December 1941 (Strauch Document Book II, English and German P. 9, Exhibit No. 16), two reports later, Strauch is nevertheless again mentioned as commander of Einsatzkommando No. 2. On the other hand, already in reports of events No. 149 dated 23 December 1941 to No. 151 dated 5 January 1942 (Strauch Document Book II English and German 9/10, Exhibit No. 16) Strauch is mentioned as Commander of the Security Police in White Ruthenia because the order of transfer to White Ruthenia had already been issued at this time.

Report of events No. 152 dated 7 January 1942 (Strauch Document Book II English and German p. 10, Exhibit No. 16) is the first report which by the handwritten entry. "At present deputized by SS Sturmbannfuehrer Regierungsrat Hofmann" shows that in fact Strauch had not at all entered upon duty. This naturally, had again not become known in Berlin until some time following the transfer of Struach to Minisk. (Forwarding time of the reports: 2-3 weeks). 1942; here to compare the statements of Frau Strauch (Strauch Document Book I English and German p.3, Exhibit No. 1) that during the time from 10 to 16 March 1942 Strauch told her in Berlin that now he finally had to go to Minsk, and the testimony of the Defendant Schulz as witness for the Defendant Strauch Document Book II English and German p. 42, Exhibit No. 20) that in the personnel office of the RSHA in Berlin the draft of the order of transfer was persumably written out with "February" only, leaving the date open for the office chief who was to sign the order later.

In report of events No. 179, dated 11 March 1942, the first report containing a garrison report since 23 February 1942 (Strauch Document Book II English and and German p. 20, Exhibit No. 16). the addition "deputized by SS Sturmbannfuehrer Regierungsrat Hofmann" has been crossed out in hand-writing. But of course Strauch had not entered upon duty in Minsk at the time of issuance of the final order in Berlin, not until he had received this order and had made preparations for his journey. documents, was no longer Commander of the Security Police in Riga but had not yet entered upon duty in Minsk, the local office of the Commander of the Security Police, in charge of Sturmbannfuehrer Hofmann, Dr. Lange, is proved to have been Commander of the Security Police in Riga (statement of Dr. Click dated 26 January 1948 - Strauch Document Book III English and German p. 9. Exhibit No. 27). When these testimonies and documents are compared, it appears that the statements which Strauch formerly made to me and also tried to explain to the Tribunal to the best of his ability in his direct examination, are perfectly true:

1. By order of the RSHA Strauch was about 4 November 1941 appointed Commander of the Security Police and the SD in Riga.

2. Strauch was Commander of the Security Police in Riga approximately from 10 November till 18 November 1941.

3. At this time he broke his arm for the second time and was first through Stahlecker replaced by Dr. Lange who was also from Berlin appointed Commander of the Security Police in Riga as successor to Strauch.

4. After the second fracture of his arm - which was at first supposed to be completely healed - Strauch was used by Stahlecker for office work as leader III in the office of the Chief of the Security Police in Riga until 20 March 1942, since Strauch was able to attend to this work (reading and dictation of reports on the vital territories) in spite of his incapacitation.

5. By order of the RSHA Strauch was finally transferred to Minsk in March 1942.

The facts which could only be vaguely deduced from Strauch's statements are as follows: superior in his capacity as Chief of Department III with the BdS and the new Commander of the Security Police, Dr. Lange, the success of Strauch, were away on official business just at the time when Jeckelm tried to forward to them theorder for participation of units of the BdS and KdS in the operation at Riga planned by him. Consequently, Jecklen's messengers came upon Strauch, who was still nursing his broken arm, in his office as Chief of the department III of the BdS and tried to induce him in the absence of Stahlecker and Lange to issue on order for the participation of units of the BdS and KdS in the operation. Strauch had been informed, at the time when he himself took over the official duties of the KdS, that Heydrich had ordered that no actions against Jews should be carried out in Riga. (English transcript page German transcript page 5338); therefore, he refused, referring to that order of Heydrich, to do anything in that matter. (English transcript page German transcript page 5345/46). Thereupon Jeckeln called him personally on the telephone and after reprimanding him insisted on his order. (English transcript page German transcript page 5345). Strauch, who in the absence of both competent leaders and in view of Heydrich's order was loath to make a decision, sent a teletype message to Heydrich and Stahlecker, asking for instructions. However he received information neither from the one nor from the other (English transcript page German transcript page 5347) and neither the BdS nor the KdS returned to Riga. Under such circumstances, Strauch avoided any further discussions with Jeckeln. Because of the fact that he no longer had any authoritive functions in Riga, he made use of the permission granted him "to nurse first of all his arm in Germany", made up his mind and went to Koenigsberg to his wife. He arrived there either on 27 or 28 November 1941.

(Affidavit of Frau Strauch of 4 November 1947, Strauch document I German and English version page 2, exhibit 1). Therefore, Strauch was not in Riga on the day of the Jeckeln action. By abstaining from issuing orders in the absence of Stahlecker and Dr. Lange, he avoided participating in the operation especially as he did not receive any answers from his superiors to his teletype message, Strauch is unable to state from his own knowledge whether Jeckeln carried out the operation only with his own forces or whether he actually succeeded in inducing 1 officer and 20 men of "the EK 2" to participate in it. However, he concluded from the above mentioned fact that nobody from the office of the KdS and BdS took part in the operation, but probably a small detachment of the Riga training school of the EK 2. The EK 2 itself was on duty at the front near Laknje. However, this detachment was subordinated to that Einsatzkommo and not to the KdS Riga, (English transcript page German transcript page 5351). previously and it was his intention to describe the history of this event also in his direct examination in court. However his description was rather vague. separate unit of the KdS Riga, I want to point out furthermore that the prosecution tries to connect Strauch with this EA 2 as well. It charges him quite generally of having been the leader of Einsatzkommando 2 and states for example in its opening statement (English transcript page German transcript page 49:)

"The defendant Strauch was the commander of EK 2, Six months after the beginning of the operations he reported a total of 33,970 executions." Strauch was the leader of the Einsatzkommando 2 from its inception and was in some way connected with the results of its execution activities during these six months. Strauch was at no time leader of the Einsatzkommando 2. After the conquest of Latvia this Kommando had been to a large extent moved up to the front by Stahlecker (see the corresponding reports which were submitted as evidence with document book Strauch II):Activity report No. 24 of 16 July 1941 (English and German version, page 2 exhibit 16 of that document book) and activity report No. 26 of 18 July 1941 (English and German version, page 2 exhibit 16 of that document book). advanced into the area around Leningrad.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. MINZEL (ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENDANT STRAUCH):

I stopped at page 9: (English and German version, page 56, exhibit 24 of that document book). which shows that 2/3 of the strength of Einsatzfommando 2 had been moved to the front and only 1/3 remained in Riga for the set-up of the new commando post. time at Loknja (see the testinomy of the defendant JOSTas witness for the defendant STAUCH document book STRAUCH II, English and German version, page 44 exhibit 21). space and personnel from the office of the Kds in Riga, which had been set up after the establishment of the Civil Administration in Latvia. did not form a part of the Army organization but constituted a part of this Civil Administration. It was not a mobile militant unit but a p permanent local authority. The defendant JOST who during his activity as BdS Ostland at Riga was also a Chief of an office of the Civil Administration, described the set up of the BdS and MdS office in this Administration in a survey chart, which is contained in document book JOSTIII, English and German version, page 14, JOST decument 29. units completely different with regard to local and personnel is also shown by the garrison report, included in document book STRAUCH II English exhibit 18, which also mentions the command post at Riga and the Einsatzkommando 2 at Loknja as two different units, each with a special leader of its own.

the establishment of the command post in Riga, this office was listed as "Einsatzkommando 2" can merely be explained by the negligence with which the reports were compiled in Berlin; in this connection wee the affidavit of FUMY of ...(document book OHLENDORF Ia, English version page 11, German version page 25, document OHLENDORF No. 32) and the affidavit of FUMY of 12 January 1948 (document book SANDBERGER Ia, page 50, exhibit .......). This negligence was the reason that, only beginning with activity report No. 146, of 15 December 1941 (document book STRAUCH Ia, page 8, exhibit 16) after the establishment of the civil administration, that is after the actual organizational set up of the Security Police and the SD in the Reich Commisseriat Ostland, the offices were named accordingly and correctly in the reports. kommando 2 and the general chargesof the prosecution are not founded on facts. of department III of the BdS in Riga, that is, he was in charge of compiling SD reports. These duties were carried out by the independent offices of the SD in the Reich completely seqarate from all other tasks, including executive tasks entrusted to joint offices together with such belonging to the executive duties of the Security Police. However, this did not alter the special problems of their duties or their execution. The departments III had nothing whatsoever to do with the other departments, which were in charge of executive duties; its activities were concerned just as the activities of the SD in the Reich, with the compiling and forwarding of news and reports from all spheres of life, in order to keep the leading officials informed about the actual situation. I refer in this connection to the testimonies of the defendant OHLEHDORF concerning the real nature of the information and report activities.

These testimonies have been confirmed in the course of the proceedings by innumerable additional affidavits of the defendants concerning their activities in the SD and as Chiefs of the department III of Einsatzgruppen, and Kommandos as well as command posts. This activity did not involve the defendant STRAUCH in any kind of participation in crimes. Therefore, also as Chief of department III, he did not perpetrate acts punishable according to the indictment.

Therewith all charges are refuted which refer to STRAUCH's activity in Riga. he had to face the following situation: for more Jews lived in White Ruthenia than in any other territory of the Reich Commissariat Ostland. Almost all skilled workers of technical or trade professions were Jews, whereas the indigeneous White Ruthenian population was working predominately in agriculture. (document book STRAUCH II page....exhibit 16: activity report No. 32 of 24 July 1941.) vancing with the troops, were active in the execution of the Fuehrer Order. Repeatedly it had been pointed out in reports of the SD from White Ruthenia that drastic measures against the Jews there would only lead to a crippling of the entire economic life. This opinion was shared by the Commissar General for White Ruthenia KUBE, and when STRAUCH took over his position in Minsk, he demanded from him that in consideration of the situation he should abstain from measures against the Jews. STRAUCH knew from his first visit to STAHLECKER in Riga that the Fuehrer Order for extermination of Jews and Communists had been stipulated as a task of the commanders too.

However, his inner revulsion against this order induced him now, when it was set up to him for the first time to take issue with this order, to make use of every opportunity which would relieve him from its execution. Therefore, STRAUCH agreed at once to undertake nothing until he became more informed about the economic conditions of White Ruthenia. A short time afterwards, the Chief of the Sipo and the SD Heydrich, STRAUCH's highest ranking superior after HIMMLER, arrived by chance in Minsk; STRAUCH informed him of the situation and HEYDRICH granted a postponement of the execution of the measures against the Jews in White Ruthenia, first of all until the gathering of the harvest, that is until the late fall of 1942. Document book STRAUCHI, English and German version page 9, exhibit 6): affidavit, Karl ZENNER of 3 November 1947.) However, KUBE himself went too far. By virtue of all testimonies and documents regarding his person, it has been established that he followed a policy of open favoritism of Jews, contary to the condemnation of Jewry by the Nazi Leadership which was, of course, not fundamentally altered by the suspension of the extermination measures;

THE PRESIDENT: You don't need to read all those.

DR. MINZEL: stronger opposition to this policy. He had already been removed from his post once before as Gauleiter of the Mark Brandenburg, at that time because of shady dealings. How in White Ruthenia, as his friendliness toward the Jews became more and more apparent, this same fate threatened to overtake him. He had already been repeatedly and explicitly warned by Himmler and Heydrich that he would have to count on stricter measures. It was obviously this compulsory state of affairs which brought him to resort on 31 July 1942 to sending a letter to the Reich Commissar for the Eastland, Lohse, in Riga, the so-called Kube letter; (Prosecution Document Book III A, German page 44, 111) in which he reports alleged measures against the Jews, which in the 10 weeks previous to that time, he is supposed to have taken, together with the SS and Police Leader and with his subordinate, Commander of the Security Police Strauch.

55,000 Jews are said to have been exterminated according to this report, and of this number, 10,000 in Minsk on 28 and 29 July alone. The defendant Strauch vehemently denies that such events actually did take place; I have submitted a whole series of statements which confirm that: (Strauch Doc. Book I e, German page 10a, 12, 19, 25a, 34a, Exhibit 6, 7, 8, 11, 15); from them may be seen the cross contradiction between the tenor and contents of the Kube letter and the actual conduct of Kube.

"As though to refute its own incriminating document, the Prosecution has introduced a report about Kube in which his personality, his attitude towards the Fuehrer order, the Security Police and their leaders is so evident that his letter of 31 July 1942 may be interpreted only as an attempt to mislead, which can be explained by his vulnerable position. In this report about Kube, such misleading letters are explicitly mentioned, and on this subject the following is said (page 10 of the original): "In what he says and writes in which he takes a position on the Jewish question, I see only a means of protecting himself for the future." In the face of these statements, the value of the Kube letter vanishes as evidence; this document which the prosecution so especially singled out in its presentation of documents by reading it in its entirety is completely nullified? It is however, rendered completely valueless by the statement, which I have also proved with documents, the Kube's operations against the Jews in the 10 weeks before 31 July 1942 are only a figment of his imagination. In Strauch Document Book No. II pages 28037, Exhibit 18 from the "Reports from the Occupied Eastern territories" No. 1 of 1 May 1942 to No. 15 of 7 August 1942, I have quoted all the passages in excerpts which are concerned with the events and the situation in White Ruthenia.

There is not one word in these reports, which extend over the period decisive for the Kube letter, of even a single operation, as mentioned by Kube in his report.

This is the case, then, as the defendant Strauch testified in direct examination from his knowledge of Kube's personality and the conditions in White Ruthenia: Kube arbitrarily patched together events and figures from a time prior to that in a description of his own invention and applied it to the period before 31 July 1942, in order toprove his positive attitude in the Jewish question during this period, a "political" maneuver, which he undertook following the reprimands such as the one directed at him by Heydrich in his letter of 21 March 1942 (Prosecution Document Book VA - Rebuttaal documents - Engl. page ..... German page 9/10, Exhibit 220). contents, and one made by Kube himself. The operations reported in it simply did not take place, at least not in the period claimed. This is proved by the far more reliable reports of Commander Strauch himself, which are contained in the reports from the occupied Eastern territories. Therefore, no criminal responsibility can be inferred for Strauch from the dates of the Kube letter. ting the report concerning Kube, the Prosecution has furnished the Defense with proof that Strauch did not take up his duties in Minsk until the end of March 1942. The report was made by Strauch in July of 1943 when he was already G-2 (Intelligence officer) with the Task Officer for the Bandit Combat Operations. In the report, Strauch quoted file memoranda and measures of Commanders of the Security Police and the SD in Minsk. He himself had also become Commander of the Security Police in Minsk by that time. Thus, he submitted a memorandum concerning events on 1 and "In a memorandum of the Commander of the Security Police of that time." It is apparent that he is not referring to himself here, thus on 2 March 1942 he had not yet taken over the office of the Commander of the Security Police in Minsk.

On the contrary, Strauch then says in connection with a. memorandum of the Commander of the Security Police dated 18 April 1942:

"I have sent excerpts of the following letter under the dateline 25 April 1942 to the Gauleiter.", and further: "In a letter of 28 April 1942, the Gauleiter significantly did not even touch upon my reproaches." thus speak of himself in this report when he mentions the Commanders of the Security Police of Minsk. no reports concerning operations against the Jews in the period relevant to the Kube letter. On the contrary, what is apparent from the reports is the fact that in White Ruthenia another question was far more vital for the Security Police than measures against the Jews, the The reports (Strauch Document Rook II, eng.

and german pages 25-37, Exhibit 17-18) show that the uprising of partisan bands had attained such proportions that all civilian activities in the General Commissariat White Ruthenia threatened to collapse. In Minsk there were reports of a partisan organization (Strauch Document Rook II, Eng. and German pp. 25/26, Exhibit 17) in which 9 Partisan groups worked together under one staff, among which were groups with a strength of 200-400 men. The organization was supervised by a Communist underground machine, the organizer of which was the Georgian Jew, Delikurdgly, who was financed by Jews from the Ghetto and provided with weapons and reinforcements. From the Ghetto, Jewish troops were also sent to the Partisans. There was a secret press which was directed by a Jew, and a Partisan military council was set up, which maintained connections with Moscow via a parachute group. detail in the Report from the Occupied Eastern territories No. 9. 178, Doc. No. 5156, the German mimeographed copies of which create the impression that the pages of the original have been reproduced in their true continuity.

In reality, the very pages are missing which throw a special light upon the seriousness of the situation and which are concerned with a conference of all the Wehrmacht commanders, the Security Police Commanders and all representatives of the civil administration, in which the Defendant Strauch is also quoted as having participated, and from the course of which may be seen how Strauch was and should have been primarily busy with his Commander of the Security Police Office as G-2 in obtaining advance information for assignments against the Partisans. I have taken the liberty of introducing these very pages as evidence which were left out by the Prosecution.

From this time on, Strauch's entire activity was conducted within the framework of anti-Partisan and guerilla operations. The SS and Police Leader Minsk set up an Einsatz staff for obtaining information about partisans and the Commander of the Security Police Strauch was the leader of this Einsatz staff.

All reports from the period of Strauch's further stay in Minsk are full of the clash of weapons in the Partisan warfare, and it is understandable that in Berlin Strauch was accused of "playing soldier" and of neglecting his Security Police duties, (Strauch Document Book II, Engl. and German page 43, Exhibit 20). mander of the Security Police Minsk in this fight against the Partisans is shown also by the following statements;

Strauch Doc. Book I, Engl, and German p. - Exhi. 11, detail here because my client, in consideration of the unusual circumstances of his examination, had no opportunity to comment thoroughly and clearly enough on the subject. Without sufficient knowledge of the conditions, however the measures of the German Security end constabulary Forces, which had to call upon Wehrmacht units for the most part in their operations, may not be properly evaluated.

In no other area of the Eastland was there such deadly danger for the security of the rear-area communications and for the maintenance of public peace and order as in White Ruthenia, therefore, drastic measures had to be taken in order to counter the criminal activities of the Partisans. light; here it is not a question of imagining a Partisan danger and unscrupulously declaring innocent people to be Partisans or Partisan helpers, but a question of bloody reality. so above all did the defendant Strauch. And Strauch also experienced the reality of the especially active participation of the Jews in the Communist fight in White Ruthenia, claimed by the German authorities. (cf. the report cited above concerning the discovery of the Partisan organization in Minsk). Only when seen from this point of view do the documents which alone of all the Prosecution documents still remain, appear in their true light Prosecution Document Book VA(Rebuttal Documents) Eng. p... German p. 118, Exhibit 226: Report from the occupied Eastern territories No. 5 of 29 May 1942. measures pertaining to Partisan warfare and measures taken exclusively in this connection against captured partisans and Partisan helpers are reproduced. The defendant Strauch also gave this information in his affidavit of 22 January 1948. sans or Partisan helpers who had been sentenced to death by the German court in Minsk. In the reports preceding this report there is ah account of the particular role played by the Minsk Jews in the Partisan and Communist organization which had been uncovered.

court, but in each case of severe but nevertheless justified penal measures against criminals, and not a question of criminal measures against innocent persons.

Prosecution Document Book VA - Rebuttal Documents. German page 105, Exhibit 224: Report from the Occupied Eastern territories No. 41 of 12 February 1943. This report gives a detailed account of the conclusion of extensive operations against the Partisans. In these undertakings, 1165 Partisans were subjected to "special treatment" for having given aid to the Partisans. In this case too the affidavit of the defendant Strauch of 22 January 1948 is referred to. It is a question of an undertaking which in part did not take place in White Ruthenian territory (Sec the mention of the localities Tscherwen and Ossipowitschi in the rear army area) and in which numerous other units participated in addition to those of the Commander of the Security Police Minsk. The leader of the expedition was SS-Obergruppenfuehrer Jeckeln. As in all such expeditions, Strauch was assigned with men of his office for purposes of reconnaissance. cution of pehal measures against the captured bandits and their supporters. Apart from the fact that these penal measures were justified, Strauch's responsibility cannot be deduced from the report, nor from the actual conditions. Prosecution Document Book VA (Rebuttal Documents) German p. 105 Exhibit 225: Report No. 43.

THE PRESIDENT: If you will refer to the exhibit number, then we can go right along.

DR. MINZEL: This report deals with further large-scale combat operations against the bandits. The Commander of the Security Police supplied only a small part of the forces committed in operation "Jakob"; therefore, this report shows that this operation could not possibly have been commanded by Strauch, but that it was the commander of the constabulary, regular police (Ordnungspolizei) in Minsk, at that time, who was in charge of operations.

144 "bandit suspects" were given "special treatment". If the expression "bandit suspects is being used, this does not coincide with the actual facts, as those persons were encountered in the partisan formations, and as they, contrary to the armed partisans, did not carry any weapons openly. The very same report mentions the operation "Harvest Celebration (Erntefest)" in which even stronger forces had been committed. Here again, members of the office of the Commander of the Security Police were only a small part of the total forces, among others 11 police and constabulary battalions participated. 1175 "bandit suspects" received "special treatment". Strauch who had been assigned to reconnaissance duties did not order any executions during this particular operation, nor did he participate. (Strauch Doc. B. III e/german p. 1 Strauch affidavit of 22 January 1948). Reports No. 41 and No. 43 cannot therefore contain any factual information concerning Strauch's participation in crimes against humanity, which could be considered as proof for Strauch's personal responsibility. described just now in the Prosecution rebuttal document, Engl. Page ..., German page 105. Exhibit 224. According to the text of this document the very same 1, 165 partisans were not executed because they were bandit suspects, but because they were bandit supporters, which is a proof for the fact that the word "bandit suspect" has been used quite arbitrarily, and precludes the conclusion that these persons were not found guilty of having committed crimes. Prosecution Document Book VA - Rebuttal Document Book Engl. p. German p. 23 Exhibit 222: Affidavit Ruebe dated 23 October 1947. the Commander of the Security Police Minsk, Strauch, has allegedly participated, having supposedly killed 2000 Jews during this operation.

operation was part of the combatting of bends. In his affidavit of 22 January 1948 (Strauch Document Book III, Engl. and German p. 1, Exh. 25) he also states that he himself had been in charge of the search party in the Sluzk ghetto, and that a large store of weapons had been found there. SS and Police Leader von Gottberg had then ordered a clearing up operation for the ghetto, and heavy weapons had to be used in order to take it. He continues by stating that all surviving Jews were finally shot by order of von Gottberg. Strauch himself did not give this order, nor did he participate in the executions. However, he witnessed those executions following a situation conference which had been ordered by von Gottberg, but he soon departed to the Pinsk swamp country south of Sluzk, in order to continue this reconnaissance operations against the bandits.

That Strauch's statement is correct can be seen from the affidavit by Joahannes Feder of 10 November 1947 and the affidavit by Hubert Strathmann of 10 November 1947. were given special treatment. This memo comes from Strauch. In this connection I refer to his explanations in the repeatedly mentioned affidavit of 22 January 1948. Officer to the Chief of Staff bandit combat formations for a considerable time, i.e. that he was no longer Commander of the Security Police in White Ruthenia at that time. He states that he and his Commending Officer, Obergruppenfuehrer von dem Bach, at that time left his new office in East Prussia and flew to Minsk. Von dem Bach expressly ordered him to arrest the Jews who were employed by the Generalkommissar Kube (approximately 70 persons), and to have them shot with the assistance of the Commander of the Security Police and the SD in White Ruthenia. Strauch transmitted this order to the Commander of Minsk, his successor, who had them executed by Obersturmfuehrer Hauser, as an attempt to contract Obergruppenfuehrer von dem Bach, who had alreadyleft, in order to have this order revoked, had not been successful.

Following this, Strauch dictated the memo at the office of the Minsk Commander of the Security Police, his successor, in Order to, prove to von dem Bach that he had executed his order. This was the explanation, he stated, why the memo was written on stationery of the Commander of the Security Police and SD for White Ruthenia in Minsk. However, he did not leave the document in Minsk, but took it with him to the office of the chief of staff bandit combat formations, where he had it filed. Therefore, Strauch was compelled by an order he received personally to take this measure, and he could not possibly refuse to obey or have it executed. Solely Obergruppenfuehrer von dem Bach is responsible for the arrest and execution of those Jews. Strauch's participation cannot be compared to the independent actions of a commander, or of an Einsatzkommando leader based on the Fuehrer order, which was only a general directive for any such actions. The execution of a specified individual order from an immediate superior cannot be compared to those ordered executions which, although it was compulsory to comply with this general directive, were ordered by the individual leaders in each particular case, either quite independently or implementing their respective superiors instructions. Here special attention must be paid to the fact that this immediate superior was able to check on the implementation of his order at any time. Strauch, being the G-2 (intelligence officer) to the Chief of staff of bandit combat formations was constantly in direct touch with this Chief, von dem Bach, who gave him the execution order. How painstakingly accurate Strauch's account of executing this order has been is proved by the fact that the memorandum, which had been written to cover him, was a completely new and unusual business procedure. I shall now conclude my examination of the actual incriminating points concerning the defendant Strauch as listed in the Prosecution documents. The Prosecution generally accused Strauch of having participated in Jew baitings at Minsk, and to prove their point referred to statements made by the defendant Dr. Sandberger on 19 November 1945.

(Document Book III, A, English page, German page 17, Exh. 110: This contains a long list of names of those men who were allegedly responsible for the persecution of Jews all over Russia. It is evident that such an accusation is absurd if leveled by a man who was located in Reval, the Northwestern corner of the Baltic countries, and who could not possibly have any knowledge of the events which were taking place in the whole of far-flung Russia. As witness for the defendant Strauch, Dr. Sandberger has stated (Strauch Document Book II, English and German page 49/54, Exhibit 23) that apart from knowing of Strauch's presence in Minsk, he did not have any knowledge of the actual events which took place in Minsk. He himself has never been to Minsk nor was Strauch in Reval at any time. During the whole of this period, they never attended discussions at the office of the Riga Commander of the Security Police; this refers to the time Strauch stayed in Minsk. Defendant Strauch with its gigantic liquidation numbers but the portrayal of a man who for six years as chief of SD sectors was only engaged in compiling SD reports, who, a long time after the Russian Campaign had started and the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos had been assigned to the East, who in Riga, for another four months, as Chief III with the Riga Commander of the Security Police continued to write SD reports, and who finally at Minsk was thrust into the dangerous atmosphere of a constantly lurking fight against the bandits, which required effective soldierly devotion and the implementation of the most stringent measures. Apart from a few others, Strauch is one of the real soldiers amongst the defendants, even though this seems to be a paradox considering his present condition. During the Polish campaign he became an officer and received his decorations as such, and during the fighting against the bandits he further distinguished himself by his personal devotion in fulfilling his reconnaissance tasks.

Ha was a man who made it his business to comply with the orders he received as a soldier, He was compelled to take these orders seriously, for his security police activities in Minsk were actually an effective assistance for the Wehrmacht, in order to secure the supplies and communications coming up from the rear. For many months of fighting against the bandits, Strauch was not even in Minsk. (Strauch Document Book I. English and German page 18. Exhibit 8: statement Feder of 30 Oct. 1947 much as he possibly could (Transcript English page German page 5336-37). Apart from arresting, 70 Jews in Minsk, he did not contribute to implementing this order, which had been given by his immediate superior. Obergruppenfuehrer von dem Bach, whose order he was obliged to obey. Strauch himself did not give the order to have them executed, but left this task, that is the arrest and actual execution, to his official successor, the Commander of White Ruthenia. Strauch himself had given orders that a camp was to be set up on a large estate for the Minsk Jews, whose immates were doing quite well considering these circumstances. (Transcript English page. German page 5381). The remainder of the executions, which took place in the course of those operations in which Strauch participated, amongst others, cannot be laid to him. The special situation in White Ruthania was the cause that these operations assumed such proportions that all of them were directed by senior officers, while Strauch only had to carry out limited reconnaissance tasks (Strauch Document Book I, English and German page 17, Exhibit 8: Statement Feder of 30 October 1947). The reports quoted at the beginning which deal with these operations, although mentioning that the Minsk Commander of the Security Police participated in them, do not bring any proof that Strauch, who was not in charge of those operations had ordered the punitive measures which followed them. These reports describe the activities of all the participating formations, and they do not allow any conclusion regarding a personal responsibility. Even the statement Ruebe (Prosecution Document Book V A, Rebuttal Documents, English page, German page 23, Exhibit 222). although mentioning that Strauch participated in the operations against the Ghetto at Sluzk, stresses, however, the presence of the SS and Police Leader von Gottberg.

This particular operation took place as part of a large scale combat operation against bandits, in which Strauch was merely commissioned with reconnaissance tasks. (Strauch Document Book I, English and German page 21, Exhibit 13: Statement Strathmann of 10 November 1947). While fighting the bandits. Strauch was one of those defendants who knew better than anybody else that they acted during an emergency for the Reich, in order to establish security measures and ward off a deadly danger. In his case the defense asserts that a mitigating circumstance resulting from the existing emergency should be fully considered; also insofar as Strauch was fully aware that he had to obey the orders he received, and that he could not possibly oppose them without endangering his own life. Now I shall deal with the remaining points, that is, Count III of the Indictment, in which he is charged with membership in a criminal organization. Since 10 January 1932, Strauch had been a member of the SS, and since July 1934, a member of the SD. From the end of 1934 till November 1941, he at first was in charge of a SD sector in Westphalia and at the end in Koenigsberg. In November 1941, he was appointed Commander of the Riga Security Police, but actually worked in this capacity only for about ten days, in order to resume writing SD reports, for another four months. It was not before March 1942 that Strauch really assumed the position of Commander at Minsk, and in this capacity he stayed on till spring 1943, when he was assigned to purely military duties as Intelligence Officer to the Task Officer in Charge of Combat Operations against Bandits. The International Military Tribunal has ruled that those SS members are guilty of criminal membership, who voluntarily joined after 1 September 1939, or remained in that organization, and who either had knowledge of the criminal acts committed by the SS, or themselves were involved in committing such crimes.

In this trial it has been established and proved that members of the SD could not resign from the SD after 1 September 1939, nor could they resign from the SS, with the exception of those whom the Chief of the Security Police wanted removed from this organization. Therefore, since 1 September 1939, Strauch has not been a voluntary member in the SD, which also applies to his SS membership. At the beginning of the war he joined the Polish Campaign as a soldier, and after the conclusion of this campaign he was reassigned to the SD from the Wehrmacht, where he intended to stay, and again contrary to his intentions, was then declared unfit for military service in the Wehrmacht. In the course of his SD reporting duties, which he resumed after returning from the Wehrmacht for the initial period thereafter. Strauch neither committed criminal acts himself nor did he participate in those criminal activities as perpetrated by others, and he also had no knowledge or was aware of the criminal actions committed by the SS. Doinghis duty he rather considered his activities perfectly legal, which consisted of submitting frank and correct reports to the leading authorities of both State and Party. Furthermore, he was assigned to the position of Commander of the Security Police, first in Riga and then in Minsk, without being able to refuse this particular assignment. During the time he was in charge of that office he did not approve of any criminal actions nor did he participate in them. As for the combat against Partisans, he was only a part of the committed large formations, he did not order any actions which would be subject to punishment, nor did he participate in them, if these actions were part of the operations referred to. Having knowledge of the emergency which existed in fighting the partisans and underground organizations, this fact simultaneously excluded an approving knowledge of criminal actions. Strauch considered the very stringent measures, which he did not order himself, but of which he had knowledge, a fully justifiable defense measure.

When by order of Obergruppenfuehrer von dem Bach in Minsk, he transmitted the order for the arrest of 70 Jews and their extermination, he only obeyed an immediate order given by his superior. He was not in a position to refuse. This situation excluded an independent criminal action. Therefore, merely based on this incident, Strauch could not possibly know or assume that he was a member of an organization which pursued criminal objectives. Incidentally then as before, he did not have an opportunity to resign. Mr. President, Your Honors ! At the outset of the trial it appeared as if it had been just my client who really committed crimes against humanity. Now we are able to discern the facts more clearly, and the ground has been prepared for a fair and just decision. However, the picture is not as clear as it should be, considering the severity of the indictment. The guilt of both this defendant, as that of all the other defendants, must be established beyond all reasonable doubts, if he is to be sentenced. The shortcomings of the Defense in this particular case which are a result of the defendant's ill health, leave certain doubts which can only be removed by eliminating those shortcomings. I repeat my request to take these special conditions into account by making arrangements for a future complete trial. Whatever the outcome will be, however. I trust that the Court will pass a just verdict. DR. MAYER FOR KLINGELHOFER:

May it please the Tribunal: humanity, are also charged with war crimes which they are supposed to have committed within the scope of the Einsatzgruppen, the Einsatz and Sonderkommandos, one is easily tempted in evaluating the offered documentary material, to view the Einsatzgruppen outside of the frame-work into which they had actually been placed. If this were to happen, then an entirely false impression would be created.

in the Eastern territories occupied by German troops, is part and only part of the events of war which occurred like destiny - and one can say due to the force of circumstances between the German Nation and Bolshevist Russia. These intentions of the USSR, voiced right from the beginning of the Soviet regime to bring about world revolution in all countries of the world and the threat contained therein not only to Germany but to the whole Western part of Europe, was a fact always demonstrated to the whole Western part of Europe, was a fact always demonstrated to the German people by its government at the time, as of considerable danger. The Public, as well as the Party end its formations, saw the meaning of this war not in the intention to conquer new territory, but in the aim to prevent by active defense the expected onslaught from the East. The German Nation as the only important neighbour of the Soviet Union was supposed to intervene in this case. It can not be denied that this conflict was publicised as a decisive contest between Eastern and Western culture and that a considerable number, of not exactly the worst Germans, considered this a hard and bitter necessity according to their true conviction. It was furthermore obvious and confirmed by former experiences, that war with Russia would be carried on by this State with a ruthlessness, which would not feel itself in any way restricted by limits of international agreements and international law. It followed from this, that it would be of decisive importance to care by all means for the security of the troops as quickly as possible.

just as soon as they were on Russian territory. This included the breaking up of any resistance wherever it appeared in occupied territory. The malicious fighting of the partisans, saboteurs and spies who camouflaged as harmless civilians would cause insecurity from ambush, was to be expected. But this fight could only meet with success if, by earliest possible, rapid evaluation of the documents captured at NKWD (Secret State Police), military and state officers, the most comprehensive and exact insight possible, which corresponded to the existing facts, could be gained of the entire organization of the Soviet Party machinery, the military structure and the partisan formations intended for unuisance activity. Einsatzgruppen and their sub-formations were first of all intended for this task. They were actually detailed for this. The true picture would be distorted if one would make the mistake of proceeding from the supposition that it was the sole task of the Einsatzgruppen to kill Jews, Gypsies, anti-social elements and communist functionaries. The entire evidence has shown time and again clearly and unequivocally that the previously mentioned basic security task was in the accomplished sense the predominant aim of the Einsatzgruppen. That in fact no sight was lost of this aim, is demonstrated especially well by a number of Operational Situation Reports. ments was therefore a task of special significance which last but not least gave significant information to the command of the army. But it was also a task which due to its importance could only be entrusted to those who had the necessary knowledge and ability. Prerequisite for work in this branch was, aside from acquaintance with Russian conditions, also the perfect knowledge of the Russian language, as only then quick and accurate work could be guaranteed. It is unfortunate that it was impossible for the defense to offer at least some of these sometimes quite voluminous and detailed documents to the Tribunal to show thereby what an amount of work was often contained in them after months of research. From those it would have become obvious that the ones compiling these reports had been engaged in this kind of work to the limit of their time and that they had no possibility to bother with other matters.

mind when judging the case of Klingelhoefer. Evaluation of the captured documents has been accomplished. There is no doubt about that. Such a job demanded men suitable for this kind of work, men who had to, devote themselves and all their time to this matter, and that this work did not constitute any unnecessary waste of time, is also obvious. It is therefore no wonder if the defendant Klingelhoefer's activity during the two years of his assignment in Russia concerned itself exclusively with this task, aside from few exceptions. The importance of this work which presupposes in itself only knowledge of the Russian language was such, that it justified without any doubt the appointment of an SS-Major. It is for this reason alone already a misconception, if the Prosecution tries to infer from the rank of the defendant that he must have been assigned as Commander of Einsatzgruppe Units, and that he as such was active in a sphere different from the one he was actually working in. in which he gives a short outline of his life history up to the time of his assignment in Russia, shows clearly that it would have been an absurdity without comparison if one would have entrusted him with different tasks than the revising and evaluation of the captured documentary material.

Klingelhoefer was born in Moscow. He learned the Russian language together with his mother tongue. Due to long years of residence in Russia he was acquainted with Russian conditions and, what was even more important, with the character of the Slav people. Due to his acquaintance with Bolshevism he joined the NSDAP after his resettlement in Germany because this party promised him a fight against this conception of life which he could not tolerate. In considering this fact, one should not disregard the political situation then existing in Germany, It would go too far if I would give a resume of this situation here again even in rough outline.

I trust that the Tribunal is aware of it and that it will evaluate it accordingly. The fact, that the defendant has a perfect knowledge of the Russian language, and that he could be considered as one acquainted with Russia, made the Security Service, then in the process of being set up, aware of him. The defendant Klingelhoefer who had to take care of his family without any special vocational training, became a salaried member of the SD in Kassel, because in this he saw a possibility to participate actively in the enlightenment about the real character of the Bolshevist system. But he was at first in no way employed with regard to the previously mentioned knowledge. Instead he was placed in charge of the cultural branch and had to take over the Cultural department with all its branches later on. Here he acquired an extensive training in the drawing up of reports in which he pictured the essential and interesting parts from all sectors of cultural life within the area of the SD Administrative Sub-district, Kassel. Later on he received also the order for continuous reporting in which he had to report about the morale of the population results of propaganda in press reports and films and about the populations reactions to war conditions and government measures. In this connection I refer to Doc. Klingelhoefer No. 5, Exh. No. 4. This affidavit of one of the defendants coworkers of that time, confirms the defendant Klingelhoefer's testimony while on the witness stand. It is also certified in the same document, that the defendant always endeavored to adopt a just and objective attitude in his reports and that he pointed out deficiencies and grievances without regard to the person concerned. It is furthermore certified that he was also decent in a human respect and that he never lent his hand to the persecution of persons for racial or other unjustified reasons. This latter fact is clearly stressed by Klingelhoefer Document No. 1, Exh. No. 1. Moreover, the defendant Klingehoefer is a man of extraordinarily kind and gentle character who always endeavours to be righteous and true in his actions and utterances. I may be allowed to point in this connectio to the proved fact that right from the beginning - that means a long time before the beginning of his trial - the defendant always endeavoured in all his interrogations to speak the truth.

He did not wait until Operational Situation Reports were presented to him. He considered it to be his duty as an honourable man to say what actually happened and I can emphasize that this endeavour was also the basis of his testimony on the stand. Administrative Sub-District in Kassel to the Russian assignment virtue of an order given by the Reich Main Security Office to his superior agency in Kassel the defendant Klingelhoefer had to report to the Pretzsch Police School. It that date he was still completely in the dark about the purpose of this assignment. After the setting-up of the organization and formation of the Einsatzgruppen with their Einsatz- and Sonderkommandos he was assigned to Sonderkommando 7b. He belonged to it from 2 June 1941 until 10 or 11 July 1941. After having been taken over thereafter into the Advance Kommando Moscow, in which he was employed until middle of September 1941, he was transferred to the Group Staff of Einsatzgruppe B. He belonged to it for about a month from middle of September 1941 until the end of October 1941. At the last mentioned date he was appointed to his sole independent command in Which he had to command the Advance Kommando Group Staff. He held this command from the end of October 1941 until he went on leave to Germany on 2 December 1941. After his return from leave on 25 December 1941 he was retransferred to the Staff of Einsatzgruppe B where he remained until 20 December 1943. The Advance Kommando Group Staff had been dissolved in the course of December 1941. Already now I should like to stress particularly that Klingelhoefer, apart from commanding the Advance Kommando Group Staff, never directed a unit of Einsatzgruppe B independently and as solely responsible officer. This assertion finds its confirmation in the submitted Operational Situation Reports, especially since the name of the defendant is nowhere mentioned in them, although they frequently contain exact enumerations of names and ranks of the commanders of the units.

This fact should not be overlooked. It is established and is contradictory to the allegations of the Prosecution. mony of nearly all of the defendants, the organization and formation of the Einsatzgruppen and their sub-formations, i.e. the Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos, took place in Pretzsch and Dueben. night, a roll call was held during which the officers and men were assigned to the positions they were intended for in the Einsatzgruppen and Kommandos, On this occasion the defendant was assigned to Sonderkommando ub as an interpreter. In a speech Streckenbach only emphasized particularly the general duties of a soldier in the field with respect to fulfilment of duty and discipline. Any explanation about the aim and purpose of the commitment was not given. In Dueben, to which place the Sonderkommando 7b had been transferred, the organization of this Kommando was set up in detail by its commander, Major Rausch. The Sonderkommando 7b was divided into an SD squad and two executive squads. The defendant Klingelhoefer was assigned to the SD squad with the special order to organize it. This sub-division of Sonderkommando 7b was continued until the withdrawal of the defendant Klingelhoefer from this unit. The later commitment made it necessary to make a new arrangement, namely in that manner that the SD squad disappeared and in its place SD experts were assigned to each of the executive squads. In that regard I refer to the testimony of the defendant in the English transcript, pages 3896 to 3898. The employment of the defendant in the SD squad was done with regard to his activity with the SD in Kassel. The defendant received the knowledge of the aim of the commitment and the purpose of the Sonderkommandos shortly before the departure to the Russian territory, at a roll call hold by the commander of the Kommando for this purpose. Major Rausch particularly stressed that it was the task of the Kommando to cover the rear area of the combat troops and to compile all important material in intelligence reports which was to be done besides the usual SD reports.

In this connection he pointed to the ruthlessness of the fight against the Red Army which was to be foreseen, and, moreover, he disclosed the order of the Fuehrer. According to this, the Jews in Russia were to be considered as the strongest support of Bolshevism and to be shot. He stressed that this must result in a heavy charge for the members of the Kommando. It had also bee tried to have this order cancelled, however in vain. The order would also affect Communist functionaries and Gypsies. In this connection he expressed his opinion that his Kommando would have nothing to do with this order, since it had first of all the task of following the combat troops immediately, while special Einsatzkommandos in the rear area as stationary units would take charge of the carrying through of this order. interpreter and SD-Specialist and must therefore have been convinced that he would never be compelled to participate in the execution of this order. It was a matter of course that this order deeply impressed the defendant and his aversion against it, which he expressly emphasizes in his testimony, can well be understood. His activity during the whole subsequent period kept him away from these things. It is clear and is not denied by the defendant that he frequently heard of the executions in compliance with the Fuehrer Order but the drawing up of his special reports, which was of quite a different nature as compared with the usual SD reporting, prevented any personal participation of the defendant in these incidents, and this is estensibly expressed by the fact that the command of a Sonderkommando or an Einsatzkommando was never conferred upon him.

The fact that he was appointed commander of the Vorkommando Group Staff is not contradictory to this either; for a task was envisaged for this Kommando which was entirely within the framework of the former work of the defendant. For that reason the Vorkommando Group Staff is never mentioned in the documents in connection with the executions. which are to show his participation in the executions which were performed by Sonderkommando 7b, by the Vorkommando Moscow and by the Staff of Einsatzgruppe B.

By Prosecution's Exh. No. 61, Document No. NO-2844, it is to be proved that Klingelhoefer participated in the shooting of 886 persons which is attributed to Sonderkommando 7b in this Operational Situation Report dated 4 September 1941. 1941 until 10 or 11 July 1941, as is proved by his testimony on the stand and by Klingelhoefer Document No. 2. During this period, however, the Sonderkommando 7b was on the advance. During the approximately 3 weeks Klingelhoefer belonged to this Kommando, it travelled via Brest-Litovsk and Slonim to Minsk, a distance which is not at all insignificant. Of course, the advance of such a unit cannot be carried through without difficulties and therefore the statements of the defendant are absolutely worthy of belief, if he reports that during this period the Kommando did not perform executions just because of this advance movement. The Exh, No. 61 of the Prosecution, mentioned at the beginning, shows the state of 20 August 1941 as reporting date. Since the defendant no longer belonged to the Kommando after 10 July 1941 and since the Kommando was engaged in a greater advance movement before this date, the document proves by no means with regard to the defendant that even part of these reported executions took place before the date on which he left Sonderkommando 7b. Therefore, it proves by no means either that he participated in those executions in any form.

The fact that the executions took place is by no means sufficient for the presumption of the defendant's participation in then. The Prosecution ought to have shown from what it concludes a co-operation of the defendant Klingelhoefer. Furthermore, it ought to have advanced the facts and evidence for these facts which would have justified such a conclusion. Prosecution draws from this same Operational Situation Report No. 73, Prosecution's Exh. No. 61, namely Klingelhoefer's participation in the execution of 46 persons by the Vorkommando Moscow. Klingelhoefer document No. 2, Exh. No. 2, proves in an absolutely clear manner that within the Vorkommando Moscow the defendant dealt exclusively with extensive intelligence tasks which were connected with the securing of valuable documents. The same affidavit, more precisely Klingelhoefer Exh. No. 2, Stresses moreover that additional work was assigned to the defendant in Smolensk within the framework of the Vorkommando Moscow, which was in the line of his intelligence activity and entailed important and extensive work for him. Among other things the evaluation of the discovered archives of the Communist Party pertained to this. The further statement contained in this Exhibit No. 2 submitted by Counsel for the Defense, according to which Klingelhoefer neither performed nor participated in an executive activity within the Vorkommando Moscow, is extraordinarily vital in this connection.

The Document No. NO-3143, Prosecution's Exh. No. 64, which was furthermore presented by the Prosecution against Klingelhoefer, cannot be as evidence for a contrary assumption. The sphere of tasks of the defendant always remained the same during the whole period he belonged to the Vorkommando Moscow. The reason for his being transferred to this unit was, of all things, the established fact that he had a good knowledge of the country and its population and that he was at the same time perfectly Conversant with the Russian language. These conditions rendered the defendant particularly qualified for the forementioned work within the Vorkommando Moscow. A simple, reasonable deliberation alone results in the opinion that it would have been a waste of valuable abilities to entrust the defendant with tasks which would have left his knowledge unused.

of two more documents, namely Prosecution's Exh. No. 60 and Prosecution's Exh. No. 63. The first of these documents is an Operational Situation Report dated 9 October 1941 in which the execution of 114 Jews by the VKM is reported. The second document is an Operational Situation Report dated 26 October 1941 in which a total number of 2457 persons executed by the Group Staff and the VKM is stated.

Despite these documents the facts remain the same: The defendant was in no manner involved in the reported executions. I already set forth in detail his actual occupation. As regards Prosecution's Exh. No. 60 I should also like to point to the fact that Klingelhoefer no longer belonged to the Vorkommando Moscow since middle of September 1941, but had been transferred to the Staff of Einsatzgruppe B. Of course, this transfer did not change anything in his occupation. accomplished by the documents it submitted. The contents of the documents are by no means sufficient for an establishment of the personal guilt of the defendant. On the other hand Klingelhoefer's actual occupation is unquestionably ascertained. The affidavit submitted by Counsel for the Defense as Klingelhoefer Document No. 2, confirms that the defendant's testimony on the stand corresponds to the truth. Therefore, it cannot be a question of a guilt of the defendant as set forth by the Prosecution. According to the Prosecution the defendant Klingelhoefer also was in command of the Vorkommando Moscow. This contention does not correspond to the facts in any way. In his affidavit of 2 July 1947, Prosecution Exh. No. 124, the defendant says very plainly on page one that he had deputy-command of the unit. It has been determined beyond a doubt that this deputy command could only have occurred from the end of August, i.e. after the recall of Prof. Dr. Six, the first commander of VKM, until about the middle of September 1941.

As I have already shown, the defendant was transferred to the staff of Einsatzgruppe B in the middle of September 1941. Here I am again referring to the Klingelhoefer Doc. No. 2, Exh. No. 2, pages 7 and 8 of the English and German document books. The defendant explains this deputyship in his affidavit of 17 September 1947, Klingelhoefer Doc. No. 3, in detail. Accordingly, it is shown that while he was appointed deputy commander in the VKM by Nebe who had just taken over the VKM, that this deputy command should only go into effect when Nebe was absent from his permanent office in Smolensk. However, in the approximately three weeks under consideration here, this never happened. In the Klingelhoefer Document No. 2, Exhibit No. 2, it is shown, in this connection, that the defendant was only appointed liaison officer for the VKM and that only in the Case Nebe was absent from Smolensk. It is shown beyond doubt that Nebe had taken the administration of the Vorkommando Moscow in to his own hands and that all clerks and specialists of the VKM were forced to turn directly to Nebe. Klingelhoefer's appointment as liaison officer was pure formality. Therefore the defendant never commanded the Vorkommando Moscow in any way, and he cannot be hold responsible for executions which occurred during the time he was assigned to the Vorkommando Moscow. The advance command, Group Staff, which the defendant actually commanded, had nothing more to do with the Vorkommando Moscow, as it developed under Major Koerting, the successor to Nebe. It was his job to prepare the initial security measures for the imminent march into Moscow. Here I am again referring to the Klingelhoefer Document No. 2. Besides this pure planning and office activity, the Vorkommando Gruppenstab under the command of Klingelhoefer did nothing. Furthermore, the Kommando was dissolved in December 1941 when it was seen that an entry into Moscow could no longer be counted on. The defendant was on furlough in Germany, from 2 December 1941 until 25 December 1941 when the dissolution occurred. Therefore it would he entirely incorrect if, by mistaking the Vorkommando (Group Staff) which was in Gshatsk, for the Vorkommando Moscow, one were to charge the defendant Klingelhoefer with the executions carried out by the latter Vorkommando.

I am convinced that a thorough examination of the evidence will not lead to that mistaken conclusion. Now, during his assignment in Russia, the defendant Klingelhoefer was given some tasks wherein his qualifications as an interpreter must be looked upon as the reason for his assignment. In all of those cases it was necessary to have someone who knew the Russian language, who could clear up the situation on the spot through the necessary inquiries and dealings with the civilian population. However, in all those cases the defendant never executed the Fuehrer order in the course of carrying out his task. This can already be seen from the fact that only the commander of an Einsatzkommando or a Sonderkommando would have teen authorized to carry out the Fuehrer Order. Now I shall examine these assignments in greater detail, insofar as it seems necessary, in view of the arguments of the Prosecution. was ordered by Einsatzgruppen Chief Naumann to carry out a reconnaissance of the Partisans near Krassnji, village about 40 km west of Smolensk. The position, movements and activity of a Partisan group in the forest near Krassnji were to be recomnoitered, to provide the necessary information for the Wehrmacht to fight this group. The reconnaissance was carried out in close collaboration with the local Wehrmacht headquarters in Krassnji. This fact shows clearly that in this case Klingelhoefer's main task was as an interpreter who, by questioning and examining the local civilian population, was to provide the necessary basis for the real purpose of the operation. It doesn't have to be pointed out that reconnaissance is a strictly military function and that Klingelhoefer was only of use here as an interpreter. Here I refer to the statement of the defendant on the witness stand on page 3827 of the English transcript. The result of the reconnaissance near Krassnji was negative, because the Partisans had evidently been warned and had therefore disappeared.

Klingelhoefer was given Another task by Naumann, the Chief of Einsatzgruppe B, in about the middle of December, 1942. According to this he was to conduct an investigation on the state farm Wissokoje which was near Smolensk Just in passing I want to mention that the task described under 1) above had occurred over 1/2 year before and that in the meanwhile the defendant Klingelhoefer had been busy working on and evaluating the files, as I have already described in detail earlier. Russians who had been trained in Germany as intelligence and sabotage troops and who were to be dropped by plane behind the Russian lines, were quartered on this state farm in Wissokoje. There had been a delay of about three weeks due to bad weather, which prevented the execution of this operation. During this period a kind of mutiny had broken out among the Russians, who were about 15 or 16 in number. Klingelhoefer's investigation showed that 2 or 3 of these Russians had threatened to report their comrades, who had different ideas than they who were ready to carry out their assignment, to the nearest NKWD station after they landed behind the Russian front. Klingelhoefer made a thorough report of this investigation and sent it to Einsatzgruppe B. He does not know what, if any, measures were taken against the 2 or 3 Russians as a result of his investigation, because he went to Germany on leave after making his final report. staff of Einsatzgruppe B in this case was because he spoke Russian fluently. It was only through him that a reliable investigation could be made, which as desired under all circumstances. Finally, one cannot overlook the fact that he was assigned to service in Russia as an interpreterrin the first place.

The incidents mentioned under subsections 1) and 2) are not contained in any of the documents the Prosecution has presented. The defendant has mentioned them in pursuing his intention always to tell the whole truth. The credibility of his statements is therefore not to be doubted. The defendant Klingelhoefer was given two more assignments like the ones just mentioned, one of which is mentioned in the Operational Situation Reports, while the other is only found in Klingelhoefer's own affidavit.

This last circumstance again affirms that the defendant expresses his love for the truth in every situation.

Einsatzgruppe Nebe, according to which, Klingelhoefer had to procure winter clothing for the Einsatzgruppe, that is, fur coats and fur linings. The Prosecution submits as evidence in this exhibit No. 124, that is, the affidavit of Klingelhoefer dated 2 July 1947 which was drawn up by the Prosecution's interrogator Wartenberg. This whole affidavit was expressly refuted by the defendant through a second affidavit that was made out before the sane official and countersigned by him. The Defense has submitted this 2nd affidavit dated 17 September 1947 as Klingelhoefer Document No. 3, Exh. No. 3. The reasons for the withdrawal can be seen from this document. As the defendant declared in explanation of this in the witness box, the above-mentioned interrogator of the Prosecution expressly afforded him the right to correct possible inaccuracies in his affidavit dated 2 July 1947 later, in a special new affidavit. That was the reason, too, why Klingelhoefer's affidavit dated 17 September 1947 was countersigned and accepted by the Interrogator Wartenberg. I refer here to page 3855 of the English record. An answer to the question as to why the defendant when he was first interrogated by Wartenberg was in a confused state of nerves can easily be found. If one considers how it must affect a person who throughout his life has done no wrong and is now startlingly confronted with the accusation of having cooperated in a criminal manner in the killing of a number of innocent people, it is clear that such a shock causes a profound reaction. This state of nerves of the defendant led, among other things, which the defendant has mentioned also on the witness stand and which are partly of a purely personal nature, to his attempted suicide, too. it is absolutely understandable if, in spite of the desire to speak the whole truth, he was not in a position to pay attention to the accuracy of the wording of a declaration submitted to him with the considered care that would otherwise characterize a healthy man in a normal condition.

The fault in this rests neither with the defendant nor the interrogator. If the interrogation had come after an improvement in the nervous condition of the defendant, then declarations would have been made by the latter readily which he would have had no occasion to withdraw and which he would today have had to leave unaltered for and against himself. His declaration in the first affidavit dated 2 July 1947 according to which he commanded the Vorkommando Group Staff until 2 Sept. 1942 may be cited merely to illustrate how little Klingelhoefer, in the case of the interrogation in question here, could actually survey the position during his stay in Russia. This quite obvious inaccuracy in a very essential point has been remedied at the instigation of the Prosecution. Exactly in the same way as this discrepancy arose, a series of further false assertions are contained in this declaration the objective inaccuracy of which was not noticed by the defendant when signing just because of his condition which gave rise to indifferences Because of the correction suggested by the Prosecution, the defendant Klingelhoefer has now, however, undertaken, on his own, a complete correction in the form of a new affidavit, while expressly withdrawing the original affidavit, which merely for technical reasons was only put down in writing and signed by him in the presence of Herr Wartenberg 14 days later, namely on 17 Sept. 1947. ally from the fact that Prosecution Exhibit No. 124, that is, the affidavit of Klingelhoefer dated 2 July 1947, must be eliminated in the evaluation of evidence by the honorable Tribunal. witness stand and in his 2nd only valid affidavit of happenings in Mstislawl and Tatarsk were to be discussed in detail once more. I should like to draw particular attention to one point only, however.

The shooting of the Jews in Mstislawl and Tatarsk took place on the sole responsibility of Hauptsturmfuehrer Noack. Noack received an express order to do it directly from the Chief of Einsatzgruppe B at that time, Nebe. Noack was the only commander to be considered for this since his special section was responsible for dealing with Jewish matters. The witness Vetter declared expressly in cross examination by the Prosecution that this very Noack was known even among the cirilian population as Commissioner for Jews. Page 5256 of the German, page 5165 of the English Record.

This unequivocal statement affords sufficient actual proof for the fact that Hauptsturmfuehrer Noack must have been encrusted with the carrying out of the executions of the Jews, otherwise, he would not have received such a title among the people. In the same way, the accuracy of the defendant Klingelhoefer's statements with reference to the description of events in Mstislawl and Tatarsk can be concluded from this: logically, this is also a confirmation of the fact that his statements relative to this on the witness stand correspond to the truth like his statements in the Document Klingelhoefer No. 3, Exh. No. 3. Consequently, it is also in conformity with the facts that the sole task of the defendant in Mstislawl and Tatarsk was to look after the supply of furs as a result of appropriate negotiations with the Russian mayors of these places. This task is merely in keeping, too, with his capacity as interpreter which made him appear suitable for this. cludes Klingelhoefer's order to investigate a report concerning the escape and mutiny of the Jews in the Ghetto in Tatarsk. For this the Prosecution has offered Document No. NO-3160 Exh. No. 65 as evidence. It is the Operational Situation Report No. 124 dated 25 Oct. 1941 in which it is reported that in Tatarsk, because of noncompliance with orders of the German Security Police, all male Jews as well as three women were shot.

makes it possible to conclude that the defendant Klingelhoefer was mixed up in this. Right from the start he freely admitted this. Furthermore it is to be stated that in the Operational Situation Reports submitted to the Honorable Tribunal as evidence in the case of actual executions of Jews in the sense of the Fuehrer Order, explanations are never given as to why these Jews were shot. The reason for this was the existing Fuehrer order and no further commentary was required. In this report, Prosecution Exh. No. 65, contrary to this other method, a detailed reason is given for the shooting of the Jews in which the fact is specially stressed that the non-compliance with the orders of the German Security Police resulted in the shooting. From this very circumstance which without doubt is striking it can be assumed that in these incidents it cannot be a question of execution of the Hitler Order in the sense of the Indictment. Now, the defendant Klingelhoefer gave a detailed description of the events on the witness stand which he confirmed as accurate on account of an investigation thoroughly carried out in Tatarsk. According to this, the cause of his being sent there was not to be looked for in the fact that an action against Jews was supposed to have been started by the Chief of Einsatzgruppe B, the cause of his commission was simply a report of the mayor in Tatarsk which the latter had sent to Einsatzgruppe B by a special messenger. This report contained the confirmation of the mayor that all Jews and Jewesses of the Ghetto in Tatarsk head left it and had threatened to kill the mayor of Tatarsk along with his police. Therefore, the mayor implored help and support in the quickest way, since he was no longer master of the situation. in connection with his order to procure furs. Therefore he knew the place and its surroundings. He knew the mayor, too, and, apart from that, because of his knowledge of the Russian language, was in a position to ascertain most accurately by direct contact, with those concerned in how far the report sent by the Russian mayor of Tatarsk corresponded to the true state of affairs.

It was therefore quite the obvious thing to dispatch the defendant to Tatarsk with the order to confirm it accordingly. Had an action against Jews been planned, then the defendant would have been out of place here, because no confirmation of any guilt and therefore no kind of investigations would have been required. Nobody would have been required who had command of the Russian language. Therefore it was merely a question of ascertaining by thorough investigations whether the Jews had, in fact, left the Ghetto and threatened the mayor, that is, whether they had violated the prohibition which was expressly imposed when the Ghetto was established, to leave the Ghetto without special permission, although death was threatened in the event of this violation. The interrogations actually carried out not merely confirmed this state of affairs but reveal ever and beyond that that the Jews had sought contact with the partisans and established it. Support and strengthening of the partisans was likewise threatened with death by an Armed Forces Decree. Then he arrived in Tatarsk the defendant Klingelhoefer was only able to seize 30 more male Jews, while a considerably larger number of women and children could still be arrested. According to the interrogations these 30 Jews represented only a relatively small proportion of male Jews previously to be found in the Ghetto, By far the greater proportion of male Jews had fled and, according to the statements of the mayor, of the remaining Jews, and of the Jewish women who were interrogated, had joined the partisans, who, as we know from experience, were hiding in the pathless woods which expended close, up to Tatarsk. It was extablished, in particular, that before the Jews escaped from the Ghetto, three Jewish women had already contacted the partisans, that these three women had returned to the Ghetto again and had goaded on the male Jews to escape from the Ghetto and to join the partisans. Therefore, it had been planned in advance that a small proportion of the male Jews was to remain in Tatarsk together with the women and children to support the partisans as spies and informers by means of informations about the German Forces.

This plan, as a result of the remaining behind of the previously mentioned 30 Jews, had thus been practically carried out. with the partisans had been established. The Jews who had joined the partisans had undoubtedly told them that a part of their men had volunteered for espionage services and, the willingness to support the partisans which had actually taken place, constituted a menace to security, to be regarded as absolutely serious, and therewith, a violation of the afore-mentioned Wehrmacht decree. In connection with the escape from the Ghetto and in view of the threat to the mayor, the defendant Klingelhoefer had to consider it justified to carry out the capital punishment as threatened in the provisions of the security police. The allegation of the Prosecution that the Jews were concentrated in the Ghetto only for the reason that in this manner it was easier to shoot them, is not true. Against this, one must point to the fact that the Fuehrer Order, the wording of which had already been changed at that time, had already beer, carried out by Noack in Tatarsk, since at that time he had executed the old Jews and those unfit for work in accordance with the direct order by Nebe, mentioned before under paragraph 1). The defendant Klingelhoefer had no order to carry out the Fuehrer Order, neither did he have an order to shoot the Tatarsk Jews under all circumstances. It was his task to order an execution as punishment only then if it was to be established that the Jews had actually acted in violation of the security police regulations. Consequently, the defendant ordered those Jews to be executed whom, on the basis of his thorough interrogation, he had to regard as offenders of the security police regulations.

He arranged that the rest of them, and those were the women and children, be returned to the Ghetto as not guilty. Three Jewesses, however, had also to be found guilty as the instigators of these offenses. One cannot accuse the defendant of the fact that he has failed to mention the shooting of these three Jewesses in his affidavit. When questioned as a witness in his own defense he himself declares to this effect that he forgot them. One ought to believe him without hesitation in regard to this facto There would be no reason for the defendant to admit frankly the execution of 30 Jews and consciously conceal the shooting of three women. In both eases the defendant had to regard the executions as necessary and also justified on the basis of the existing regulations. He therefore had no reason for withholding the facts about the last mentioned execution. Neither could one imagine the reason that precisely three women only were subjected to execution, while a considerable number of Jewish women and children were returned unharmed to the Ghetto, if there had not been special charges against these three Jewesses which justified their shooting. As I have already mentioned before, the wording of the pertinent Operational Situation Report is not in contradiction to this either. On the contrary, it corroborates in a brief form the most important statements made by Kingelhaefer For the charges of violating the regulations of the security police or, as it is expressed in the report, "not complying with the orders of the German Security Police", could be interpreted in no other way but non-compliance with the order to leave the Ghetto only with permission and, to refrain from any contact with the partisans. If the rest of the details were omitted in the report it is not the defendants fault. It has not been ascertained as to how the Operational Situation Report No. 124, Prosecution Exhibit No. 165 came about in regard to the. point here in question. It may have been made on the basis of a report by Nebe and abbreviated accordingly, the reason for the shooting of the Jews nevertheless having still been preserved.

It may be left in the balance to determine what actually happened. Only of importance is the fact that the contents of the report are in no way contradictory to the defendant's statement made as a witness in his own defense. A contrary conception would only constitute a literal and forced interpretation of the report and would by no means do justice to the real circumstances about which only the defendant has given, and was able to give, the true explanations. the defendant Klingelhoefer has never been ordered to execute the Fuehrer Order, neither previously nor later on, according to which he rather was constantly occupied with the preparation and utilization of documents, by making use of his knowledge of languages, and in view of his clearly proven zeal for the truth, Prosecution Document NO-3160, Exh.

65 can by no means be used as evidence against him or against his statements. in this case too, the defendant has not contributed to the execution of the Fuehrer order but has acted by applying the regulations which were in force at that time. That he also was personally convinced of the lawfulness of his actions must be believed without hesitation. Control Council law No. 10. In my closing speech on behalf of the defendant Steimle I have already explained the nature and extent of the legal objections which may be raised against the application of this law. In this connection I have es pecially emphasized those parts of Control Council Law No. 10 which establish a now law that, in view of the generally recognized principles of law, cannot be applied in this ease either. I have especially pointed to a number of forms of participation which do not exist in the continental criminal law and especially not in the German criminal law. It is irrefutable that the defendant Klingelhoefer, during the period decisive in this connection, was only subject to German criminal law. The judgment of his conduct can and must only be passed on the basis of the circumstances prevailing at that time. This applies to the actual circumstances as much as to the legal system he was subject to. article II, paragraph 2c to 2e of the Control Council Law No. 10, could be applied in this case, the result would likewise be that, on the basis of' these provisions, the defendant had not become guilty either. No evidence could be produced against him that, by giving his consent, he had participated in the commission of any sort of crimes or that he was involved in any way in the preparation and execution of such crimes. His position within the Einsatzgruppe B and its affiliated organizations was always asubordinate one.

His position was not even outwardly connected with the crimes which the men in the dock have been charged with by the Prosecution In the same way he cannot be regarded, in the sense of Article II, paragraph 2e, as a member of a group or organization which were involved in the commission of the aforementioned crimes, With reference to this point I particularly like to refer to the statements which I made in this connection in my final plea on behalf of the defendant Steimle. The legal and factual conditions, cited there, which could made the defendant a member in this sense are in no way present in the case of Klingelhoefer. On the basis of an order from his superior office he had to perform his assigned duty as an interpreter and specialist on reporting, the nature of which has been described in detail, and it did not matter in this respect whether he was willing to do this or not. The defense has produced evidence for the fact that even the missions ho was to carry out and which in a few cases took him outside of his office, were absolutely within the scope of his assigned duty as an interpreter. During the period of his service in Russia it could hive never occurred to the defendant through his activity that his work constituted a necessary chain in the realization of crimes or the promotion of such crimes. In consideration of his general attitude he would have never included this result into his intentions if at all he had thought of such a result. unless evidence has been produced to the contrary. This proof must preclude any reasonable doubt. The evidence produced by the Prosecution does not meet this demand. The personality of the defendant Klingelhoefer and the facts which can be gathered from his development are clear proof of his decent and honest character. On this basis he hrs performed his assigned duty and, owing to his personality, he was not put into the position by his superior to argue about orders the execution of which he would have regarded as incompatible with his conscience. I am convinced that the Tribunal, in judging the case of Klingelhoefer, will arrive at the conclusion that the defendant is not to be found in any way of crimes against humanity end war crimes.

either as a perpetrator or participant.

According to Count 3 of the Indictment. the defendant Klingelhoefer is furthermore accused of his activity in the SD and in Section VI of the Reich Main Security Office. It is beyond doubt that he was a member of the general SS, a member of the SS-Special formations and the SD since 1934 and furthermore belonged to Section VI of the Reich Main Security Office. In respect to this point I again. refer to my explanation in the final plea on behalf of the defendant Steimle. During his activity in the aforementioned formations and in Section VI the defendand had never even the slightest possibility to presume that these organizations were used for criminal purposes. The Einsatzgruppen and their branch organizations could not convey to him such an opinion either because in front areas they were under the control of the army commanders. which was also expressly acknowledged by the International Military Tribunal, and, because as units of a special character, they could not make him think that their activity would some time in the future be imputed solely to the SD. Having once been a monitor of the SD. the defendant was no longer in a position, especially in times of war, to decide by himself about his future assignment, since he was subject to the orders of his superiors. It must be left to the judgment of the Tribunal to what extent a personal guilt can be ascribed to the defendant Klingelhoefer with reference to Count 3 of the Indictment. By judging the fateful events of that time this guilt cannot be a grave one by any means.

Mr. President. to remind the Tribunal once more of the words I have spoken at the beginning, and to express the request not to forget the broad scope within which the events took place which were here presented to the Tribunal by the Prosecution.

Only a fraction of the great number of officers who served in the Einsatzgruppen is present here in the dock. They must not necessarily be those who are the ones really responsible for these things. others whose orders they had to comply with as soldiers. I an convinced that the Tribunal, in consideration of all these circumstances, will come to a just decision.

DR. FRITZ (For Defendant Fendler): Your Honor, Honorable Judges! Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos, besides their other tasks, to commit acts which doubtlessly violated the recognized laws and customs of war as well as humanity. The obligation towards the great number of innocent persons who fell victims to this order may be the cause for some persons to believe a collective responsibility and a vicarious liability to be justified. But nothing must be allowed to prevent us lawyers from examining in a dispassionate and objective manner the question of criminal responsibility of each of these defendants. to lead to the result that he did not participate in any way either in the planning or in the execution of this order and that no punishable membership in any criminal organization can be laid to his charge. legal view of mine. committed, between May 1941 and July 1943, as an officer and deputy chief of Einsatzkommando 4b, crimes against humanity as defined in Article II, par. 1c of Control Council Law No. 10. He is charged furthermore, in Count II of the indictment, with having committed simultaneously, by these same acts, between 22 June 1941 and July 1943, war crimes as defined in Article II, par.

lb of the sane law. He is finally charged, in Count III of the Indictment with having been a member of the SS and the SD after 1 September 1939, - Organizations which have been declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal (IMT). to these proceedings, I positively object to the juridical view of the Prosecution that it could not be expected to assume the full burden of proof for its charges - also in the case of Fendler.1) If, after mature deliberation I decided to put my client on the witness stand, I did not 1) See transcript of 29 September 1947, English version page 57, German version page 63. do it in order to assume in thisway the burden of proof, but in order to offer the Tribunal the possibility of convincing itself that Fondler's work and appearance in the East does not have to shun the light. The burden of proof for his alleged criminal culpability rested solely with the Prosecution. To be sure, the latter used a total of seven documents1) for the support of the charges contained in the Indictment, but it did not produce, as it should have done, the proof in any of these counts. 1) Doc. 3) But this interpretation is false, For Fondler, under No. 3 of his affidavit only stated, and I quote:

"within the Special Commando, (Sonderkommando 4b) I was, Hermann, the senior officer.

I have never been officially designated as a deputy of Hermann:

I have, however, taken charge of official matters during his absence". in no way be construed to the effect that Fondler ever was "deputy chief of Sonderkommando 4b". The Einsatzkommando 4b did not have any deputy commando leader, as, by the way, was the case with various Einsatzkommandos and at times even with Einsatzgruppe D.1) Fendler was neither designated as deputy nor did he ever have this function.

This is shown by the affidavits ofHeyer2) raid Martens3) and, above all by the one of Koenig4) who was with the Einsatzkommando 4b during the whole of the assignment of the defendant Fondler, who worked together with Fondler and therefore knows the conditions precisely.

Among other things Koenig stated and I quote:

In the further course of my elaborations I intend to treat in more detail the professional trading of my client. Neither was he trained in executive work now was he ever entrusted with executive tasks. He therefore was not competent to give instructions to the chief of Section IV, who was an export in executive tasks. As can be gathered unequivocally from the affidavits of Schoenborn, Hanke, Pfoser and Koenig, Fondler, owing to his correct and reserved nature, was in no way inclined to meddle on his own initiative in affairs for which he was not authorized. These facts too lend credibility to his statements. It would not be sound to point out his rank of service alone in this connection. For in case of an objective non-competency, the missing authorization cannot be automatically compensated for by a higher rank in the service. It rather would have been the task of the Prosecution to furnish the proof that Fondler had the full power of command even in one single case during the Kommando leader's absence, and thus had the possibility of giving appropriate instructions to the executive. But on this point the Prosecution did not challenge the statement of my client in cross-examination but rather evidently accepted the correctness of his description. Only in the rebuttal the Prosecution produced the affidavit of Karl Hennicke, dated 4 September 1947. Among other things, Hennicke declares in this affidavit that the Einsatzkommando 4 b had first been commanded Braune. But, as Fritz Braune did not arrive until after Hermann had been relieved, the Einsatzkommando 4 b had been without a chief for a period of 2 - 3 weeks. During this interval, he says, the Kommando had been under Fondler's charge. In gross contradiction to this statement, Hennicke has declared in another affidavit, and I quotes:

"It is not known to me that Fendler was the deputy of the Kommando leader; he did not appear as such in reports or in group conferences."

End of quotation. Finally, Hennicke expressly revoked, in a third affidavit, the statements he made on this point in his affidavit of 4 September 1947. The complete falseness of his statement in the affidavit of 4 September 1947 results alone from the fact that Fendler left the Einsatzkommando 4 b for good already before Kommando leader Hermann. On the other hand, the correctness of Fendler's statements in underlined by the fact that -- at least during the entire period of Fendler's assignment -- there was no need for a deputy because Kommando leader Hermann, during the time from the beginning of July until early October 1941, was neither ill nor absent for any other reason from Einsatzkommando 4 b for any length of time, In this connection I refer to the affidavits of Koenig and Martens as well as to the statement of my client in direct examination. After all this, there is no need for any further evidence that Hennicke's affidavit of 4 September 1947 is in no way apt to prove the assertion by the Prosecution that Fendler in several cases had assumed the functions of a deputy leader of the Einsatzkommando 4 b, or to disprove the contrary statement of my client which is identical with the statements of several witnesses. When the Prosecution presented the case of the defendant Fendler in the session of 30 September 1947, it referred to four Reports of Events in all. As far as concerns Document NO-2830, the Prosecution pointed out that the Einsatzkommando 4 b had killed 186 persons in Poltava, and that Fendler had also been in Poltava. On the other hand, the main trial has clearly proved that Fendler at that time was not at all with the Einsatzkommando 4 b, but was already back in Berlin at that time. This fact emerges unequivocally from the affidavits of Heyer, Koenig, Feder, Haefner, Hennicke, Schulz and Brass as well as from the statement of the defendant Fendler as a witness in his own case.

Therefore, these documents must be left out of consideration when judging Fendler's case. The other three Reports of Events -- Doc. NO-2938, NO-2934, and NO-3155 disclose among other things that Einsatzkommando 4 b has carried out executions in Tarnopol as well as in Krementschug. As the defendant Fendler stated in his own affidavit, that he had been in these places with the Einsatzkormmando 4 b, the Prosecution obviously thinks it has sufficiently proved his participation in these executions. I could not agree with this view of the Prosecution even if it were certain that the only task of the Einsatzkommandos consisted in the destruction of certain groups of persons. Even though I am forced to admit to my greatest regret that it has become evident in the course of this trial that, in compliance with an inhuman order by the Fuehrer, this was one of the tasks of the Einsatzkommandos, on the other hand the evidence has proved just as clearly that the Einsatzkommando also had other tasks to fulfill, Let me remind you of the fight against the partisans and the tasks which were purely within the domain of the Security Police. This results alone from the fact that the Einsatzkommando did not only consist of officers and enlisted men who had been trained in executive tasks, but for example also had experts of the Intelligence Service. Thus there were also specialists (Referenten) assigned to the Einsatzgruppen who merely dealt with intelligence tasks. I have proved by affidavits and by my client's statement as a witness in his own case, that he too, owing to his exclusive training, was only assigned and active as an intelligence expert. When Fendler was a young student and looking for employment in order to earn some money so as to be able to continue his studies he came to the SD by chance without even having had any knowledge of its existence at that time.

Owing to new economic difficulties he was unable later on to continue his studies and therefore remained with the SD. At first, i. e. from 1936 onward, he was employed with the then main sector (SD Oberabschnitt) Southeast in Breslau. from April 1937, he was consultant (Referent) for industrial counter-intelligence in the then SD regional sector (Unterabschnitt) Breslau. From March 1939 until the end of 1940 he was head of the SD Office in Olomouc. Towards the end of 1940 he became a candidate for the executive service and hence left the professional work of the SD, was transferred to office I of the Reich Main Security Office and began to study jurisprudence. The candidates for the executive service were ordered to the war theatre in the Fast an bloc at the end of May 1941. In Pretzsch Fendler was assigned to Einsatzkommando 4 b which had been formed there; therefore, he did not volunteer for this assignment by any means. According to his training Fendler was appointed III-specialist already in Pretzsch by the Kommando leader. That is quite natural because he was the only intelligence expert in the Komando. From the affidavits of Hennicke, Heyer, Martens and Koenig it can be seen that the Einsatzkommando 4 b did have a section III. In these affidavits it is explained in every detail which tasks belonged to the individual detailed duties of the defendant Fendler in his capacity as chief of this section.

Fendler has also commented on it in his direct examination. He described that it was his duty to gather and evaluate in the individual villages touched by the Einsatzkommando 4 b the information needed for his reports on political, national and economic conditions of Russia gained from the population and from files found by him. In reading the Reports on Events one can see in what detail these reports have been made. I particularly refer to the example in Fendler Doc. No. 22. If we consider that for these tasks he only had one associate and one interpreter at his disposal, his statement that his working capacity was completely taken up by these tasks seems utterly credible.

Fendler therefore was departmental chief III and never and in no way was active in the executive of the Kommando, i. e. Section IV, which was a completely independent department. Neither did he cooperate with this section by his reporting which did not deal at all with executive matters. For its own purposes, the executive maintained a separate Police Intelligence Service. If I said above that Fendler's working capacity was completely taken up by his activity as III-specialist, this naturally does not exclude his having been entrusted now and then in individual cases with one or the other military task, owing to the fact that Einsatzkommando 4 b was operating in the front-line area. But neither did these tasks, which I now intend to treat in detail, have anything to do with the executive. Thus he was also liaison officer with the 49th Mountain Army Corps. Only once did he become active in this capacity, namely in Trembovla, as he stated in his direct examination. At that time, upon instructions by the Kommando leader, he had established contact with the G-1 of this Army Corps and had obtained approval for the further advance of the Einsatzkommando 4 b. Finally, Fendler has twice been in charge of a small Vorkommando. According to orders, both times the main task of these Vorkommandos was to find quarters for the immediately following Kommando and to get the supplies ready. In the course of the main trial upon a corresponding question by the presiding judge, Fendler had the opportunity of giving detailed information on this matter. In these cases he was billeting officer and by no means the leader of a Teilkommando. I particularly emphasize this, especially during the period of Fendler's assignment, the Einsatzkommando 4 b, in contrast to other Einsatzkommandos, always operated as a compact unit under the leadership of the Kommando chief and hence was not divided into independent Teilkommandos.

This, by the way, was also one reason why sections III and IV in Einsatzkommando 4 b were able to operate independently from one another. Fendler's own statement on this matter, given in direct examination is confirmed by the declarations in the affidavits of Koenig and Heyer. Thus I have proved that, during the entire period of his assignment in the East, my client did not make himself liable to punishment -as a principal in the sense of Article II, paragraph 2 a of Control Council Law No. 10. He never had the full power of command, which was always in the hands of Kommando leader Hermann, he never worked in the executive, he did not participate in any execution and he did not commit any other action which would fulfill the provisions of this law. Neither has he been an accessory in the perpetration of such acts, nor did he order or incite them (Article II, paragraph 2 b of the Control Council Law). For I have proved that Fendler did not collaborate in executions or other inhuman actions either as III-specialist or as liaison officer or as chief of the Vorkommando. Moreover, my client did not give his "consent" to these acts in the sense of Article II, paragraph 2 c of the Control Council Law.

mando 4 b, which was involuntary, must be considered as consent. In the POHL verdict the Military Tribunal No. II has commented on this matter as follows and I quote:

"There is an element of positive conduct implicit in the word consent.

Certainly, as used in the ordinance it means something more than not dissenting."

End of quota But FENDLER never showed such a positive attitude.

He neither was chief of the Kommando nor deputy chief nor leader of the executive section, As III-specialist he was not in a position to give any instructions to Section IV, nor did he ever do this, He therefore neither had the power nor the authority to order executions or to prevent their being carried out. According to the decision of Military Tribunal No. II in the POHL Trial, FENDLER therefore was not a person whose "knowledge of the fact coupled with silence could be interpreted as consent." some other way. On the contrary, FENDLER has told us, in the course of his direct examination, that he had objected to inhuman actions. From what has been said so far it is clear that he was not "connected" with the carrying out of the acts in the sense of Article II, par. 2 d of the Control Council Law.

In the POHL verdict it is said and I quote:

"It (i.e. being connected with a crime) means something organization with the principals or accessories."

End ledge of the executions, which, by the way, he denied for the time of his membership in Einsatzkommando 4 b, this would not be sufficient to punish him in application of this provision of the law. For, as correctly stated in the same passage of the POHL verdict, "being connected" with a crime means more than mere knowledge.

executions. Considering the fret that before the start of the Russian campaign he was not employed at all in the SD but was a student of law; that is so obvious that I probably can spare myself going into any details. Only several years later (1943), after the conclusion of his studies, did he resume his intelligence activity in a relatively subordinate position in the Reich Main Security Office. His direct examination proved that he, not being Kommando leader and not holding any high rank, was not present when STRECKENBACH announced the Fuehrer order in Pretzsch. Hence he did not even know at the beginning of his assignment that the Einsatzkommandos would be ordered to exterminate certain groups of persons in the East. In this connection permit me to refer to the other results of the hearing of evidence. experiences as an SD-specialist during assignments in the Sudetenland and in Czechoslovakia.

I summarize my above elaborations as follows: ishment, during the three months he belonged to the Einsatzkommando 4 b as an intelligence officer and was assigned in the East. An assumption, based solely on his membership in Einsatzkommando 4 b, that he participated in the incriminating acts is not supported by the unequivocal result of the hearing of evidence. of false deductions and assumptions on the basis of a generalization. But such a procedure would have nothing to do with a judicial evaluation of the result of the hearing of evidence. For, in the course of the main trial, it has again and again been shown how varied and different were the conditions in the Einsatzkommandos and hence those applying to the defendants.

the evidence submitted by me, will also arrive at the conclusion that FENDLER is not guilty on Counts I and II. the SS on Documents NO-4144 and NO-4958. The latter document is FENDLER's personnel SS-form. It is true that this document gives the 15 April 1933 as the date of his joining the SS. But the defendant FENDLER has supplemented his affidavit - Document NO-4144 - the the direct examination as follows: that in 1933 he became only a candidate for the General-SS. As he had not done any service in the SS during the following years, he had been struck again from the list of candidates.

Hence, he never has been a member of the General-SS. Only by his joining the SD in the spring of 1936 he became a member of the SS, namely of the Special Formation (Sonderformation) SD. phasize that at that time he was 23 years old and had no political experience whatever. But his joining took place at a time and under conditions which exclude any knowledge of the criminal tasks and activities of the SD. He neither participated in the crime of the SD established by the IMT, nor did he hold any positions which would nave been bound to give him any knowledge of these events. trary. fice I of the Reich Security Main Office. But, as I already said, he did not perform any professional work for the SD in these years because, during this period, he was studying law and subsequently got his further legal training with the agencies of interior administration. the proof that FENDLER, during his membership in Office VI, had committed any criminal acts or had obtained any knowledge of such. The defendants STEIMLE and SANDBERGER as well as FENDLER himself have described in detail what tasks were incumbent on Office VI.

Moreover, I have produced the evidence by affidavits that my client was entrusted in the Office VI, in his limited position as Section Chief, exclusively with the gathering and evaluation of information, but did not have to make or did make any political decisions. Even as it is still done today, each state at that time employed certain civil servants who had to carry out such an activity. The same evidence shows that FENDLER did not gain any knowledge of the fact that criminal acts were committed in other sections of this office. Russia and later on in Berlin he gained knowledge of the acts of the Einsatzkommandos which are indicted here. But this knowledge does not constitute any punishable membership in a criminal organization. The Einsatzkommandos in the East did not belong to the organization of the Reich Main Security Office. They were not parts of it, particularly not of the Intelligence Organization SD (Offices III and VI). They rather were para-military mobile units of a special kind, subordinate to the Wehrmacht Commanders of the respective areas of assignment. of members of the Intelligence Organization SD. In the same manner as FENDLER, they were entrusted with intelligence tasks which are not the subject of the indictment. In consideration of these facts and of his own experiences FENDLER could not, from his knowledge of the activity of the Einsatzkommandos, draw any conclusion as to a criminal purpose or crimes committed by his organization-namely the Intelligence Service SD. mit crimes does in no way suffice per so to prove a criminal membership in this organization. And this even less so because these acts were committed quite independently of the organization (Intelligence Service SD) and in the course of the execution of tasks not belonging to this organization and under orders not coming from this organization(namely in the Einsatzkommandos). would remain incomprehensible inasmuch as it expressly ascertains the participation of the criminal police and the regular police in the Einsatzgruppen, nevertheless does not declare either of them to be a criminal organization.

i.e.during and after the period of his assignment in the East - was a member of Office I of the Reich Main Security Office, which definitely was not declared to be criminal by the IMT. for FENDLER to leave the SD during the war. In the course of the trial it has repeatedly been mentioned that the members of the SD, including FENDLER, had already been declared indispensable to the SD before the war. Hence, this happened already at a time which, according to the IMT verdict, is not relevant to the criminal character of the SD. In the IMT verdict as well as in the POHL verdict it has been unequivocally established that those members of an organization who were called or compelled to membership by the State must not be punished. pelled by the State to remain in such an organization. But this was the case with my client, as has already been said. Martial Law, he had to follow the order attaching him to Office VI of the Reich Main Security Office after the termination of his legal studies in September 1943. Hence, his membership in this office was likewise not a voluntary one. member of the SS only by his joining the SD. Hence, there was no independent membership in the SS. It merely was the purely formal consequence of his membership in the SD and therefore cannot at all be considered as a separate fact.

is also not guilty according to Count III.

As regards the defendant FENDLER's personality, the following is to be said: that all the participants in the trial must have gained the conviction that, in the course of his examination-be it by the Presiding Judge, by Mr. HOCHWALD or by me - he told the truth and endeavored to give us an exhaustive description of his entire activity in the SD, including the work in Einsatzkommando 4 b. It must be added that his description tallies with the contents of the numerous documents submitted by me. It is not surprising therefore, that the Prosecution has not succeeded in casting any doubt on his credibility. I refer only to the affidavits of BRASS, SUESSMUTH and BARTL which described FENDLER as a straighforward and clean character. Also for this reason it can and must be assumed that he told the truth here when he was under oath. tolerant man, who never was a political fanatic but rather distinguished himself by a particular readiness to help even those who were persecuted for political or racial reasons. Not one of these witnesses who have known FENDLER rather well for years - be it in the service or outside of it - believe him to be capable of participating in the acts which led to this trial. Through my dealing with this case, which now already has lasted for a half a year, and has frequently brought me in touch with FENDLER, I have come to the same conviction and I hope that also the Tribunal has gained this impression of my client. ing at 9:30.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 11 February 1948, at 0930 hours.)

Michael A. Musmanno, presiding.

THE MARSHAL: Persons in the courtroom will please find their seats.

Military Tribunal II is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

DR. ASCHENAUER: I would like to ask that the defendant Ohlendorf be excused from attendance in court this afternoon and he be brought to Room 57. There are a few matters, final words and remaining matters, to discuss with him.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Ohlendorf will be excused from attendance in court this afternoon and will be taken to Room 57 so that he may there confer with his counsel.

DR. ASCHENAUER: Thank you, sir.

THE PRESIDENT: You are welcome.

DR. MAYER: Dr. Erich M. Mayer for Braune. mention that in order to save time I shall omit the introductory remarks which are contained in my written plea. I ask the Tribunal to take notice of them from the written copy. I shall start directly in medias Res.

1.) War crimes and crimes against humanity according to Control Council Law No. 10 of 20 December 1945 and committed during the time between May 1941 and Jane 1943.

2) Membership after 1 September 1939 in organizations declared criminal by IMT judgment: that is

b) Offices III, VI or VII of RuSHA,

c) Office IV of RuSHA. The details of this accusation are contained in the indictment, the Opening Statement of the Prosecution and Prosecution Documents with which I have dealt in detail and in a factual way in my Trial Brief. I refer in this respect to my statements there. not even that one single man was tortured by my client or by members of his Kommando or that the slightest destruction had been committed by him or his Kommando. He and his troops neither classified helpless civilians as Partisans or Partisan-supporters only to execute then, nor did they annihilate the sick or the insane from hospitals and asylums. I refer in this respect to the statements of Dr. ASCHENAUER in his final plea. One cannot charge my client with the report of 23 March 1943 since already at the beginning of March he went on a furlough to the Reich with Herr OHLENDORF, and thus was not even in the Crimea at that time. Furthermore the document does not prove that executions took place south of the Karasubasar. The whole report, as shown by the document covers the area of the entire Eilnsatzgruppe.

"South of Karasubasar" refers only to reconnaissance for the purpose of preparing larger Wehrmacht operations, but doesnot refer to the clearly separated next paragraph which, without mentioning a definite locality, speaks of the shooting of 500 Gypsies and insane persons. and executed the selected men.

Here, too, I refer to the final plea of Dr. ASCHENAUER Even if there had been prisoner of war camps in the Crimea and if a selection had taken place it would not concern my client. Einsatz Order No. 14 of 29 October 1941 and its enclosure are the only things the defendant knew about this matter. It says in this document on page 94:

"According to the size of the camps located in their zone of an SS officer."

page 101:"The leaders of the Sonderkommandos will submit a short report to the chief of their Einsatzgruppe every week."

page 102:"The chief of their Einsatzgruppen decide on the suggestions Sonderkommandos the corresponding orders."

In other words, the defendant had nothing to do with the selection and the execution. is meant by this term. The persons who were arrested by the Kommando of the defendant were arrested under the suspicion of punishable acts during the investigation were either convicted of a criminal act and consequently punished Dr freed. The following paragraph I would also like to omit and ask that you would kindly look at it in the written copy, in particular ason Page 15 I am discussing this question again. them out, nor did they set up ghettos. Villages were not burned down by him nor hostages shot. Pertaining to the plundering with which he has been charged, I refer to the final plea of Dr. ASCHENAUER. Gypsies, communist functionaries, saboteurs and partisans. under oath that his Kommando, after incontestable conviction or in combat, shot Jews, Gypsies and communist functionaries according to a decree by the supreme war lord and lawmaker Adolf HITLER, as well as plunderers, saboteurs and Partisans according to the regulations of theCommander-in-Chief of the Army as the exponent of the executive power. cution for racial, political or religious reasons and that they intended even less the annihilation of whole sections of the population, as the Prosecution claims.

saboteurs and Partisans. They were shot according to the regulations issued by the Commander-in-chief of the Army in his capacity as the exponent of the executive power. plunderers, saboteurs and Partisans with the death sentence. All belligerent groups and nations have at all tines threatened and executed the sane death sentence for such criminal acts within the areas of operation. point to "Ordinance No. 1 of the American Military Government, Germany Supreme Commanders' Area of Control", which threatens the death penalty for twenty different actions.

Among the regulated crimes worthy of death I mention: "Wilful interference with, destruction or concealment of records or archives of any nature, public or private" or "Wilfully interfering with or misleading any member of a person acting under the authority of the Allied Forces in the performance of his duties" (No. 17 of the ordinance). Under No. 20 of this very ordinance considers sufficient for the pronouncement of the death sentence:

"Any other violation of the laws of war or act in aid of the enemy or endangering the security of the Allied Forces." the American Military Government represents the result of existing customs of war. shot were without exception guilty of acts which had been threatened with the death penalty by decree of the Wehrmacht. The defendant, and before him his superior OHLENDORF, testified to this credibly. The prosecution has not been able to prove the opposite.

evaluation the "Closing Brief" of the Prosecution unfortunately forces me to a statement. It contains so many objective falsehoods, distortions, imputations without foundation and false quotations that I cannot let it go unanswered.

cution in its opening statement against the defendant

1.) placed his subkommandos to Kertsch and Feodosie (transcript page 243);

2.) charged executions that were carried out by the entire Einsatzgruppe to Kommando 11 b;

3.) male 7-8000 people shot out of 7-800;

4.) charged the defendant with (having given his execution kommandos the order to shoot, which he never gave;

5.) made the defendant a member of the general SS; the defendant while in the witness stand declared those incorrectnesses to be errors

6.) When he was on the witness stand the prosecution charged him with having shot 15-20,000 persons, while the document mentions 15002000 persons; the prosecution then refrained from presenting this document. nesses:

7.) The prosecution calls Dr. BRAUNE "Commander-in-Chief".

8.) It claims that at Odessa Dr. BRAUNE denied that his kommando carried out executions, although Dr. BRAUNE was never charged with those neither through documents nor during the examination, and although he proved, on the contrary, that he prevented the shooting of tens of thousands of Jews in Odessa.

9.) The prosecution charges him with having carefully avoided comment on the shooting of 800 gypsies and insane people, although the prosecution did not charge the defendant with this document; neither in the indictment, nor in the opening speech of the prosecution, nor in the witness stand, the reason being, as one can see from the evidence; that Dr. BRAUNE together with OHLENDORF went on a vacation at the beginning of March while those shootings were reported as having taken place on March 23rd.

On 29 September Mr. FERENCZ answered a question of Dr. GAWLIKS:

"At that time we will refer back to the documents already received and point out exactly how each defendant is connected with that document." presented against BRAUNE nor wasit mentioned in the beginning of volume III D under "responsibility of the defendant BRAUNE". There was therefore no reason for me to refer to it daring my examination. Wehrmacht carried out those executions although I did not ask Dr. BRAUNE a single question concerning this complex, because it has nothing to do with Dr. BRAUNE. The following Point 11 I shall omit because the translation department has assured me that there had been a mistake in the translation by the translation departments and the prosecution took up this mistake. I think that the matter is cleared up. that it wasnot a matter of underclothing but a matter of outer clothing. While in the witness stand the defendant could prove that no incrimination can be derived from document NOKW 1863 (document book III D of the prosecution) which is an operational order of 12 January 43 based on an Army order and issued by the defendant for the combing of the city of Simferopol in search of untrustworthy elements; and that document NOKW 584, concerning the attitude of Major "RIESEN to the retaliation action in Eupatoria of 7 January 1942 Which had been ordered by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army could not be charged against the defendant, since in this case guerillas and snipers were shot which action constituted a retaliation permissible under the articles of war, and which had been ordered by the holder of the executive power, Field Marshal won MANSTEIN.

following incriminating facts against the defendant: It simply mixed the two documents NOKW 1863, and, in a completely non-sensical manner it declares that the responsibility for the execution at Eupatoria, on 7 January 1942 of 1184 suspects of partisan activity becomes apparent through the operational order for the combing of Simferopol of 12 January 1942. This seems unreasonable because the execution of the 1184 snipers took place on 7 January 1942, whereas the order for the combing of Simferopol, which is 100 km away from Eupatoria was given on 12 January 1942, i.e. 5 days after the happenings in Eupatoria. In this manner the prosecution succeeds in making it appear as if the execution of 11814 persons was the result of the combing of Simferopol, whereas in reality not one execution, indeed, not even any arrest can be seen from the combing order.

But this is not all:

Document NOKW 1863 states quite clearly: under Figure 4:

The city will be divided up in 6 tactical divisions......division leaders are: 1st division: 1st lieutenant IIIrd " captain IVth " " Vth " " VIth " " In accordance with this the defendant explained in the direct examination.

"On page 2 it can be seen that the city was divided into 6 districts and all these six districts during that action were under the charge of an Army officer. That is What actually happened in these districts during that action was done under the command of an Army officer".

And during the cross examination the defendant quite logically said:

"It wasnot that one of my men had the leadership in these districts but asyou will see from page 2 of the document".........

did not conclude his sentence. The document, the statements in the direct and the cross examination are absolutely in agreement. In spite of this the prosecution states in its closing brief, and I quote:

"but, after close questioning, he does admit that in each of suspects."

again parts of the happenings in Eupatoria of 7 January 1942 and arrives at the astonishing conclusion:

"Document NOKW - 584, shows in an official report of the clearly shown that Dr. BRAUNE gave orders on the place of execution for the carrying out of the shootings". Thus the operational order of 12 January 1942 was used in order to prove BRAUNE's authority to issue orders; and the happenings at Eupatoria of 12 January 1942 when 1184 partisans were shot, actually, upon the order of Major RIESEN, were used in order to make it appear as if BRAUNE had given the order for the 1184 shootings as a result of the combing of Simferopol, while in reality, as we have already mentioned, not a single arrest and not a single execution can be derived from the operational order of 12 January 1942.

This is the reason why the prosecution, in its opening speech of 30 September in the afternoon (page 245 in German, page 239 of the English transcript), states;

"This order admittedly does not show its own execution. However, Dr. BRAUNE will soon have ample opportunity to relate the final results of the raid". Since Dr. BRAUNE's report in the witness stand did obviously not yield the results desired by the prosecution, it is now trying to obtain some "results" in the above-mentioned way.

14.) On page 3192 of the English transcript, the prosecution quotes that he, Braune, "eight to ten hours after his arrival in this area for 'the whole lot Of them had engaged in illegal activities'". Actually the defendant said;"Well, according to the information I had at the tine, I Army was carrying out Fuehrer orders".The words:

"for purposes of commanding this action" are thus an invention on the part of the prosecution.

The defendant in that very document:

"The retaliation against partisans at Jewpatoria on Commander-in-Chief". obviously wrong statement on page 10 of itsclosing brief when it says:

"It is, however, incumbent upon the prosecution to recollection, Einstatzkommando 11b used one.

A gas van."

The fact is:

that Dr. BRAUNE stated on the forenoon of the is of January "The van must have been used by my kommando in Simferopol at least once" i.e. in contradiction to the claim of the prosecution in its closing brief he did not deny that his kommando used the car.

It is furthermore true, that OHLENDORF did not say:

"that to the best of his recollection Einsatzkommando 11 b used the van" but, upon the question:

"And 11 b, did it ever use one?" he answered;

" "11 b will have used it" and a few lines further down he declared:

"11 b nay have used the van twice or three tines perhaps, I don't know it". This means, that OHLENDORF did not say:

"that to his best of recollection "Einsatzkommando 11 b used the van".

This too, is a wrong quotation from the transcripts. In spite of the documentary evidence proving that in Eupatoria the execution of the Jews was performed through the Kommando 11 a and not through the Kommando of the defendant and which the defendant has also described in detail in direct examination, the prosecution, in its closing brief, claims again "Braune admits that executions were performed by elements ox his commando Eupatoria". Nowhere in the transcript isthere such a statement by Braune.

Finally, the prosecution, on page 11 of its closing brief, makes 47-50 members of Kommando 11 b out of the 45-50 murdered end badly wounded German soldiers who had their throats cut by guerillas in Eupatoria in January 1942 which event gave rise to the above mentioned retaliations.

"Braune further admits that he and some 47 - 50 members of his 1184 mail inhabitants of Eupatoria". Here too, Dr. Braune is put in charge of that action". The fact is that Dr. Braune went to Eupatoria alone with Major Riesen, that a company of the airforce carried cut the execution and that Major Riesen was in command.

Dr. Braune declared in the session of the afternoon of 26 November:

"During this selection Major Riesen, who says himself on page one (of his statement) that he had to carry out the order of the to carry out these shootings on order of the Army."

This is what Dr. Braune admitted and not "that he and some 47-50 of his Kommando personnel were in charge of and directed a reprisal action."

May it please the tribunal! I have proved that in 19 cases the prosecution quoted incorrectly documents and statements taken from the examination of the defendant, and thus completely misrepresent the actual facts.

closely to this closing brief. However, I believe that I have amply explained to the High Tribunal the methods which the prosecution used in itsclosing brief in order to incriminate my client and to impeach his credibility, and that I proved how this closing brief should be evaluated. of Jews and gypsies. circumstances of the war against the USSR which led to those shootings. I herewith refer to the statements I made there. The shootings were made - and this was not denied by the prosecution either:

a) upon order of Hitler, the Supreme War Lord, b) subject to the executive power, the knowledge and cooperation, indeed, subject to the order of the army, with whom rested the decision upon life and death of the persons in that theater of operations. They were carried out against an enemy who himself was ignoring all limitations of international laws and of the laws of humanity, who was carrying on a total war in the most merciless manner and is carrying it on to this very day, without respecting any principles of international law, whether they were established before or after 1945. Security, quiet and order in the rear of the fighting troops were the reasons for the Fuehrer order given to the defendant, not extermination for political, racial or religious reasons as claimed by the prosecution. The defendant was never given any different or additional orders, especially has he never during his service received any direct additional orders in this direction from Himmler or from Heydrich. He never received an order to have Jews and gypsies shot only because they belonged to a certain race or religion; the order was given to him with the sole motivation that Jews and gypsies are an element most dangerous to security, and that in addition to this the Jews next to the Communist functionaries were the most important representatives of the of the Bolshevist system and its fighting methods in the rear of the Army.

This feet was confirmed by experiences made by colleagues of the defendant during the months before the defendant was assigned end which the defendant found confirmed to the full extent during his service in the Crimea. The activity and situation report No. 4 of 22. May 1942 shows that only 5-6% of the total population of the Crimea were Jews, but they usually held 50% of the leading positions in the Bolshevist Party and State.

The following excerpts I shall emit in order to save time. Particularly inthe econd paragraph there are mentioned that the Volk Commissar had 40%, The Commissar for Education had 80%, for health and education 80%, for economics 80%, for commerce 60%, and for NKWD had 45% of Jews. was of equal importance as can be seen from the action, reports, the activities and situation reports. that the Fuehrer order had been issued for reasons of security, especially since he had not the slightest knowledge of the so-called "final solution of the Jewish question". living in their apartments, in as far as they had not emigrated with the aid of State authorities. cussed in the highest government it authorities and the statement by Wisliceny before the IMT shows that not until April or May 1942 was the order for the final solution of the Jewish question given to Eichmann. The letter from Goering to Heydrich presented by the prosecution, also shows that it was meant to be a supplement of the assignment already given, namely to bring about a solution of the Jewish question which should be as favorable as possible in view of the conditions of the time by letting them emigrate or by evacuating them.

This is also not contradicted by Heydrich's express letter of 21 September 1939, presented by the prosecution:

"to the Chiefs of all Einsatzgruppen of the Security police." According to the opening statement of the prosecution concerning the organization of the Einsatzgruppen it is a fact that the "Einsatzgruppen" in the Polish are in no way identical with the Einsatzgruppen of this trial, which at that time did not even exist, but which were not organized until Hay and June of 1941. The defendant never saw or heard of that express letter of Heydrich of 21 September 1939. Besides, this order does not provide in any lace for extermination or annihilation, but only mentions the concentration of Jews in Ghettos, which were to be set up in the cities. If, during the course of the trial various interpretations of the Fuehrer order by other persons involved are mentioned, this does not prove anything against the defendant, who was not present when this order was published in Dueben and Pretsch through the office Chiefs Streckenbach and Mueller and never heard of any other interpretation of the order, than the one given him by his superior Ohlendorf. During the rebuttal the prosecution presented document NOKW 1573, and stated that, contrary to the statements of Ohlendorf, Seibert, Schubert and Braune the document shows that alreadyduring the period or 5 to 15 November there were, constantly, executions in Simferopol although at that time the civilian population was allegedly friendly. Here too, the prosecution has left out the second half of the sentence-I assume it was through an oversight -- which says: "that there seem to be many Communists left in the city". My client has nothing to do with this document. He did not state that there were no shootings in Simferopol between 5 and 15 November. He could not state this, since during that time the defendant was still in Odessa with Kommando 11 b. He did not take over this Kommando until the 10th of November and did not arrive in Simferopol until the 28th of November.

The result of the evidence as stated by me in my trial brief, has thus not been affected by the only document presented in the rebuttal against my client. in my trial brief in all their details? Legislator. Adolf Hitler was for him the Head of State, elected by the German people, recognized by the whole world, and with whom all nations maintained diplomatic relations until the outbreak of the war, with whom America kept up diplomatic relations until the and of 1941, and to whom the neutral states sent their diplomatic representatives until the end of the war. The Fuehrer had been given legisl tive powers by constitutional procedures -- indeed, under full observance of the Weimar constitution, a model piece of democratic ideals which is often quoted. His power was unlimited and thus Reich Defense Law issued in 1930, e.g. defines the Fuehrer and Reich Chancellor as "holder of the supreme state authority". The holder of the supreme state authority and supreme war lord and Communist functionaries. I am aware that the Control Council Law No. 10 of 20 December 1945 in article II, figure 4b, does not free a person from responsibility for action pursuant to the order of his government or of a superior, but may be considered in mitigation. Nevertheless I must raise the problem of the ideas and convictions caused by Hitler's order, in the mind of my client with regard to their legal aspect, because I believe that in the very last analysis this problem contains the inherent problems of this trial which a court, independent of all propaganda, of public opinion and of all attempts aimed at falsifications endeavors to pass just judgment on those men in the dock, cannot overlook.

I am not trying to work any extenuating circumstances out of this question and -- I want to make this quite clear -- but I want more. I want to explain why my client, at the beginning of the trial could answer the question about "guilty" or "not guilty" only with a clear "not guilty". Is the defendant Dr. Braune guilty? This is the question, to the solution of which I want to contribute. I am going to start but from the following deliberations: Though Control Council Law No. 10 may exclude any reference of a person to the order of the government or a superior with retroactive effect there is one thing which it could not have intended and did not intend: To punish men, who took up service because they believed that the order upon which they acted was legal; who, without any fault of their own, had no feeling that they did wrong and could not have had such feelings. The retroactive force of the Control Council Law may be enforced objectively; it will, however, find its limitations in the subjective part of the events, in that part which took place in the mind of the defendant. Even retro-actively effective laws cannot change anything in the fact that those persons had the right to believe their actions legal and therefore had no feeling of doing anything wrong, and this alone counts. Could the defendant, at that time, have this feeling of legality, or rather, did he have to have it?

the legal position at the time: basis of the order that had been issued, he must not be punished, even if the Control Council Law does not purport to bring about convictions without guilt. awareness of having acted unlawfully is an integral part of guilt, which according to criminal law is always a personal guilt. only be understood to mean that the recipient of an order must have been conscious of the fact that his conduct was contrary to the law and wrong. There is no guilt without the awareness of having acted unlawfully.

Also the IMT clearly acknowledged this principle. Which conceptions, then, were decisive for the defendant's awareness of acting lawfully? the basis of his constitutional powers as well as on the basis of his military authority in his capacity as supreme commander of the armed forces.

"The Fuehrer's orders were law already a considerable time before this second World War.

"His orders were something quite different from the orders of any official of the hierarchy under him."

It cut short any discussion. It was legally binding for the persons concerned, even when the directives went counter to international law or to other recognized obligations."

This stated Prof. Jahrreis as expert before the IMT.

The Fuehrer Order partook of the character of a law. A law, however, was binding for a judge as well as for every official and every subject of the state, not only in the authoritarian Fuehrer state after 1933, but already under the auspices of the democratic republic based on the Weimar constitution.

Gerhard Anschuetz, says in his commentary about this:

"If it cannot even be conceded that the judge is entitled to examine the law as for its being constitutional or not, so it can be conceded even less that he may refuse obedience to a law which was passed constitutionally because, according to his opinion concerning certain standards which, again according to his opinion, are above the legislator, that is to say, morality, ethics, natural law, they contradict these points or because they cannot stand up to certain evaluations," Fuehrer state but the spiritual father of the Weimar democracy. Already during the Weimar period, during which the defendant received legal training at German universities, it was beyond the reach of not only an official but also a judge and even beyond the Reich Supreme Court to re-examine any law for its moral basis or its background of international law.

"The background of international law could not even be examined by the Staatsgerichtshof, the State Court. The State Court was only allowed to examine whether it was constitutional, but it was not allowed to examine it from the point of view of international law."

According to Prof. Jahrreis and his opinion in the Justices' Trial. the following on page 153 of his book:

"Judges and subjects are under the obligation to apply the law of the state, even if contrary to international law, and to follow it. It is not up to them but up to the government to take into consideration the differences with international law which may arise out of this."

Also the well-knwon German jurist, Prof. Jahrreis, only repeats the general concept and legal opinion, when he gives the following expert opinion of the Justices' Trial:

"Every state must demand as a matter of principle, that its laws be followed, even if the individual concerned holds a different opinion owing to moral, or religious, or other grounds."

At another occasion he says:

"Already before 1933, and even more after 1933, it has always been undisputed that the judges were obligated to obey the law of the German state, even if by doing so they were violating the principles of international law." officials and subjects, whose position did not nearly afford them the same measure of independence as that enjoyed by a judge.

But even if no legally binding force is granted to Hitler's Order, but it is evaluated as what it undeniably was, namely an order of the head of the state and supreme commander of the armed forces during war time and under military law, the result remains. If already in peace time officials and judges are bound by constitutionally enacted laws and are not even permitted, leave alone abliged, to examine their admissibility or their basis in international law, it is obvious how much more the soldier during a war and who is subject to military law is bound by the orders of his highest authority in the state. They too did not permit any re-examination.

"Should or can the state authority grant the members of its hierarchy its officials and officers, the right or even Impose on them the duty, to examine at any time any order which demands obedience from them, to determine whether it is lawful and to decide accordingly whether to obey or refuse? No domination which has appeared in history to date has given an affirmative answer to this question...... in as far as such a right of examination is not granted to members of the hierarchy, the order has legal force for them."

highest orders which must be binding on the hierarchy, if the authority of the State is to exist at all, being on occasion in conflict with rules not imposed by the state - to divine law, to natural law and to the laws of reason...."

"If Hitler issued an order which was faulty from a legal point of view, that did not give the German official agencies any reason to refuse obedience, for in every state there has to be an authority beyond which there is no appeal."

Thus did Prof. Jahrreis outline the problem in his expert opinion before the IMT and also during the Justices' Trial.

during the war, refuse to comply with orders, contradicting international law. violations of international law at all in regard to Russia, who had placed herself outside all international law from the first day of its existence. But also the farmer question has to be answered in the negative, as it had always been beyond a question for any official in Germany that, in case of a contradiction between the Reich law and international law, he had to apply Reich law. in a far higher degree in war time for the soldier at the front: sovereign state is able to face as yet. The question remains inasfar as Article 47 of the German Military Penal Code made it incumbent upon the defendant to refuse compliance with Hitler's Order. argumentsof my colleagues, Dr. Gawlik and Dr. Aschenauer. The provisions of Article 47 (MSTGBI) can only mean that a soldier is permitted to refuse compliance with an order if there exists a higher authority able to decide if his refusal to comply with the order was justified.

Hitler's orders, however, were no ordinary military orders, but were suprema lex, beyond which one could not go any further. There was no possibility of an appeal against them. Article 47 could not be applied at all to orders emanating from Hitler, the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces. Also in the question of the possibility of resisting to a military order, it is a prerequisite that the person to whom the order applies, should have the possibility to appeal against it. The long tradition of that Article 47 in the jurisdiction of the German Armed Forces is witness to this. In this justified conviction, however, there could not arise in the defendant an awareness of the action being unlawful, especially as he was neither permitted nor obligated to re-examine the order from the point of view of its lawfulness or its contradiction with international law. Neither did he have the scope for an examination.

Was, then, at the time of the defendants appointment in the East, i.e. 1941, this legal position of the German Reich and its subjects in conflict with the legal concept and legal position of other civilized nations in a matter at all discernible to the defendant? Also to this point I am able to refer to the remarks of my colleague Dr. Gawlik, who was shown that up to 1945, almost all the other nations of Western outlook too subscribed to these principles. Thus, during the discussions on the Briand-Kellog Pact repeatedly quoted by the Prosecution, to which Russia, however, was not signatory power, the American representative Kellogg said in 1927:

"Every state is the only judge of its conduct in the question of its existence." in his "International Law" that the law could not demand that an individual be punished for an act which he had been forced to commit by law.

1940 by the United States War Department, after enumerating possible war crimes, contains the following statement:

"Individual members of the armed forces are not liable to punishment for these crimes, if the latter were committed under orders or with the approval of their governments or commandants." agencies in the British "Manual of Military Law" which after listing the possible war crimes states the following in Article 443:

"It is, however, important to note that members of the armed forces, ccommitting such violations of the recognized rules of warfare, which had been ordered by their governments or their commandants, are no war criminals and can therefore not be punished by the enemy". national law, George Manner, too, writes the following in an article headed "The legal nature and punishment of criminal acts of violence contrary to the laws of war":

"The principle that the members of the armed forces of a country are not personally responsible and can therefore not be punished for acts violating the rules of warfare committed under orders or with the approval of their governmental or military superiors, does not form part of the military law. Nevertheless it appears to be a recognized principle of that law. At least since 1914 this principle has been embodied in the war manuals of the powers as a rule of the common military law." America is shown by the fact that in 1840, the American Secretary of State, Webster, in a controversy with the British Government concerning the punishment of a British subject stated the following:

"That an individual member of an official armed force acting on the authority of its government cannot be held responsible for the tres passing of laws, is a principle of public law which has been sanctioned by the usage of all civilized nations and which the government of the United States is not inclined to contest."

upon to prove the contrary, for that provision, which was never carried out, was not a law agreed upon, but the result of a onesided dictate. It is of interest to note that it was the American expert on international law, Professor Fenwick who stated in his book "International Law" that one of the reasons why this provision was not carried out, was "the difficulties arising in public law from the fact that many of the accused individuals had acted on superior orders." life up to this day is shown by the well-known speech held by Marshal Montgomery on 26 July 1946 at Portsmouth. Aschenauer has already quoted it. even during the Second World War, the Control Council Law now sets up the statute for members of the German people, that the acting on superior orders does not do away with responsibility. The Control council certainly possesses the legislative powers to issue such rules. But it does not alter the subjective aspect of the defendant's conduct during the Russian campaign. Owing to the legal position in Germany - as shown above - but also outside the borders of the Reich, he could not even have had an awareness of guilt, it was neither his right nor his duty to examine whether the orders he received were unlawful or violated international law.

The following page I shall omit except for the last paragraph:

Apart from this question of the lawfulness of the defendant's actions performed on the order of the head of his state and his supreme commander of the armed forces, and the question of his lack of awareness of doing wrong, which is closely linked to the former, in my opinion the court must not overlook the problem inasfar as the conduct of the German Reich in the war against Russia, especially the Fuehrer Order violate the obligations of Germany towards the USSR according to international law.

precisely with Germany's obligations toward the Western Powers according to international law, treaties or customary procedures in the sense of the obligations which were binding at the commencement of World War II. Germany violated by the Fuehrer Order her obligations towards Russia which were imposed by international law, since the Fuehrer Order referred to Russian nationals in Russian territory. My client's acts were carried out exclusively against Russian nationals in Russian territory. between Germany and Russia developed after 1917, and how Russia behaved since 1917 towards other countries. I have furthermore explained in how far Russia ignored existing international law true to her ideology and aims. I refer now to these explanations and restrict myself to drawing the legal conclusions from this situation. between Germany and Russia. Nor did any international common law or custom develop between 1917 and 1941 between Germany and Russia.

Nor would the development of such procedure have been possible in view of the attitude of the USSR to international law.

Owing to her knowledge of this behavior and of Russia's fundamental attitude to modern war - I remind you, for example, of the guerilla warfare - Germany had reason to be convinced that this war would be conducted from the very first day without the slightest respect for international law on the part of the enemy. I am convinced that in these circumstances Germany was not bound by the principles of international law which applied to her relations to the Western Powers. The Tribunal must consider the question to what extent HITLER's order and its execution constitutes a violation of international obligations towards Russia - and that is all that interests us here. Russia as being a criminal war of aggression. Soviet government which was published in the entire German press and broadcast throughout the world (document Book II pp. 17 ff.) this war as a justified preventive war? Looking back on events, can one today bring such a reproach, in view of the statements made by the leading American diplomats BYRNES and BULLET and quoted in my Trial Brief? further question and dealt with the matter to what extent, in the light of recent knowledge and developments in the sphere of world politics, the affirmation of the IMT can be maintained that the war against Russia was "a criminal war of aggression", "an obvious attack", without a shadow of justification! facts became known which necessitate the re-examination of that decision by this Tribunal.

but a justified preventive war, then, on the basis of my explanations in the Trial Brief on the subject of the ideology, aims and practice in the USSR, to which I refer, the question arises, in how far the German Reich found itself, in this war against Russia, in a genuine state of national emergency, and whether this justified the orders given by HITLER. ASCHENAUER in the body of his closing Brief and make them the subject of my defense plea. Similarly, with regard to the question of an assumed state of emergency (Putativnotstand) I refer to Dr. ASCHENAUER's statement on this question. justified or expedient in view of the assumed state of emergency was outside the experience and judgment of the Defendant. guilt of the higher order, and the belief in legality and the absence of consciousness of violating the law resulting therefrom, next to the question of national emergency or assumed national emergency, we have to consider the actual state of emergency in which the defendant found himself, which places his conduct outside the limits of criminal responsibility. stand that he was convinced that the Fuehrer Order was justified, i.e. that it was created constitutionally within the rights vested in Adolf HITLER as Head of the State, supreme lawmaker and warlord (Transcript p.3094) and was therefore binding also for the recipient of the order.

presiding Judge, that he had not been able to form a critical opinion concerning the necessity of this order, its ethics and its morals, in view of the special conditions on the Eastern front and in view of the behavior of this enemy who right from the start dropped all restrictions of a normal conduct of war, and also in view of the scope which this Second World War had assumed on both sides - beginning with the events in the East through the bomb terror to which hundreds of thousands of innocent German women and children, sick end aged people succumbed, to the use of the atom bomb which took each time within a few minutes the life of many tens of thousands - and again without any discrimination of ago and sex. criminal since they originated from serious and severe considerations of the political end military leaders on both sides who obviously considered these measures necessary in order to decide the war in their favor transcript page 3091/92). In one respect, however, the Defendant did not leave the least doubt during the proceeding, not even for one moment, namely that he resented the Fuehrer Order for humanitarian reasons, that he considered it wrong inspite of its legal character and inspite of its constitutional origin, that he never executed it on his own free will, that he never would have acted as he did upon his own initiative and that in the last respect he carried out the orders because there was no other possibility for him (Transcript page 3039/3110/3116).

By submitting the BRAUNE Document No. 58 Exhibit 49 (document Book II Supplement III) 1 have proved that he was not placed in command of Kommando 11b which was stationed in Odessa until 2 November 1941 in Nicolajew, with effect from 10 November 1941. after BRAUNE's arrival, demanded from BRAUNE and his Kommando the shooting of many tens of thousands of Jews. Dr. BRAUNE has proved clearly what was his personal attitude to the measures ordered against the Jews. Commandant of Ohlendorf (who was the exponent of the executive power in this territory) nothing would have happened to him in view of the Fuehrer Decree, even inspite of OHLENDORF's ban in conducting general executions outside of the area under German Army jurisdiction.

even then, when the Rumanians, preferring to the Fuehrer Decree, threatened to take diplomatic steps in Berlin (Transcript page 3126). justify his refusal with the fact that the Rumanians had the executive power in this area and to refer thereto.

If the Defendant DR. BRAUNE had been filled with that contempt for humanity, the boundless hate which the prosecution falsely attributes to him, he would have had the opportunity here to discharge this hatred (of which he is unjustly accused) on tens of thousands of Jews. Dr. BRAUNE did the contrary however. He opposed all demands of the Rumanians. Nothing proves better his inner humane attitude to the Fuehrer Order than this fact. Not with words, but by action, did he prove how he acted in a situation which enabled him to make a free decision of his own. Not one Jew was killed at Odessa while he was in command. About one month later, at the beginning of December, the Commander-in-Chief of the 11th Army, in whom the executive power over Einsatzgruppe D was vested, gave the order that the Jews there were to be shot before Christmas (Transcript, page 3140, SCHUBERT Transcript p. 4671, OHLENDORF, p. 607). This order was issued in accordance with a Fuehrer Order. Dr. BRAUNE's office was in the same building as that of the Chief of the Einsatzgruppen. The leader of his Subkommando, Sturmbannfuehrer SCHULTZ, whose duty it was to carry out the executions, was opposed to doing so when the Chief of the Einsatzgruppen received the order from the Army. Dr. BRAUNE told his Chief that his Subkommando could not carry out the order with the few men and vehicles at his disposal.

The army provided vehicles and personnel, the Einsatzgruppe assigned members of Kommandos 10b and 11a as reinforcements and the newly arrived police detachments as support. Now what could the defendant do in such a situation? Defendant to prevent these murders. Defendant should have or could have done. It has not given an answer to this question because it cannot find an answer to it. prevent the execution to the order? Or to wash his hands of the affair or even to limit its execution an any way? Should he have refused be accept the order? the Fuehrer Order is quite well known, declared as follows under oath:

"The men of my groups who are under indictment here were under my military command.

if they had not executed called to account for it by me.

If they had refused to account for it by me.

There could be no doubt about it.

Whoever refused anything in the front lines would have met immediate death.

If the refusal would have brought about the same consequences.

The jurisdiction SS were gruesome."

Under such circumstances, the Defendant could not quietly refrain from carrying out the order, nor could he openly refuse to do so.

would not have changed the course of events at all. In this entire matter, one must not forget that in November 1941, when the defendant assumed command, the Fuehrer Order had been carried out by the Kommando for months, and that the commanders and subordinate commanders were acquainted with the order. the execution of the order by refraining from issuing any directives to that effect to his subordinates. For he no longer needed to issue such directives, nor did he do so. of the mission and was being carried out, and therefore did not require any directives from Dr. BRAUNE. Apart from the executions in Simferopol, which Dr. BRAUNE, in view of the circumstances, was completely unable to prevent, the latter, therefore, would have been unable to prevent the activity of his sub-commandos only by issuing an express order not to carry out the Fuehrer Order. a wasted self-sacrifice, for a trial before SS and Police Courts for disobedience and refusal to comply with a Fuehrer Order on the front, could only have resulted in a death sentence. Thus the Defendant could not avoid or prevent the carrying out of the Fuehrer Order, by open refusal, tacit non-Compliance, or opposing orders, apart from the fact that every one of those measures would have meant his death. Thus, they did not present the defendant with a choice in keeping with ethical law. Merely in order to give a complete picture, 1 must mention the fact that he was not able to join the advancing troops with his Kommando, and thus evade the order.

in this sector of the Eastern Front and the geographical position of the Crimea as a peninsula. tribunal, and the Prosecution have expressed doubt that such a punishment would have been the invitable result. In defense of my client, therefore, 1 should like to add the following statements: The Defense counsel has proved that under German laws of war, disobedience, refusal to obey an order, undermining the armed forces etc. called for the death penalty."

11 Feb 1948_M_MSD_6_1_Spears (Juelich) Oberfuehrer Ohlendorf, as the Defendant's superior, stated under oath that certain death would have been the result of refusal to obey an order. In his Posen speech, Himmler the highest SS-Fuehrer and supreme judicial authority in the entire field of SS jurisprudence, expressed clearly what he thought of disloyalty, even if it were only thoughts of disloyalty. And as far as a man like Himmler was concerned, there was no difference between disloyalty and disobedience. waived the death sentence: Himmler would have seen to it that an end was put to the man, either in a concentration camp or in "a compulsory suicide squad" of a disciplinary unit of the Waffen-SS.

There should however, be no doubt as to Hitler's ideas about disobedience of his orders in war-time. Those are the facts which confronted the Defendant. In view of all this, what is proved by the four cases listed by Herr Diels, in which "refusal to obey an order" did not result in death? (Prosecution Document Volume 5-D, Pages 40/41) In none of these cases had the order been given by Hitler.

Two cases occurred in 1933/34, and in the third case, concerning Herr Diels, a Gauleiter was allegedly the person who had issued the order. Even the example of Rittmeister (Captain, Cavalry) FaberCastell is not really a convincing argument for the application of Article 47 of the Military Penal Code (MSTGB) to the Fuehrer Order. He opposed an illegal "direct" order, that is an order of a direct superior. This is, however, exactly the sort of case covered by Article 47 of the German Military Penal Code (MSTGB). It says nothing about the impossibility of applying Article 47 to the Military Penal Code (MSTGB) to an order by the Supreme Commander-inChief. Diels in the meantime, and submitted by Dr. Aschenauer in behalf of Herr Ohlendorf.

11 Feb 1948_M_MSD_6_2_Spears (Juelich) the fact that the Prosecution, in spite of 2 1/2 years of investigation, and even though it has access to the entire collection of German documentary material - material which both incriminates and exonerates the defendants, - has nevertheless not been able to produce even one single case in which so much as one German Feldmarschall or General opposed a Fuehrer Order. Should then a man with the rank of major have been expected to oppose in such a manner not only Hitler's Order but also at the same time the order of one of these Feldmarschalls? That would be going far beyond the bounds of what could be reasonably expected of a man. I refer to the judgment of Dr. Loew the record of whose interrogation was submitted as a Prosecution Document. following even with regard to an order by Keitel:

"The result would have been self-annihilations and indirectly, a certain historical improvement."

I believe that there is no debut that this "self annihilation with an indirect historical improvement" did not constitute a choice in keeping with ethical law. but even if he had, this would not have altered events anyhow. Oberfuehrer Ohlendorf himslef stated, during his examination (Court Transcript, Pages 743/44) that such an attempt on Braune's part would have been a wasted effort. truthfully stated (Pages 3110-13, Court Transcript) that he had not made such an attempt. Similarly the Defendant could not have evaded the incident by reporting ill, apart from the fact that even if he had, it would not have delayed the execution of the Fuehrer Order by so much as one day. transferred back to the homeland under the pretext of illness. But 11 Feb 1948_M_MSD_6_3_Spears (Juelich) But at this point as well I dare to rasie the question of whether malingering is a "choice in keeping with ethical law", for a soldier at the front, in his people's struggle for existence against Bolshevism, exposed and courtmartialled.

In this case as well, the Defendant would have incurred the danger of the depth sentence, in view of the following:

"The following shall "be guilty of undermining German defensive strength and shall be 'punished by death. whoever under takes to cause himelf or another to avoid the fulfilment of military service entirely, to a limit extent, or temporatily by means of self-mutiliation, or by means designed to deceive or "by any other methods. question of possible desertion and stated as follows:

"I would not have deserted, when my people was in a struggle for its very existence. But I would not desert under any circumstances to an enemy like Bolshevism," (Transcript, page 3104) All that I can add to that is that the Defendant could not have been expected to give himself up to the Bolshevists. why the Defendant did not attempt, together with Herr Ohlendorf, his superior, with whom he was on very friendly terms, to refuse to carry out the order or to sabotage it quietly. I joint refusal would have constituted mutiny. For this the laws of war of all nations know only one penalty. At the front at any rate: shooting by courtmartial. But a silent failure to carry out the order was also out of the question, under the given circumstances. The Army and superior authorities would have found out about it very soon and would have punished it as disobedience and refusal to obey an order. of the Military Penal Code (MSTGB) was impossible.

11 Feb 1948_M_MSD_6_4_Spears (Juelich) possibilities considered, the following is still apparent: the Defendant was absolutely unable to avoid or prevent his Commando from carrying out the order. No matter what he would have done, it would not have altered matters any as far as execution of the order was concerned. ing his own life. There is no legal concept in the world that demands of a man that he consciously sacrifice his own life, especially if the self-sacrifice seems wasted. And in this case, it would have been wasted, for it could in no way have altered the entire course of events. Finally with regard to the problems of the state of emergency brought about by the order and the problem of what could be expected of a man, I take the liberty of referring to the statements by Dr. Lummert and Dr. Gawlik. till now, I have reached the following conclusion: 1945, and, as for as the Defendant knew, in European and AngloAmerican countries. as well, the Defendant cannot be considered guilty of having committed war crimes or crimes against humanity. Supreme Military Commander, he dealt with a matter which justifies the conduct of the Defendant, in the light of national and international legal concepts existent till 1945. Article 47 cannot be applied to the Fuehrer Order.

Dr. Braune's acts were justified by his awareness that according to the legal principles existent up till 1945, national law was superior to international law, and that also, in case of conflict, every subject must obey the law of his State.

The Defendant acted in the awareness that Hitler's order was legal, that is, issued within the scope of Hitler's constitutional rights as Supreme Head of the State and Supreme Military Authority, 11 Feb 1948_M_MSD_6_5_Spears (Juelich) Furthermore, I wish to point out that in Germany's struggle with the USSR, there were no international obligations towards the USSR, and that therefore violations of international law against the USSR could not be committed.

The Defendant acted during a time that Germany was in a state of national emergency, and he should at least be given the benefit of pleading a presumed state of national emergency on the basis of the evidence which has been submitted concerning the picture which Reich Leaders gave to the German People concerning the reasons for, and the nature of, the war against the USSR. which could provide the gasis for the Defendant to be punished in view of the circumstances and conditions that have been described here.

The Prosecution confronts him with Control Council Law No. 10 dated 20 December 1945 and bases its request for his punishment on this law. The time at my disposal is not sufficient for me to deal with the problematic nature of this law as I should.

I therefore refer to it only briefly: of the legal systems of all civilized nations:

The Principle: nulla poena sine lege. previously existent in the entire world, is that the Control Council Law aims at the creation of a new international law, the expressions of laws of humanity to be binding upon the entire world. It is based on the reason that it is the expression of international law existent at the time that the law was created, that the law of war is not derived from treaties alone, but also from the international usages and customs, which have gradually found general recognition. This law is not rigid, but, by constant adaptation, it follows the requirements of a changing world; it is the essential nucleus of a new law, that individual persons have international obligations over and above national 11

Feb 1948_M_MSD_Spears (Juleich) 6-6 obligations, imposed upon them by obedience to the individual state.

order to justify the Statute - and thus also the Control Council Law derived from it. disregard the following points:

1) Do these reasons justify the creation and application of a new international law with retroactive force or rather, should not such revolutionary laws which invalidate the law existent in the entire world up till now, be considered as valid only from that they come into force? However, if it is to be applied retrospectively to the leading men of a state because they knew of this new development of the law not yet codified, does this thesis then also justify its application to the subject of the State, who was forced by martial law to carry out laws and orders of the head of state and of its leading men?

The problem arises: "Where did this new International Law appear for the first time perceivable for the German state's subject, so that he was able to know it? To which of these defendants could it be imputed that he had learned 11 Feb 1948_M_MSD_6_7_Spears (Juelich) of such decisions during the war, quite apart from the problem, whether or not decisions made by American State Courts may constitute an International Law binding for all the world.

defendants here, for, as has been set forth by the Prosecution on page 56 of the Court transcript, the military tribunals in session here are international tribunals according to their character and indeed, a concept which the American Military Tribunal adopted in the verdict against the jurists, though the indictment was raised by the "United States of America". which gradually had found general recognition. Did the USSR also recognize them, so that they would have become binding for Germany? Was it effected by agreements? If not, was it effected by concluding actions? contrary.

Finally the following problem remains: the new law, that individuals had international duties, which transcend national duties, which are laid upon them by their obedience to the individual state.

Must then not the problem be raised: would protect the state's subject, who, in favor of the international duty violates the national law? Where was the international power in 1941, which would have protected the defendant against a sentence by German Court Martials on account of disobedience and refusal to carry out orders? today they have not been answered yet.

11 Feb 1948_M_MSD_6_8_Spears (Juelich) which would protect any state's subject if he violates the laws of his own state by fulfilling his international duties. this problem when finding its verdict. But even if the High Tribunal would pass by all these problems, then it would not be able to disregard the following in its decision.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Mayer, do you think this would be a good point at which to have the morning recess?

DR. MAYER: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess 15 minutes.

(A recess was taken.)

COURT NO. II, CASE NO. IX.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. MAYER (Attorney for the Defendant Braune): Your Honors, I now proceed with my final plea on page 51. It is also page 51 of the English text. Council Law No. 10, too, will not see two justifications invalidated:

1.) The lacking consciousness of illegality 2. ) The emergency.

in the verdict of the IMT, out it is impossible to perceive that a new International and World Law, as the base of which Control Council Law No. 10 was designated, would disregard the most primitive hypothesis of any guilt, namely, the consciousness of unlawfulness. has been clearly expressed by the IMT on page 64 of the published text, where it says that not the existence of an order is the decisive moment, but "whether or not it was actually possible to effect a choice according to the moral code."

This principle was recognized in the verdict against Erhard Milch as well as in that against Flick. Law No. 10 of 1945 will be applied retrospectively to my client's behavior in 1941/42 a sentence does not seem justified, as this is opposed by the facts of a

a) lacking consciousness of illegality

b) justified reference to a genuine emergency. Finally I beg the high tribunal while finding its verdict to examine how far it was possible to assert this new International Law in reality and whether it thus found its justification, or whether it has remained a law for the defeated ones only, which is not only disregarded by the USSR and all states in its sphere of power, but also whether the Western victorious powers have not violated it, without any Court in the world applying this new law to these violations, and thus this new law has lost its ethical-moral foundations.

a future development of the law, if in future two measures will still be applied in the world George Martin of the Nuernberg trials published in the Munich newspaper, Muenchener Zeitung, a few weeks ago: then I believe that no tribunal which is conscious of its responsibility to justice and history can pass by the above raised problems. Finally Dr. Braune is charged with membership:

a) in the SS, or general SS

b) in Amt III, VI, or VII of the RSHA

c) in Amt IV of the RSHA Dr. Braune belonged to the SS only in the framework of the SS-special formation SD, which comprised all members of the intelligence service on special subjects I want to supplement the SS, (Sachnachrichtendienst) SD (Amt III, VI and VII of the RSHA) and of the Security Police (Amt IV and V), as well as of the administrative Amt I and II of the RSHA.

On the other hand, the "Security Service" of the Reich Fuehrer-SS is an SS-formation without any task and activity, without any sub-division, which, as shown above, did not only comprise the SS-members of the sentenced Amt III, IV, VI and VII, but also comprised Amt I, II and V of the RsHA and other police units.

The defendant only belonged to the groups "Gestapo and SD", which are declared to be criminal, but he never belonged to any of the SS-groups which are declared criminal.

I refer to the IMT verdict; it declares on page 113 of the published text in its conclusion:

"The Security Service of the Reich Fuehrer-SS, (generally known as the SD), will be dealt with in the tribunal's verdict on the Gestapo and the SD."

longed to the general SS, which Dr. Braune never did, and on account of which he, therefore, cannot be sentenced. Concerning SD. The IMT isolates the Security Service of the Reich Fuehrer-SS" from the Group "SS", and, as is shown at another point, by which the IMT understands Amt III, VI and VII of the RsHA; the defendant only belonged to the Security Service of the Reich Fuehrer-SS until April 1939, when he was released from his activity with the SD and was ordered to the Secret State Police. The defendant cannot be sentenced for this time which lies before 1 September 1939. After this date, the defendant did not belong either in an official or honorary capacity to Amt III, VI or VII of the RsHA or to my of their sub-divisions, neither did he have any functions in them, nor was he active in them. As from April 1939 onward he only were the SS-uniform with the SD-insignia, concerning the SS he neither had any function nor did he carry out any activity, he did not have to perform any SS-service, neither did he have any knowledge of the activity of the SS-groups, declared criminal here, nor of that of Amt III, VI and VII of the RsHA.

war, this was only effected in sub-divisions of Amt IV of the RsHA, the. Secret State Police. takes there, which the Tribunal shall omit, then.

Should the Tribunal be of a different opinion, then Dr. Braune cannot be sentenced on account of an other reason. The IMT declared:

"During the war members of the Security Police and of the SD have lead to severe sentences."

Nevertheless the IMT arrived at a sentence on the following basis:

"However, the fact remains, that all members of the Security as civil servants."

With this the IMT did not at all want to exclude the admissibility of a counter proof concerning the voluntariness, cooperation or knowledge of the individual members of the groups concerned. The IMT itself has referred to the "recognized principles of law" and has especially expressed, that "a criminal guilt is an individual guilt, and mass punishments are to be avoided."

The Chief Prosecutor of the IMT, Jackson, declared (Official transcript page 5176) concerning the individual member of the organizations:

"Nothing hinders him from denying, that he joined voluntarily, or from proving that he acted under compulsion.

He can prove that by deceit and by wile he was made to join."

"The membership which the statute and the law of the Control Council Law declare to be criminal, means, of course, a real membership according to a decision of the member's own free will. It is necessary that the member joined the organization fully cognizant and voluntary.

which a person has become victim, were never considered as a crime of the victim; neither is it intended to achieve such an unfair result now." all further proceedings:

"In this trial the individual defendant can state everything in which he was."

(Declaration of Chief Prosecutor Jackson, dated 14 December 1945.)

Braune received the completely concrete assurance, that he did not need to undertake any function or activity in the State police, he became a merely formal, that is, not a genuine member of the State Police, He remained exclusively active in the SD, in the legal and administrative department. Security Police and Braune was ordered to the State Police in Muenster. That this was effected against his will and under compulsion is proved by the fact, that with all means at his disposal Braune defended himself against this transfer and when he was not able to prevent it, he practically did not do any service in Muenster. no activity of Dr. Braune's in the State Police exists. He intended thus to force his dismissal. He did not succeed in doing so, for, in contradiction to the supposition of the IMT that he was not exposed to any other pressure before 1939 than to the danger of losing his position as a civil servant, kt has been proved, that Heydrich already openly declared in 1937:

"Nobody will be released from the Sipo, with the exception if we do not like him any more; in this case, however, the way goes via the concentration camp."

Therefore, in Koblenz the defendant did not chose any more the way to force his release from the Stapo, as it had proven to be foolish - but he tried it in that way, that with his farmer superior, Ohlendorf, he tried to arrange for a re-transfer to the SD.

And this way seemed to work. that he could count on his re-transfer to the SD in Berlin.

He had even already been asked to start on his removal. Heydrich had agreed. The defendant cannot be reproached, that in view of this fact he was awaiting further developments and did not undertake any further steps.

Contrary to all expectations, Dr. Best, Heydrich's deputy, succeeded in frustrating Braune's call to Berlin and in forcing Braune to remain in the Stapo. situation as quoted in the IMT-verdict had arisen. joining an organization which had been declared criminal, or of a voluntary staying in same. formally. His superiors used this formal membership to order him to work. He did not remain with the Stapo in order to keep his position as a civil servant, but he wanted to be dismissed from this very position as a civil servant, and he did everything in order to lose this position as a civil servant, Shortly before the outbreak of war he was fully entitled to suppose, that he had succeeded in doing so. not any guilt of his. Already by reason of this fact Dr. Braune cannot be sentenced on account of his membership in the Secret State Police. motive for sentencing him is lacking.

Apparently the Prosecution proceeded from the fact, that Braune's activity in the East was a criminal one in the program of Amt IV of the RsHA.

In his plea Dr. Aschenauer has exhaustively proved that this was not the case. I may refer to this. arising from orders (Befehlsnotstand) and of the special circumstances which lead to his behavior, the defendant's activity in the East was not a criminal one. can be drawn from the assignment in the East, apart from the fact that he never belonged to Amt IV. concerning the criminal activity of the defendant in the program of Amt IV or only for the knowledge concerning such a criminal activity. have to be valid, that "he, (the defendant), according to the Anglo-Saxon and the British secret law is entitled to be considered non-guilty as long as his guilt had not been conclusively proven in a way excluding any well founded doubts."

Military Tribunal No. II recognized this principle also in the proceedings against Oswald Pohl et all when acquitting SS-Standartenfuehrer Scheide, who belonged to the SS from 1930 to 1945.

There it says:

"The defendant admits membership in the SS, an organization deon these points. To save time of the Tribunal, I am not emitting pages 61 to 64. It is just a short sketch of the testimony of the defendant based on the testimony of his character by certain witnesses, Dr. Baessler, the witness Friedrich Sipmann and Dr. Guenther, a Protestant Minister, who has been living in Norway for forty years, and I shall proceed on page 64.

THE PRESIDENT: They will all be read, of course, these pages which you omit.

DR, MAYER: In 1930/1931, Dr, Braune becomes a National-Socialist. Openly in the witness-box he gave the reasons for this stop: Spiritual distress and concern for the helplessness and factionism among his people, for class-war and class-hatred, for the ethical and moral disintegrationin Germany was one of the reasons, another was his desire openly to advocate unity and the bond among all Germans and finally his last reason was his recognition of the threatening danger from Bolshevism (Court Transcript page 3055 to 3056).

Are these motives to be condemned?

2) In 1934 Braune becomes SD man. tion of any criticism, with the ever-increasing tendency to create yes-men and to silence the free and open expression of a man's opinion is the first reason for this step, and the other reason is the possibility of bringing to the attention of the leadership shortcomings, dangers, unfavorable developments and mismanagement. ciation for criminal purposes?

I think Ohlendorf's examination and final plea clearly prove that these men of the SD intended and did at that time. Was it a crime that Dr. Braune by dedicating himself to these aims of the SD exposed himself so much that he had to make way before stronger forces and that his superiors transfered him to police work, a job he did not turn down but which did not suit his make-up and interests. Braune did everything within his power to be sent back to his former SD work which he recognized as a suitable and necessary one. I have explained that it was not his fault if his efforts in this direction remained fruitless.

Deceit and pressure brought him to police work. Can this be called voluntary association which even IMT considers a pre-requisite for punish able membership in a criminal organization?

3) From the last mentioned step, his way led him to assignment in the East. I need not repeat the events which led to it and which special circumstances determined his actions. for mankind, and a corrupted mind, as the Prosecution would have us believe. that "Death was their tool and life their toy"? seriousness and dignity of this proceedings and that it helps us to come closer to the actual events as a primary condition for a just verdict. in Odessa is a proof of neither hatred nor of contempt of mankind similarly not of the intention to exterminate ethnical groups. This conduct proves, better than all fine speeches, his personal attitude to these events in the East. opportunity to devote himself to task of cultural and academic policy of German students. His peen and courageous statements in numerous speeches and on the occasion of conferences, his intercession on behalf of French and Norwegian students, his extensive assistance and support of the thousands of foreign students prove that he himself tried to combine theory and practice, preachings and conduct. They contradict the Prosecution's unproved assertions of contempt and hatred of mankind, self-professed superior, beings and similar charges.

4). The development of war caused Braune's transfer to Norway. What during the last phase of war under the most difficult conditions appeared as Braune's attitude, is the best proof for the motive or his conduct. Hatred and contempt for other peoples do not prompt a person to realease hundreds of prisoners to oppose a despot of the caliber of Reich Commissioner Terboven, to use pressure to obtain numerous Fuehrer decisions against him and thus to save human lives and valuable property.

different idea of What a Commander of the Security police would be like and that they had been surprised to find a human being who gave them the feeling that he meant well and whom they had to like and to trust although he was their enemy.

But more significant than anything else for Braune's conduct in Norway is the Norwegian judicial authorities quashing of the proceedings against him.

Thus we see that the picture which I have drawn of Dr. Braune's character on the basis of the numerous personal testimonials agrees with his conduct in all situations in which Dr. Braune could act on his own initiative and realize his personal opinions. Are we not to judge the motives for his conduct in the East in accordance with this general picture? victions when passionately rejecting every allegation of low and criminal instincts as driving power of his conduct, and why I still consider my client innocent in spite of all actual events which he never attempted to conceal, to deny or to distort. Even in the witness-stand Dr. Braune has remained true to himself. Straight forward honest end upright, he has given an account of himself, always endeavoring to give the Tribunal as complete and truthful a picture as possible with regard to his ideas and conduct, that the Defendant was acting under the pressure of his hateful, inexorable position and yet of the deduction that his guilt derives from the fact that he entered the party and the SD. Objective weighing of his motives which determined his course does not allow of the following charge. the SD no assignment to the East.

Wherever Dr. Braune worked whatever he did never did he reveal a motive of which he ought to be ashamed, which he could not confess openly and freely and which must cause him any feeling of criminal guilt. I am convinced that the Tribunal will not fail to consider this when pronouncing judgment upon my client. I described the events which have brought my client into the dock. tances which led to these events. acted and finally I have tried to give the Tribunal a picture of the Defendant's character and of the motives for his conduct. All this will make it clear that, fully conscious of my obligation to serve justice and to make truth prevail, there is but one thing for me to do and that is to plead that Dr. Braune he declared innocent of the charges under count I and II of the indictment as well as of the charge of membership in an organization which has been declared criminal.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed Dr. Belzer.

DR. BELZER: Dr, Belzer for the defendant Matthias Graf.

Your Honors and Gentlemen of the Tribunal ! arraigned before this Tribunal my client, the defendant Matthais Graf, charging him with having committed crimes against humanity and war crimes, as well as with having been a member of criminal organizations. To prove the commission of the crimes charged, the Prosecution, in a series of documentary books, has presented more than 200 individual documents. Matthias Graf, it is first contended in the indictment that Fraf had been an officer of Einsatzkommando 6 of Einsatzgruppe C. In producing the particular evidence, the Prosecution restricted itself to establish that the defendant Matthias Graf at the times specified in some of the documents, when Einsatzkommando 6 was carrying out executions, was a member of that Kommando.

Alone from this membership does the Prosecution infer that the defendant Graf shared responsibility for the executions carried out by Einsatzkommando C 6. Such an argumentation can scarcely satisfy any law of procedure of any modern constitutional State all over the world. ly referred to it - every defendant has to be considered innocent as long as his guilt has not been proven beyond any reasonable doubt.

To furnish this proof, is the task of the Prosecution. The obligation to furnish proof covers all the essential components of the crime charged, including criminal intent. It is never the business of the defendant to prove his innocence. In this connection I explicitly refer to the corresponding expositions in Wharton's "Evidence in Criminal Cases", Volume 1. The fact of the defendant Matthias Graf havinb been a member of Einsatzkommando C 6 alone cannot be valued as "prima facie evidence". But even assuming a case of "prima facie", any obligation on the part of the defendant Graf to furnish proof could not go further than to provoke a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. This being premised, it is now my task to comment on the result of the evidence in the case Graf. I. Counts I and II of the Indictment. thing about the form in which the defendant Graf is said to have become guilty of committing the crimes as stated. The name of Graf has not appeared in even nine of the reports of events which have been presented as evidence. Nowhere has it become discernible that the defendant Graf was connected with the executions which were carried out by Einsatzkommando C 6, Thus there is no legal basis for a conviction of the defendant Graf under counts I and II of the indictment, but, on the other hand, the defense has nevertheless proved' beyond any doubt that there was actually no connection between the defendant Fraf and the crimes which are the subject of this trial, In detail I have to say the following:

ly by the evidence - is, that the Defendant Graf during his attachment to the Einsatzkommando 6, or even during his assignment with other offices was never engaged in executive matters. The Defendant Graf did not, have anything to do with political investigations of any kind, nor was he ever present at trials of arrested persons or at executions. Considering the conditions prevailing at the Einsatzkommando 6, SD specialist Graf could without any trouble stand completely aloof from executive affairs and confine himself to his own sphere of activity. transport to Germany was never one of the duties of the Einsatzgruppen, and the Defendant Graf had even less to do with it. The defendant Graf had just as little to do with the segregation of Russian Prisoners of war in the Camps. Kommando. The attempt to entrust him at the time of his assignment as commander of the Security Police and the SD in Stalino with the leadership of a Kommando came to nothing because of the firm refusal of the Defendant. Unterscharfuehrer. Apart from a few men of the Waffen-SS, assigned to the EK 6, Graf had the lowest rank in the entire kommando. After perhaps one year he was promoted to Scharfuehrer and after a few months shortly before his recall from the East the defendant Graf became Oberscharfuehrer. These ranks hold by him very exclusively noncommissioned officers' rank. At no time during his assignment was Graf an officer.

ted which could entitle the Prosecution to include the defendant Graf in such assertions as:

"All defendants, as officers or members of the staff of one or several Einsatzgruppen, or their subordinate units, committed murder, atrocities and other inhumane actions" or:

"The defendants were commanders and officers of special SS-Groups, etc.", or:

"Each man in the prisoner's dock occupied a responsible position or a command in a liquidation unit. Each of them presumed the right to decide about the fate of human beings and death was the intended consequence of his power and of the contempt with which he was filled this trial - as far as the person of the defendant Graf is concerned then it is the following premise contained in the Opening Statement: "We shall demonstrate in this trial that the rank and position of these defendants carried in themselves the authority and the duty to exercise control over their subordinates." is this : Neither by virtue of his rank nor by his position had the defendant Graf power over life and death of people; he could neither order nor carry out nor prevent shootings. nor instigator, nor abettor; he neither gave his approval for the commission of the crime in question, nor was he connected with any persons or agencies a iming to carry out those crimes. ed in the charge were committed. The Fuehrer decree which formed the basis for the shootings by the Einsatzgruppen of Jews, Commissars and Gypsies was not conveyed to the defendant Graf during his service with t he Einsatzkommando 6. Fuehrer Decree was only issued to the Group and Kommando Leaders, not to the sub-leaders and men.

Nor was the order passed on to the men and sub-leaders of Einsatzkommando 6 during the assignment. Not even during his visit to Einsatzkommando 6 in Kriwoj-Rog did Himmler speak of it to the men as he did when visiting Einsatzgruppe D. satzkommando 6 carried out arrests, interrogations and shootings. The defendant Graf credibly asserted that he never learned of the fact that shootings were carried out without previous. legal proceedings or that persons such as Jews, Commissars, etc, were shot only because they were Jews or Commissars, The fact that the defendant Graf actually thought that no conviction or execution took place in Einsatzkommando 6 without legal proceedings and without proof of guilt according to the generally valid laws of war can not become more evident than it does by the testimony of the female witness Reimers on 8 January 1948. Frau Reimers described how Graf once conceled a crying Ukrainian woman, whose husband had been reported and arrested on suspicion of sabotage, in the most kindly manner and assured the woman that her husband would surely return after the investigation if he were innocent.

May it please the Tribunal; defendant Graf's human behavior in this situation is not the behavior of a man who knew of the Fuehrer Decree or who even suspected that people were shot without trial and without proof of guilt. Nor does a man act that way who, to use the words of the Prosecution, presumed the right to decide the fate of people and who considers death to be the intended result of the power and contempt he was filled with. No man acts that way who does not have the deepest respect for life and liberty of another man and who does not have the most profound human compassions for the plight of his fellowmen.

Truth is not clad in golden resplendent raiment. It frequently bears the likeness of unlikelihood, It is more difficult to defend than a lie. It is not surprising therefore that the statements of the defendant Graf meet with scepticism and disbelief when they concern purely internal processes and when no testimonies or documents support the defendant. defendant that it is hard to believe that despite his comparatively long service with EK 6 and the daily contact with other members of the Kommando he had not observed anything of the mass shootings carried out by EK 6. A scrupulous and unbiased inquiry into the entire situation, however, cannot but lead to the conclusion that a doubt in the correctness of the defendant's statements does not appear justified from whatever angle one may look at it. almost 11/2 years. against this statement it must be pointed out that Graf served in EK 6 in Russia from the end of July 1941 till the end of July 1942, that is approximately 13 months. In the period between the end of July 1942 and the middle of October 1942, Graf was with the commander of the Security Police and the SD in Stalino. From the 13 months of Graf's service in EK 6 we must deduct, furthermore, his assignment to liaison leader Heyer, approximately from 20 July 1941, that is altogether about 5 weeks. Furthermore, we must deduct Graf's furlough from 20 December 1941 till 28 January 1942, which makes another 5 weeks, and finally, Graf's illness and subsequent sick-leave from end of Larch 1942 till about middle of June 1942, that is approximately 3 months. Thus, Graf's effective total service with Einsatzkommando 6, after a deduction of at least 5 months off the total of 13 months, shrinks to about 8 months. And during these 8 months his time was so taken up with the tasks in his sphere of work as not to leave him any time to bother about the affairs of other sections. As regards the assumption that the defendant Graf talked with other members of the Kommando about the occurrences in EK 6, it must be pointed out, in the first place, that apart from the assignment in Stalino, EK 6 was almost all the time on the move in an easterly direction, with only short stops at any one placed.

ful that its sections could be put up in different billets according to their sphere of work. It must not be overlooked that Kommando 6 was never billeted in any one place as a closed body, but always split up into 3 to 4 sub-kommandos. The sub-kommandos were in different places, often 200 and even more kilometers apart. All these facts go to prove that Graf could contact only a small proportion of the Kommando members, Those among them whom Graf met and who had anything to do with the executions were not too communicative and even less so in front of the defendant Graf.

The reason for this fact is to be found in the nature of things. From all the defendants and witnesses who somehow knew of the events, we have learned here in the witness stand, that the execution of the Fuehrer Decree caused a tremendous emotional strain to all the participants. It may be presumed as certain that those people felt the need to unburden their mind occasionally, in order to ease their spiritual trouble through a conversation with comrades who were in the same position. out it is equally certain, that all these people were very secretive toward outsiders, who had nothing to do with the executive, and who were not at all to be considered as full members, but, like the reporter Graf, so-called "paper soldiers." All this, one must consider in order to understand that Graf's claim, that he did not hear anything about mass executions of Jews, etc. by the Kommando during the period of his membership in EK 6, is entirely credible. the Prosecution, insofar they contain references by the activity of EK 6. The defendant Graf, who had nothing to do either with the shootings or with the reports relating to them, is not able to give any relevant information about the statements made in the documents about the activities of EK 6. We have repeatedly heard from other defendants, who had a certain amount of insight, that extreme caution was to be observed in regard to these reports. In this connection I want to point out myself the following facts which particularly struck me when perusing the documents. In the Report of Events of 6 March 1942 - it is Prosecution Doc, NO-3240, Exh. 80, in Doc. Book II C it is reported that the village of Gorlovka had been cleared of Jews by the EK 6. In two Reports of Events dated 10 April 1942, Doc. Book III A, Prosecution Doc. NO-3256, and 20 March 1942, Doc. Book III A, Prosecution Doc. NO-3234, Gorlovka is quoted as garrison of the SK 4b for the same period during which the EK 6. is said to have become operative there. Something must be wrong here. In the Report of Events of 25 February 1942, Prosecution Doc.

NO-3340, Exh. No. 22, Doc. Book I, after naming the EK 6, there is a report on actions in Dnjeprpetrovsk, which are said to have been carried out in January and February. But the EK 6 was no longer in that town and in that area since 12 November 1941. In this connection I refer to the Report of Events of 14 January 1942, in Doc. Book I, Prosecution Doc. NO-3279, Prosecution Exh. No. 21, and to the Report of Events of 16 January 1942, Prosecution Doc. NO-3405, Exh. No. 42, Doc. Book II A. In both documents, Stalino, more than 300 kilometers east of Dnjeprepetrovsk, is quoted as garrison of the EK 6 for the period in question, a fact which confirms the statement of defendant Graf. Hence, there is not much to be derived from the Reports of Events. These documents cannot be construed as evidence against the credibility of defendant Graf, all the lees so, because, according to the statement of witness Hart -the Kommando Chief of EK 6, Sturmbannfuehrer Mohr, ordered executions to be carried out only after detailed examinations of the facts. In this connection I also want to refer to the affidavit of Friedrich Moeller, submitted by me. prising that defendant Graf should not have even once have come to see a mass execution in the course of one of his journeys. In reply to this, the fact must be emphasized that in general these executions were carried out in remote places and, as far as possible, to the exclusion of the public. Therefore it would have been quite a coincidence if defendant Graf on his way had just chanced to meet an execution. If an event, which in itself is possible, could only have happened by chance, one may not assume that its actual happening was probable. The defendant Graf denies that he ever has been even witness of an execution. There is no shadow of a counter-evidence to this fact.

are not apt to create any justified doubt in the credibility of defendant Graf. It is the result of evidence that Graf neither can be considered as principal nor as accessory in the imputed crimes nor had any knowledge of the fact that these crimes were being committed. must essentially result from the evidence. 1 September 1939, of organizations which have been declared to be criminal by the International Military Tribunal and by paragraph 1 (d) of Article II of Control Council Law No. 10, namely the SD and the SS. securing of required manpower for tasks of special state and political importance (Emergency Service Regulation) of 15 October 1938, the defendant Graf was drafted for emergency service by the Landrat in Kempten who had jurisdiction over the defendant's place of residence, and was assigned to the SD-Aussenstelle in Kempten on a war supplementary status. The defendant Graf objected unsuccessfully to this drafting for emergency service at the SD section in Augsburg. later on he tried again and again to get away from the SD. When he was bold enough eventually to apply to the Wehrmacht direct to get enlisted, the only result was his transfer to Dueben and from there his assignment for Einsatzkommando 6 in Russia. Upon his return from the East the defendant was appointed in the late fall of 1942 as Deputy Chief of the SD branch in Kempten. In 1944 Graf took over the SD branch Kaufbeuren as Deputy Chief, Even after his return from his assignment in Russia he never gave up his endeavors to get released from the SD, but they proved until the end of the war just as unsuccessful, as they had been at the time he went to Dueben. Graf refused all invitations from his chiefs to join the SD organization.

Under his liability for emergency service Graf had been attached to the SD as a temporary employee during the war, and there was no change in his relations to the SD until the end of the war. It follows from these facts that Graf has never become a member of the SD. The defendant Graf was nothing else but an ordinary civil servant in the SD, and not a voluntary one at that, but compelled by an act of government authority. For this reason alone the defendant Graf cannot be classed as belonging to the SD organization which was declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal. I quote from the IMT judgment:

"The Security Police and the SD was a voluntary organization."

"The fact remains, however, that all members of the Security Police and SD joined the organization voluntarily under no other sanction than the desire to retain their positions as officials." never apply to the case of defendant Graf.

In Doc. Book V C the Prosecution has presented a legal expert's opinion as Doc. No. 5814, Exh. No. 212, declaring that the Emergency Service Decree of 15 October 1940 with its subsidiary regulations would not offer a legal basis for call-ups to the SS or the SD.

This expert's opinion expounds the private views of a judge pertaining to questions which do not come up for decision at all in this Tribunal, while disregarding altogether all questions under discussion in this trial. the basis of the Emergency Regulations concerning liability of service, anyone had ever been called up for the SD, and in particular whether the Defendant Graf was detached to the SD in this manners. This question has been clearly answered. And even if the opinion, cited, had been correct, this could in no way have sweetened the pill of bitterness that the Defendant Graf had to swallow, namely that of the actual notification for liability of emergency service and his later transfer to EK 6. That notifications concerning liability for emergency service for the SD were sent out, generally, by the competent authorities, according to the official notice of 8 July 1939, and that there hardly existed a possibility to wangle one's way out, e.g. to neglect to comply with the order, is clearly demonstrated by the affidavit of the former Government Councillor Dr. Holz submitted by Counsel for the Defense on behalf of the Defendant Radetzky.

That the defendant Graf had done everything in his power under the existing circumstances, to evade the order for liability to serve in the SD, has been clearly shown by the evidence. ly active in the SD, and neither that he did in fact possess any knowledge of the SD being used as an instrument for the achievement of criminal aims.

2.) Membership in the SS. became a member only in 1933. After having been ordered to join the SD on the basis of his liability for Emergency service he made application, in June 1940, for a renewal of membership in the SS having been urged to do so by his superior officers. Graf then became member of the Special Formation SD of the SS. To the general SS Graf had had no connections since 1936. Graf's re-entry into the Special SS-Formation SD was an inevitable consequence of his conscription for service with the SD. That is, he did not join it of his own free will. In any case, it has been established that Graf did no duty with the SS after 1 September 1939 and did not come at all into contact with the SS as such. On the other hand, his activity with the SD was entirely independent from his membership in the SS. Therefore it cannot be said that the SS had any authority of command over defendant Graf's actions. The Military Tribunal II acquitted in Case 4 versus Oswald Pohl and others, the defendant Volk of the charge of having been a member of the SS because it had not been established clearly enough if the SS had had exclusive authority of command over Volk's actions.

he is not guilty of crimes against humanity and war crimes. There is no basis to the supposition that he knew of the above-mentioned crimes committed by the SS. The correct personal behavior of the defendant speaks against this supposition. defendant Graf is neither guilty on Count III. Matthias Graf and for his release from custody.

THE PRESIDENT: when the Tribunal reconvenes at 1:45 we will hear the two witnesses which are still outstanding and then -

DR. BELZER: I can't understand.

THE PRESIDENT: It doesn't affect you anyway, Dr. Belzer; you are through. And then we understand that Dr. Koessl will be ready to deliver his final plea in the Schubert case.

The Tribunal will now be in recess until 1:45.

(A recess was taken until 1345 hours.)

(The hearing reconvened at 1345 hours, 11 February 1948.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, before the witness is called I respectfully move that the defendant Haensch may be placed in another seat in the defendants' box.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Ruehl will please take the third seat from the end - just exchange seats with Haensch. follows:

JUDGE SPREIGHT: Witness, raise your right hand and repeat after me: I swear by God, the Almighty and Omniscient. that I will speak the pure truth, and will withhold and add nothing."

(The witness repeated the oath.)

JUDGE SPREIGHT: You may be seated.

DR. KRAUSE for the defendant Haensch:

Your Honor, the witness Jauer has been named by the Defense. I would like, therefore, to stare with the direct examination of the witness.

THE PRESIDENT: We understood that you had submitted an affidavit.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honor, the affidavit I shall not introudce after the witness has appeared here on the witness stand. I refer only to her statement she is making on the witness stand.

THE PRESIDENT: Will both counsel please come to the bench.

(Both counsel went to the bench and conferred with the Tribunal.) BY DR. KRAUSE:

Q Where from do you recall his first name?

A That I do not know. If it is not entered in this card index, I am sure I have never asked for his first name.

Q But in your affidavit, you say, "Dr. Walter Haensch is known to me". Till you look now at the chart, does on the chart the first name appear. then his first name was "Walter"?

A Then it was put in at the attorney's, Dr. Kirsch, I have not paid attention to it, the lawyer Dr. Krisch, in Berlin-Zehlendorf, who actually made out the affidavit, then must have added the first name. not known to you?

Q It was not known to you?

Q Did you see Haensch after his treatment by Dr. Maennel had been finished in 1943?

Q Has somebody shown you a picture of his in thelast time?

Q Would you recall the defendant?

A That is very difficult to say. I am not sure. I don't know whether I would recognize the face after that many years.

Q Will you try? Look at the defendants.

cognize the face. I could not say.

Q So you do not recall him?

MR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, I wish that the defendant, Haensch, would show himself to the witness.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, if she doesn't recognize him, there is no point in showing him, then.

MR. HOCHWALD: I only want to know if she Will recognize him if he is shown to her. BY MR. HOCHWALD: your hand was found and who found it? because now we use new cards. The cards are now on the attick, aid there is only a small remainder of cards because one part of the cards was soiled and the remainder I put into the attick. remained?

A That is difficult to say. There are hundreds of them. There are certainly a few hundreds. one which is before you, if you know that?

A Well, there are private cards; they were on the writing desk and therefore they probably remained because those which I put down stairs in the card index box had all been thrown down and were soiled by the Russians. They have been destroyed. before you found among these hundreds of cards which have remained? put into large boxes in alphabetical order and therefore I could find it.

Q So you have told us now that you found the card. Who asked you to look for the card, please?

A Mrs. Haensch arrived and asked whether Dr. Maennel would perhaps make out a certificate to the effect that Haensch in 1942 had been treated by Dr. Maennel, and I said, "He will do so if this card index card can be found." Thereupon I looked for the card.

Q When was that, please?

A I cannot give a date. That must have been beginning of January?

Q How long did it take you to find the card?

AAbout three-quarters of an hour. I am sure it took as long as that.

Q That did you do then when you had found the card?

A I put it into a folder and told Dr. Maennel that I put the card there, he could now make out the testimonial. found the card and you have put the card to Dr. Maennel?

Q I am sorry, would you re cat your answer. I did not follow. and nobody over got it except Dr. Maennel. the stand that all the entries which were made on this card were made by you and were made on the dates indicated on the card, is that correct? word "telephone" and then look please to the entry of 7 February 1942. Is it not apparent from the card that these two entries were made by a person different from the person who made the other entries? for me. It may be her entry.

Q Witness, please, you did not answer my question. I asked you whether it is not apparent that the third line, the address or the word which is written opposite the printed ward "telephone" and the entry of 7 February 1942 are written by a person different from those or those who have made other entries on the card?

Q And who made then the other entries?

AAll the entries are mine. I only said on the 26th November that is probably the handwriting of my sister who might have taken my place for once.

Q 26th November of what year? all entries were made by you is not correct? 26/11 -- November -- that probably was made by my sister.

Q Did you see the card when you made this affidavit? entries yourself if you knew that one of the entries at least was made by somebody else than by you?

A I did not see that. It did not strike me at all. Did you know when you made the affidavit for what purpose this affidavit was made? card, is that correct? line or opposite the printed word "telephone" and the entry of 7 February 1942?

Q Did you make these entries?

Q When did you make this entry?

A "Svenhedin Blatz". I wrote myself after Mrs. Haensch had come to see me and given me the new address, that was in January this year.

Q And did you write the entry of 7 February?

AAfter the patient had been there. When the patient was actually treated.

after the visit of Mrs. Haensch? wrote the word "SvenhedinBlatz" with the same ink and at the same time also made the entry which allegedly was made on the 7th of February 1942?

A No, after Mrs. Haensch came to see me I wrote "SvenhedinBlatz". in January 1948?

A I don't understand. January 1948?

MR. HOCHWALD: I have no further questions, your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: May I see that card, please? BY THE PRESIDENT: word "telephone"?

A No. The address after the word "telephone" I wrote myself.

Q And when did you write that?

AAfter Mrs. Haensch had come.

Q Why did Mrs. Haensch tell you to add that -- what explanation did she give to you which caused you to write this in -- What did she say to you -- why was it necessary to add that address? Maennel was to be sent there by post and therefore she told us they were living somewhere else now, therefore, I put it in pencil on an envelope and when I found the card I added that.

Q Well, did Mrs. Haensch tell you to add this to the card?

Q Well, we still don't understand why it was necessary tto add that address to the card. to Mrs. Haensch. I had written the address on an envelope and generally one throws these envelopes away, and therefore I put it on the card.

Q Well, why didn't you give the card to her when she was there?

A I hand't found it then. It was only the next day that I went upstairs and looked for the card.

Q Well, then did you mail it to her?

A No. Mrs. came here to fetch the letter. she was going to call for it personally?

A I didn't know that she would come. She actually did come on the next but one day and the letter had not been made yet. were to mail the card to her?

A No, not the card, only the letter by Dr. Maennel -- the --the medical certificate which she had asked for, that is what she wanted.

Q The affidavit you mean?

A No, only the letter to the effect that Dr. Haensch had been treated in 1942. card which had nothing to do with the mailing of the certificate? the-way on this envelope, I also put it on this card. There is nothing unusual about it, I just put it there. manent record? address and they tell us about these addresses, we put them on the index card.

add this item of February 7?

Q Which entry was made by your sister?

THE PRESIDENT: Let her point it out and then show me. BY THE PRESIDENT:

Q How many other entries were made by anybody else?. thing also on the card was written by you?

Q Is that correct?

Q Now, you remembered Dr. Haensch coming there for treatment, do you? Do you remember that Walter Haensch came there for treatment in 1941, 1942, and 1943?

AAfter Frau Haensch had said whether Dr. Maennel would make out a medical certificate, I assumed that the patients had been there and therefore I looked for the card index card.

Q Well, then after you had spoken with Mrs. Haensch, did you recall Haensch having been there for treatment? activity "Dr. Walter Haensch" then with the address "is known to me"-why did you say that if he wasn't known to you? out the affidavit and therefore I knew, as I had written it myself, that Dr. Haensch had been treated, only from this card.

Q Did you remember his first name?

A No. The first name, if it was not contained on the index card, I did not know it.

Q Well, this affidavit says that Haensch was known to you. Do you mean that?

A I only know Dr. Haensch from the treatment he received.

Q Well, then you do know that Haensch came there for treatment? had been there.

Q Then you know that Haensch had come there for treatment? A Yes. three years, about 12 times, is that right? for one treatment?

Q Well, I said "the average", would you say that this was more than the average or less than the average, you were treating from 80 to 100 patients per day, weren't you? repeat? days until the treatment had been completed. times one patient would be treated before his treatment was complete?

A Roughly throe to four times. That depends on what is wrong. per day, do you realize how many visits there would be in a year's time? Say, on the average of 90 per day, let us say 300 days per year. Do you realize into what figure that goes?

A I. Yes.

Q And over a period of 3 years that would 81,000 visits wouldn't it?

A Well, now, of course, patients kept returning. They are not always now patients. one patient would have before his treatment would be completed and you told me on the average of 3 or 4 treatments. treated, then he has to return 4 to 5 times; if, of course, he has pain again after about 8 weeks -- well, of course, that is very difficult to say.

Q Very well, now you have a recollection of Haensch, haven't you, of Haensch coming there during 1941, 1942, and 1943 -- you remember his coming there, don't you?

A I don't remember it now, but he must have been there because I made the entries on the index card, other wise, the index card would not even exist.

as an ink entry -- as an individual -- do you remember hin as a person, Haensch, coming there for treatment?

A That is difficult to say. I could perhaps say that he was a tall man, but it is too long ago and I can't say for certain, The name, when Mrs. Haensch came for this, I did know that Haensch had come once for treatment. The name was known to me.

Q Then you do remember him? according to these figures, at least 20,000 people, you remember that Haensch is a tall man. Is that what you are telling us?

A I cannot say with certainty. I do not know. not recall Haensch as a man, not as an entry.

Q You don't have any mental image of him? him in the defendants' box. One often sees faces and one believes to have seen then before because very often I do recognize the patients in the office, and especially when I hear their names later on and. when I see the patients. I can remember when former patients of the year 1939 and 1940 returned again. In our business one does remember them.

Q Look at the defendants' box. Is it the first man in the first row? Is that Haensch over there, the rather handsome man, smiling?

A It is possible, but I do not know. I really do not know.

Q Is it the first man in the second row?

A No, that is quite impossible. It couldn't be he.

Q Is it the second man?

Q Is it the thrid man?

A I really couldn't tell you. No, it is not Haensch. It isn't he either.

Q Well, is it the fourth man?

Q Look very closely in the defendants' box now and see if you can recognize him.

Q The third in the first row?

A No, against the wall. It is the second row, Your Honor.

Q The third from where?

Q There are two rows. The first or the second row? image of this person? when they return after years, hut I just saw him for the first time now without the glasses and I assume that is Dr. Haensch. you remember this man as being Haensch?

A I assume that it is he, but I couldn't say with certainty. man?

A No. not by any means. there, the man you have identified?

A No, that I couldn't do. person whom you are trying to recall?

11 Feb 1948_A_MSD_18_3_Arminger (Hildesheimer) am not sure.

Q Which one is that?

Q The fourth from the end?

Q Now, what makes you think that he is Haensch?

A I couldn't tell you. mind, because you couldn't make these comparisons unless you had a prototype to draw from. Now tell us from your memory just what Haensch looked like.

A From the treatment that I can't actually say today. I only said that it is possible to recognize a face.

Q All right, now, you have given us two possible people. Look a little bit further. See if there is anyone else there that looks like the image you have in mind. before.

Q Which one?

Q And how about the fourth?

A I seem to recognize that face too, but I couldn't say.

Q Now, why can't you identify Haensch in that defendants' dock, when you saw his picture just a few days ago?

Q You looked at his picture before you came here to Nurnberg. Mrs Haensch showed it to you.

Q You haven't seen a picture of the man that you think is Haensch at all in your life?

11 Feb 1948_A_MSD_18_4_Arminger (Hildesheimer) saw over a period of three years, that you can recall one individual person? again after years; people who have been patients in 1939, if one sees the fact again, one can remember when one sees that face again, and, if the patients also say that they have been treated before, then one might be able to remember the face. to the name of Haensch wear glasses?

A I could not say that. That much I do not know. That, of course, one cannot remember.

Q Well, why didn't you remember the glasses. That's part of the picture of a person's face, if he wears glasses? him with or without glasses.

Q But you would remember whether he were glasses or not, wouldn't you, if you saw him twelve times?

A That I couldn't say.

Q (To the page) Please hand this to the witness. We had bettor use a pen. Please write on there the figures, "7, 2," and then the letters "p o l".

A (The witness did as requested.)

Q "P o l" Is that third letter an "1"?

Q Please write on here, the word, "Zehlendorf."

A (The witness did as requested.) I want to ask you to look once again in the defendants' box and tell me whether you are willing to state on your oath that there is anyone in that box that could be Haensch, the man who came to your boss's office for treatment, if there is anyone there, and can you state that on your oath?

11 Feb 1948_A_MSD_18_5_Arminger (Hildesheimer)

A No, under oath, I can't state that that is Dr. Haensch. totaling line on April 23 and then later wrote the figures "7, 2." Why does "7, 2" follow 23-4?

A. That was a treatment which was not charged for, and therefore it wasn't added in.

Q. Why wouldn't this item, "7,2" be above the totaling line, since it precedes it in date?

A. That is a treatment which is not charged for and therefore it is not entered.

Q. Why don't you charge for polishing?

A. That is part of the treatment and it isn't charged for as a rule.

Q. What kind of a treatment was given prior to polishing? Some fillings, a filling ?

A. Yes, yes, a filling was made.

Q. Yes, and after every filling, there is a polishing, isn't there?

A/ Yes, every patient is asked to come for a polishing,

Q. Now, please tell the Tribunal why there isn't a polishing entry after the fillings which were introduced on the last item of that card?

A. The patient probably did not appear again, otherwise it. would have been entered.

Q. And why didn't he appear?

A. That I. do not know.

Q. Well, he apprared for the first tine. Why didn't he appear the second time?

A. Every patient is asked after a filling has been made, to come again within the next eight days, to come again for polishing,

Q. You say, after eight days?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?

A. Well, that again depends -

Q. Tell me how many days intervened?

A. A few days. In any case the patient is asked to come back.

Q. Tell me how many days intervened between January 14 and February, Is that eight days?

A. No.

Q. It is three weeks, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now-

A. It doesn't really matter, the date when the patient returns. I said every patient is asked to come back, but when he does come back it does not matter to us.

Q. Is polishing part of the job, part of the repair work?

A. Yes, it is important.

Q. It is important?

A. Yes, it is of considerable importance.

Q. Now, no patient goes to a dental parlor just for fun, does he? No one goes for entertainment purposes.

A. No.

Q. On the contrary, it is proverbial that one tried to avoid going to a dentist until the situation is such that he just must go. That's understood, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. But when a patient is confronted with the necessity of having his teeth attended to, then he goes, doesn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this patient was so much concerned about his teeth in February 1942 that he came back for that polishing process, didn't he?

A. I don't know whether he worried, but in any case he was there.

Q. He came. The record shows he came.

A. He must have been there. Otherwise the entry would not have been made.

Q. Now, can you explain to us what process of reasoning caused this patient not to come for those other fillings in 1943?

A. I do not know.

Q. The same doctor, the same patient, the same clerk, the same kind of work. Yet he reacted differently, when it came to the two fillings which were introduced. You have no explanation for that?

A. We cannot go and fetch the patients by force, if they don't come back for polishing, It happens quite often.

Q. Did you send the police after him to come back on February

Q. Did you send the fire department for him to have his teeth polished on February 7?

A. No.

Q. No came voluntarily, didn't he?

A. Obviously.

Q. Do you know why he didn't cone voluntarily a few months later

A. No, that I do not know.

Q. Is ther any other item on here that doesn't call for payment?

A. Ho. I would have to look at the card again. I would have to see it again.

Q. All right. Please look at the card and tell me if there are any otheritems there which do not call for payment.

A. Yes, there is a trepanation, so-called, which I never charge for, in the first treatment, that is, there follows either an extraction of -

Q. Let us see the card.

A. Where there is an extraction.

Q. What did you call that treatment?

A. A drilling. It is a drilling of the teeth, an opening of the tooth.

Q. And you don't charge for that?

A. No, if the patient returns, it is charged only very rarely and that again depends, as I say, either the tooth can to treated again, or it is extracted.

Q. Now, witness, I would like you to have explain to us why it is that the address watch you wrote in January, 1938, was written with exactly the same ink that was used in the writing of the entry of 7th February. Now look at it very carefully and tell us why the same type of ink was used.

A. I cannot see that.

Q. Well, you see it is the same ink, Tell us why it happened to be the same ink.

A. I cannot see that.

Q. You say it isn't the same ink? Do you say it is not the same ink?

A. We had fountain pens, ink, and fountain pen ink.

Q. Well, please tell us Whether it is or is not the same ink.

A. I could not say that.

Q. You mean you can't tell us?

A. No.

Q. Or that it is not the same ink.

A. I could not tell you.

Q. You say you don't know whether it is the same ink or not?

A. I could not say whether that is the same ink.

Q. Well, then, it could be the sane ink?

A. Moll, that is impossible, becasue -

Q. witness, just a moment. Just a moment. I asked you first if you know whether it is the same ink or not. How answer that ques tion.

A. It cannot be the same ink, because I only wrote the address now, in January 1948.

Q. That is the only reason you give?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Let's see that, please. Now, when you made these entries on the card, did you usually dip from the same ink well?

A. No, We had fountain pens and I had a pen and ink and very often we used different fountain pens.

Q. How many fountain pens did you have?

A. No, fountain pens and one ordinary pen and ink.

Q. So that you had three different types of pens?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, now, please tell us why from 16 November 1941 to the lit of January 1942 you used always the some pen and ink and then suddenly on February 7, decided to use another pen and other ink? Tell us why you made that change?

A. Often another pen was used. First there is a pencil mark. It has been written in pencil first, as a matter of fact, and then it has been added in ink. Dr. Maennel had another fountain pen, perhaps, that was just lying about. I couldn't say.

Q. You used the boss's fountain pen also?

A. Yes, also on occasion, when it was there, it was also used.

Q. Yes, and how many times did you use the boss's fountain pen?

A. I only say, when it was lying about, when he forget to put it in his pocket, of course, it was used.

Q. And was it with the boss's pen that you wrote this entry of February 7?

A. I made the entry.

Q. Was it with his pen?

A. That I couldn't say today, what land of fountain pen that was.

THE PRESIDENT: The witness will not be allowed to speak to anyone during the recess which will take place for fifteen minutes.

( A recess was taken.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

Q. (By the President) Witness, the month of April follows the month of February, doesn't it?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. The month of April is later in the year than February -February, March, April?

A. Yes.

Q. So that if you would make an entry in February anywhere on a sheet of paper, an entry made two months later would be lower down on the sheet ordinarily, wouldn't it? That's right, isn't it, ordinarily speaking?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. All right. Now you recall on this card that you sent out the bill on April 23, but yet the item of Feb, 7 does not appear before April 23. That is correct, isn't it?

A. I would have to look at it first.

Q. Look at it. The item of February 7, does not precede the item of April 23 in point of deapth on the sheet.

A. Well, it is on the same line.

Q. On the same line? Very well. Let me have that. You didn't give that an item a line by itself, did you, a line by itself?

A. No, this is a treatment which is not charged for.

Q. And therefore you did not give it a full line?

A. No.

Q. That is the reason you did not give it a full line, because you didn't charge for it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, please, explain to us why you gave a full line to the first item for which you didn't charge anything either? You have a full line there, haven't you, for that first item?

A. Yes, this was done in October, 1942 already.

Q. But you gave it a full line?

A. Well, another treatment was necessary for that tooth.

Q. But you gave it a full line and placed a diagonal in the space which you usually reserved for the price, correct?

A. I don't quite understand what you mean here.

Q. I will call your attention to the first item for which you say there was no charge. Although there is no charge you did make a mark. You placed a symbol of some land within the column intended ordinarily for the price, is that correct?

A. Yes, for this treatment in October, the extraction was char. for.

Q. Well, you do not charge for the first item, do you? You told us that before recess.

A. Yes.

Q. All right, but at the end of the line you placed a mark. like that, a diagonal, which indicates no price, is that correct? Please look at that first line, the first item. Do you see that?

A. Are you talking about the treatment in October?

Q. The first item.

A. During the first treatment, yes, I see it now.

Q. All right. In the column which ordinarily carries the cost of the treatment, you only have a diagonal, like this?

A. Yes.

Q. That means there is no charge, for that, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, please tell us why you didn't make the same kind of a symbol on February 7, for another item which did not call for payment?

A. Well, in the case of the first drilling, the first treatmen, the treatment was continued, the tooth was treated after that.

Q. But when you administered the polishing treatment of Febuary 7, you have not yet decided to charge the man, because the bill didn't go out until April 23, so why didn't you carry the item across the shoot and make the same kind of a mark, as you did above?

A. Well, the treatment had been concluded then. I did not have to do that. Here in this case, the treatment had been concluded and therefore I made the account for the treatment and this entry of the 7th of February then came on the sane line at the totaling.

Q. But the totaling did not come, the totaling did not come immediately. It was two months later, two and a half months later.

A. Yes.

Q. So, therefore, you had plenty of space to put this same kind of a mark, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. You didn't know that the patient night not return again in February or March or the first part of April. You had no way of knowing whether he would come back or not?

A. Yes.

Q. So that you wouldn't total the figures until you were ready to send out the bill, would you?

A. No.

Q. Then it is incomprehensible to me why you would have this totaling line which refers to April 23 above the item of February 7.

A. Well, I just said, because it was not charged for, I did not include it.

Q. Very well. Now, you treated from 80 to 100 -- Well, first let me ask you about this last treatment again. Please look at that.

A. What is that' last treatment?

Q. The last one on the card.

A. Those are fillings, two fillings.

Q. Two fillings?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, how much time would the dentist spend with a patient to take care of two fillings?

A. That all depends.

Q. Well, generally.

A. It depends on what kind of a tooth it is, what is the matter with it, how bad it is.

Q. What would be the minimum of time to do one filling?

A. Well, one cannot really say. It depends entirely on the tooth. This was a treatment of the root. There are teeth which take months to treat.

Q. Well, I am only speaking of one visit. Would it last about a half an hour?

A. Well that depends on how long the patient has to wait. We work according to a time schedule, but one can't always keep to that.

Q. Now, please look at that card and indicate generally, since I preseme you are failiar with the various treatments, how much time the patient was in the chair each time he came there.

A. Two fillings?

Q. Two fillings, how long for two fillings?

A. Twenty minutes. Well, that depends again on how much has to be drilled.

Q. All right, and how long for a polishing process?

A. That is very quick, the polishing doesn't take long at all.

Q. Fifteen minutes?

A. No.

Q. Ten minutes?

A. No.

Q. What hind of polishing did you give?

A. Ton minutes or eight minutes, not longer than that.

Q. All right. How much time for the trapaning process which you mentioned, that first item?

A. A trepanation, yes.

Q. A trepanation, yes.

A. That all depends how bad the pain is, what kind of pain the patient has.

Q. You have to drill through a crown, don't you?

A. Yes, the filling has to be taken out first or the crown has to be drilled open, and then it depends.

Q. That would take about a half hour, wouldn't it, for a process of that kind?

A. Well, it is hard to say. Sometimes it is very quick. If the channel is quite free and one can got at the root very easily then it is very quick, but sometimes it takes at least half an hour. quarter of an hour or twenty minutes.

Q. All right, let's say twenty minutes on the average, although that sounds pretty rapid. Take the next item on that card, what is it?

A. That is a temporary filling.

Q. How long would that take, about fifteen or twenty minutes ?

A. Well, for the first temporary filling it takes about ten minutes, but then the channel has to be cleaned up again.

Q. Well, you would say that on the average at least fifteen minutes was given to a visit, wouldn't you? You have one a half hour, another twenty minutes, another ten minutes. A pretty fair agerage would be -

A. No, it is not always like that. Yes, but there are eases when it only takes two minutes or where the temporary filling can be changed very quickly.

Q. It takes two minutes?

A. Every treatment varies.

Q. It takes two minutes just to get in and out of the chair. Tell me what treatment you can dispose of in -

A. Well, I am only talking about the temporary fillings as such done by the doctor.

Q. You tell me what treatment it is that can be done in two minutes. I would, like to know who this dentist is because that is pretty rapid treatment. Tell me what treatment you can do in two minutes?

A. Well, it is very quick. For example, when one changes a temporary filling that is very quick.

Q. You can do that in two minutes?

A. Two to three minutes.

Q. You can do that in three -

A. From the time when the doctor starts.

Q. Hell, altogether from the time that the patient arrives in the office and leaves the office, how much time would expire on the average?

A. Ten minutes.

Q. Ten minutes?

A. Well, from the moment - when the patient sits down in the chair until the moment when he leaves the chair.

Q. That is ten minutes?

A. Ten minutes, on the average.

Q. That is on the average, yes. How many hours a day did you work; how many hours a day did you have your office open?

A. We worked all day. We hardly had. any break for lunch,

Q. Well, all right, how many hours would that be?

A. We started about a quarter to nine and mostly worked through the lunch hour until eight, eight-thirty every evening, every day.

Q. You didn't stop for lunch?

A. We just ate very quickly but then the patients already arrived again.

Q. And the dentist did not stop for lunch?

A. No, I just said hardly. There-were days when we were at rest for an hour but on the whole it was constant.

Q. Well, he would stop for lunch, wouldn't he?

A. Yes, we would eat, of course,

Q. And on the average how much time did you have for lunch perday?

A. Well, sometimes we didn't even have time to sit down because the bell was ringing again, There was nobody else there.

Q. Now, witness, you know that it is absolutely impossible to treat one hundred patients perday every day, day in and day out, allowing for only ten minutes, which is a very small average per patient.

You Know that is impossible, don't you?

A. Well, but there were so many patients.

Q. You treated eighty to one hundred patients every day?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you realize that on the basis of only ten minutes per patient you would have to work sixteen hours continuously per day?

A. Well, I said sometimes it is very quick with some patients. It doesn't even take ten minutes. It is hard to see that, but there were so many Patients.

Q. Well, there were some that would take a half hour?

A. Yes, because of extractions or injections and people who had to wait.

Q. Well, that would lengthen the average, wouldn't it?

A. No, it is vary quick, because the patients which get out again, they just get the injection and in the meantime we can go on treating someone else.

Q. Hay I have the card back? (The exhibit was handed back to the President.) How long did you speak with Mrs. Haensch before you came dorm here to testify?

A. How long?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, it was very quick. She just asked me whether the doctor could write out the certificate.

Q. Everything is done very quickly in your office, conversations, extractions, trepanations, polishings?

A. Certainly.

Q. Yes, and this addition was made very quickly too, wasn't it? this February 7th?

A. No, the additions are made in the evenings and sometimes I even made them on Sundays, I made the bills.

Q. This entry of February 7th was made when?

A. That was made when the patient was there 7 February.

Q. Did you always make the entry the same day that the treatment occurred?

A. Yes.

Q. Without fail?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you please indicate to me what you mean by this angular line which precedes every item? (Indicating)

A. Well, that is the statement concerning the tooth, whether it is on the right or the left or the upper of the lower, and the figure is contained in it.

Q. Well, what does that mean when it is like this (indicting)?

A. That is the left top.

Q. That means the left top. All right.

A. Yes, the left top.

Q. Yes. Now, please tell us which tooth it was which was polished?

A. Well, it was that tooth that had been filled.

Q. Well, left or right, left top, right top?

A. The one that had been treated before.

Q. well, how do you know that?

A. Well, if the tooth is to be polished then only that one is polished which Dr. Maennel has filled.

Q. Do you use this with each item (indicting)?

A. No.

Q. When did you use it and when did you omit it?

A. When that tooth is treated.

Q. When do you use it and when do you omit it? How do you decide when to use this angle and when not to use it?

A. When a tooth is treated the angle is entered and then when it is polished it is not necessary to do so because we know which tooth is to be polished, which one we have filled.

Q. Suppose that you do a trepanation job and then the patient comes back for treatment of that same tooth, do you use the angle?

A. For a trepanation, yes.

Q. When he comes back a second time, do you use that angle?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, you know it is the same tooth, why must you use the mark?

A. Well, for temporary fillings, etc., it is necessary. One just does it.

Q. Well, you use this mark in order to identify a tooth, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you would use that each time the patient arrived, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. To identify the tooth?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, please tell me why you don't have it as against the February 7th item?

A. Well, this is a polishing operation and we know that Dr. Maennel had treated that tooth.

Q. Well, you knew what he had done in those other instances. It was always the same tooth. Why did you need to identify it each time when it was always the same tooth but yet omit it on the February 7th item?

A. Well, it was never entered for polishing the tooth; the tooth is never marked.

Q. Well, you are merely saying that doesn't explain it. A person comes in end he must have, let us say, the upper seventh -- just to give some number. He gets & treatment, then he comes back again. It is still the upper seventh and you use that line in every instance, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. How would you compare it against the February 7th item?

A. Well, when it is polished it is not a marked specifically.

Q. He still has to know which tooth to polish, doesn't he?

A. Well, we know. It is written above that.

Q. Well, in those other instances, it is Written above else. Let's have the card. Now take this item of 1 November 1941. Then it is followed by the item of 13th of November. Tell me whether it is the same tooth. Does the second item refer to the same tooth as the first item?

A. Yes.

Q. Why do you use the angle then? You know it is the same tooth.

A. Well, these matters -- those are temporary fillings, etc. and that is usual. That is what one does for fillings and temporary fillings. It is usual that the tooth is marked.

Q. Well when a patient comes in to have a cert in tooth polished because some work had been done to that tooth, the dentist has to know which tooth, doesn't he? He just doesn't polish any tooth at random.

A. No. When a patient comes and asks us that this tooth is to be polished because it is sharp, then the doctor does it but after a continuous treatment, it is not necessary because it is not charged for and it is not usual that the tooth is marked. One simply writes "polishing".

Q. Then your explanation is, the reason you do not use this angle mark is because there Was no charge for it, is that right?

A. Yes, and because it is not the usual practice to mark that tooth when it is only polished.

Q. All right, if you don't make that angle only because there is no charge, why did You make the angle against the first item for which there was also no charge?

A. Well, in the case of the trepanation, the doctor has to know after the second treatment which tooth he has worked a trepanation on.

Q. Well, he has to know also which tooth to polish, doesn't he?

A. Well, we know which tooth we have treated.

Q. Well, wouldn't you know which tooth you had done the trepanation on?

A. Of course, the doctor can see that, but that saves him looking at the tooth again by merely looking at the card. Then he knows what he has treated.

Q. Why does he have to go on a searching expedition to find a tooth which must be polished. why couldn't you put that same item against the polishing operation?

A. Well we know, because on the top seventh on the left he has had a filling, and we know which tooth is to be polished.

Q. Well, why wouldn't you know after a trepanation job which tooth it was that had to be done?

Let us take the third item. On the first time you have done the trepanation job. Then he comes again on the 13th of November, still the same tooth, and you do something else. The he comes on the 26th of November and you treat him again, the same tooth. Then he comes on the 3rd of December and you treat him again. By this time you ought to know which tooth it is, wouldn't you? One, two, three, four, five-you have treated him five times. You know by this time which tooth it is, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Then why must you make thisangle each time?

A. Well, because that is the usual practice. One just does it.

Q. Well, why isn't it usual practice when he comes for his other treatment which is the polishing?

A. No. I can only repeat that is a matter -- in most cases, the patients don't come back but many of them do come back and it is simply noted down briefly when the patient has come. It is just noted down that the tooth has been polished.

Q. When he does come back for the polishing, it is important that you polish the right tooth, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, if you use the angle line for identification on the other treatments, then why wouldn't it be necessary for the identification of thepolishing job?

A. Well.

Q. When you don't charge, do you use a whole line or not on this card?

A. Well, I have to enter it.

Q. When you mentioned the polishing job, you did not use a whole line because there was no charge, that is right, isn't it?

A. No.

Q. Well, maybe you don't understand the question. When he came on February 7th and had that tooth polished, and you made the entry on the card, you did not give it a whole line on the card because there was no charge, is that correct?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. That is your explanation, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, now please tell us why you give a whole line to the treatment of 23 October for which there was also no charge?

A. Well, treatment was continued then. We did not yet know what was to become of the tooth, whether we would have to continue treating the tooth.

Where was I to write about the extraction? I had to start a new line.

Q. You still made no charge for the item? You made no charge for that item?

A. No, the trepanation was not paid for.

Q. So therefore your explanation that the reason you gave only half line to the polishing job of February 7th because there was no payment expected is not the explanation for giving only half a line, is it?

A. This treatment had been concluded at the time, in fact, and therefore I did not hove to leave that line empty and therefore I made the totaling line one line higher up.

Q. But you did not know when you entered the item of February 7 that he was not going to comeback for some other treatment, did you? You couldn't tell whether he was coming back or not?

A. No, after one polishing, one treatment has been concluded.

Q. He could have come back on March 1st for some other kind of treatment, couldn't he?

A. Then he would have had to have pains again.

Q. He could have come back on March 1st for another tooth.

A. Yes, but now the tooth had been looked at and it could not be expected that something would occur, would go wrong.

Q. I said some-other tooth. He could break another tooth.

A. You mean the polishing?

Q. Witness, we have an item here February 7 polishing. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You did not send out a bill until April 23?

A. Yes.

Q. So it was perfectly possible for him to come back in March for some other kind of treatment?

A. Well, if he had come, then of course we would have continued to treat him.

Q. So that you did not total these items until April 23?

A. No, they Were totaled when the bill was sent out.

Q. So you still do not give us an explanation why your totaling line, which was dated April 23, would precede the item of polishing which was February 7?

A. Well -

Q. Anything else you want to add? That is the explanation you had given.

A. No.

THE PRESIDENT: All right, Mr. Hochwald.

MR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, I have no further questions but it would be possibly adviseable that the witness should stay ready until after the testimony of the expert Witness on handwriting so that further questions which may arise from this testimony could be put to the witness later.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, Just one other question which Judge Dixon suggests. BY THE PRESIDENT:

Q. Is the name Haensch a very unusual name in German?

A. I really don't know.

Q. Well, do you know of any other Haensches? Have you ever heard the name in any other connection?

A. No.

Q. But it is possible that there could be someone else called Haensch?

A. Well, I never heard that name and I do not recall any other patients who had that name, Haensch.

Q. But you do not know the defendant Haensch personally, do you?

A. No.

Q. How do you know that the treatments recorded on this card were administered to Walter Haensch, one of the defendants inthis case? You don't know, do you?

A. I beg your pardon.

Q. I will put the question a little more simply. You do not know Walter Haensch, one of the defendants in this case, personally?

A. No.

Q. So that when you talk about Haensch, you talk about the individual who came into your office?

A. Yes.

Q. You do not know whether the individual who came into your office is the same man who s the defendant in this case of your own personal knowledge?

A. No.

Q. We would like to have you remain if you will, available, because you might be called later after we hear another witness.

THE PRESIDENT: Marshal, would you take care of the witness so that she will be comfortable?

Does the defense counsel desire to put any further questions? Very well. DR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, the prosecution would like to call at this time the witness Commander Francois Bayle.

THE PRESIDENT: Let the witness be called.

DR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, the witness who is a French citizen will testify in English. he will have an interpreter stand by if he should feel limited in his expressions and therefore need an interpreter.

JUDGE DIXON: Will you raise your right hand, please? Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to the court in this action now on trial shall he the truth, the whole and nothing bu the truth, so help you, God, and do you so swear?

THE WITNESS FRANCOIS BAYLE: I shall swear.

JUDGE DIXON: You may be seated, BY MR. HOCHWALD:

Q. Commander, will you please give the Tribunal your name, your rank, and your official position?

A. My name is Francois Bayle. and my rank is Commander in the Medical Corps of the French Navy.

THE PRESIDENT: Commander, please spell your second name.

THE WITNESS: My first name is Francois __F_R_A_N_C_O_I_S. My last name is Bayle __ B_A_Y_L_E.

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: I am Commander in the Medical Corps of the French Navy, and a specialist of Neuro-psychiatry. BY MR. HOCHWALD:

Q. Go on.

A My education and training are the following. After two first years of medical studies begun in Paris, I entered the main Naval Medical School in Bordeaux, received my doctor of medicine degree and state examination in 1928, interne in 1929, became assistant doctor in the neurological and psychiatric clinic in Toulon, and received the degree of specialist for hospitals in this field in 1936. I was for four years the director of the applied psychology center of the naval laboratory in Toulon, and later on directed an institute for applied psychology in Claimant University. In the same time I took my degrees in philosophy. I always have been interested in handwriting, which from the very beginning appeared to me as the recording of the numerous and delicate gestures through which everyone 11 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_2_Spears (Juelich) expresses his main characteristics.

The value of these analyses of handwriting is proved by the more fact that no handwriting looks like another.

Q. May I interrupt you for a moment, Commander? Can you tell the Tribunal whether, if any experience you have as a court expert as to handwriting?

A. I had approximately 12 years experience in the experimental study of handwriting. My expert training in these fields started in 1935, and consisted in the study and application of the works of the two main specialist, French specialists --I mean in this field. Crepieux_Jamain and Carton. Crepieux_Jaimain's works on the question are known the world over, and he is considered as the creator of modern scientific handwriting study. Has man works which are wellknown to me are the following: Practical Treating of Graphology, Handwriting and Characters, Fundamental Basis of Graphology. Age and Sex in Handwriting, Elements of Scoundrel Handwriting. ABC of Graphology. and so forth. I have been also a direct and personal pupil of his coworker, Dr. Carton, who died three months ago and who wrote in particular, Mentally Diagnosing by Handwriting, Diagnosis and Conduct of Temperaments, Medical Arts. Keys of Individual Diagnosis, and thirty important works books. Since 1935 I have used my knowledge of handwriting in performing such work. Moreover, I was utilized last year during the medical case as an expert the study of one handwriting during the medical case. out of some files under the heading, "Dr. Haensch, Hartmannsweller Weg 16?" I will hand you the card. all the entries with the exception of one, the date of which I do not know, but if you would hand me the card, I can tell it to you-with the exception of an entry which appears on the date of 26 November 1941, 11 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_3_Spears (Juelich) that she has written all the entries herself.

She has further testified that the entry on the third line of the card, which appears opposite of the printed word "telephone" was written "by her in January 1948. I ask you, according to your expert opinion, is it correct that all entries, with the exception of the entry of 26 November were written by the same person, and is it further correct that the entry of the 26th November was written by someone else? I must say first that it is admitted in handwriting specialists' circles that the establishment of 10 species permits the identity and figuration of a given handwriting among hundreds of thousands of others. Without the slightest difficulty, I was able to gather 11 species for the violet handwriting and 15 different species for the black-blue one. hose species being, of course, different, and notwithstanding the possible species, they might have in common, each specie belongs to one of the seven following genus; speed, pressure, form, dimension, direction, contintuity, and arragnement. If we consider first the violet handwriting, which concerns the third line in front of the German, word "telephone" and the entry which appears in front of the date then of February 1942, I any say that this handwriting belongs in all probability to the same and only person and presents the 11 following species: the speed is fast; the pressure is sharpened, explosive, and this; the form is round, the dimension is irregular, and even-elevated; the direction is straight and centrifugal; the continutiy is very poorly organized; and the arrangement is loose. If we consider now the blue and black handwriting, I may point out 15 different species, and these species being absolutely different of the 11 ones which have just been described. That is to say, for the speed; the speed is reserved, inhibited, restrained, well something like inhibited, a variety of inhibited. The pressure is regularly conducted, thick, heavy_set. The form is large and arched. Dimension is low, inflated, and equal. The direction is rigid, slightly bent.

11 Feb 1948_A_MSD_24_4_Spears (Juelich) The continuity is slightly organized and the Arrangement is ordered. The conclusion of the pointing out of the 11 species for the violet ink and the 15 different species for the two others -- the conclusion is that with a scientific certainty two persons, at least have written these handwritings. can you tell with certainty to the Tribunal that the entry which appears opposite the printed word "Telephone" and the entry which allegedly was made on 7 February 1942 were made by the same person?

A Yes. It is absolutely my opinion and when I have described the 11 species made with the violet ink, I did not discriminate, and in my opinion the same and only person wrote the word "Sven Hedin Platz 8" and "7 Feburary - POL", which I suppose to be "polishing" and I have to precise one thing, that this violet handwriting includes a pretty rare variety of the spasmodic specie. This variety is the explosive specie which can be seen on both entries, first in front of the word "Telephone' and secondly in front of the entry of the 7th of February. This explosive specie Consists of a vigorous and short pressure described for the first time in the "Diagnosis and Conduct of Temperaments" by Dr. Paul Carton, whose first edition was published in Paris in 1926. This very peculiar variety concerns and extremely sensitive subject who reacts by violent, certain and short projection of strength, with violent, spasmodic reactions, but these reactions being checked at once, and restrained by the self-control, and this very rare specie appears, as I have said, in the entries of the violet ink and, on the other hand, it does not appear on any of the other entries. And the blue and black handwriting. in all probability, with perhaps one or two exeptions which can be precised, belongs to the one and same person. possibility that the two entries with violet ink were made by the same person who wrote the other entries?

not the same as the one who made the other entries. certain dates which indicate when these entries were made. Can you tell the Tribunal whether it is your opinion that these entries were made at those dates which are indicated on the chart? written at the top of the chart in front of the printed word "telephone" are written with the violet ink. They seem to have been written much more recently than the two first lines in blue ink and the three first entries of 1341, that is to say. at a later date than they are supposed to. They are supposed not to have been written more than three months later. Furthermore, the three entries with the black ink appearing just before the entry of the 7th of February '42 seem much more recent than, the corresponding dates, December '41 and January '42.

filled fountain pen, and the third line, "Sven Hedin Plantz 8" a Swedish explorer, seems to have been written with a common pen holder which had not much ink for the last letters. Moreover, the entries of the 23rd of October 42 and 27th of October 42 seem to be somewhat pale for having been made ten months after the two entries of December 1941. However I must say that I limit myself to a statement of probability in accordance with the actual date of these entries. This kind of an expert opinion chiefly concerns a chemical expert. The nature and quality of ink may have been altered during the war. Substitutes may have been used, and I do not consider myself as an expert, I mean a chemical expert, in this fields and in this case there is only a presumption of probability for the actual date of the entries. the entry opposite the printed word "Telephone", "Sven Hedin Platz" and the number -- I do not recall the number -

Q -- was made by her in January 1948. Would you say from the nature of the handwriting and from the quality of the ink that the entry of 7 February was made approximately at the same time?

A In all probability these two entires, "Sven Hedin Plat_ 8" and "7 February Pol" have been made by one and the same person at the same time.

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: Thank you very much, Commander, Your Honors, I have no further questions. BY THE COURT: probably made more recently that the on of January 42, you don't mean merely the sequence of a month, Q Because naturally it would be more recent in chronology? month's space of time.

A Yes. Yes, your Honor, but it is indeed very hard to fix even an approximate date, an approximate length of time.

Q Well, we wanted to make clear that you didn't merely mean that it was subsequent,-itself it would have to be one month later.

A I don't think it is possible to see a difference of one or two or three months in an ink, in the color of an ink which has been used six years ago. I do not think that it could be possible to point out a difference of such a short distance of one or two or even three months between two handwritings written six years ago. I don't think so. That is all I meant. I meant a much, much longer time.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. Does defense counsel desire to cross-examine? BY DR. KRAUSE. Writings is based on medical interest mainly. You said here you were particularly interested for diagnostic reasons. As an expert are you in a position to determine a handwriting from a technical point of view concerning the letters and the manner of writing on the basis of your experience?

A You mean the identification of a given handwriting? mainly on the basis of their exterior impression and on the basis of the technical event which took place when the writing was actually done?

able, like many handwriting experts, to determine the actual number of different species of a given handwriting. I think it is out of the question to say that it is a more question of impression, and the eleven species I have indicated for the violet ink and the fifteen other species I have indicated for the blue-black ink, indicate clearly that it is not a mere impression but these reserves are based on an objective and, let's say, scientific study.

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, the prosecution is not advised that defense counsel for the defendant Haensch has offered in evidence any expert opinion on the exhibit. If he did or if he wanted to be may do so, but he cannot question the witness on expert opinions which are not in evidence before this Tribunal.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honor, it is my opinion that I should be permitted to put questions which concern the ability of the witness to give an expert opinion.

MR. HORLICH-HOCHWALD: Defense counsel for the defendant Haensch cannot cite and not quote evidence which is not before the Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, he has the right to test the capacity and competence of the expert witness.

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: Your Honor, he certainly has, and there is no objection to that, but I do not think that it is possible that he may question the witness on documents which are non-existent in this courtroom.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honor, I am not operating with any documents or any other papers which have not been submitted to the Tribunal. I merely put questions with no regard to such basic material in order to find out how the expert was interested in handwritings and to what extent and how his opinion should be considered here.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed. The objection is overruled.

Q (By Dr. Krause) Commandant, in your opinion you are speaking about special characteristics, about the speed and the pressure, the form, the size, the direction, etc., and you draw certain conclusions from this, in particular also pertaining to the temperament and the psychological state of the person who wrote. Is this not rather a graphological way of judging a handwriting? But I understand scientific graphology to be, the opinion on a handwriting to the effect that from the handwriting and from the entire impression one gains from the handwriting one can draw conclusions asto the personality of the writer, in particular to his psychological state of mind, his inclinations, etc., but has this anything to do with a comparison of handwriting? word "graphology" it wasonly as far as I have quoted the works of the two French masters who wrote specialized books about handwriting, but I have entirely and definitely limited myself to the word "handwriting" and I did not use in any way the word "graphology". Handwriting and graphology are two different things. I think handwriting is recognized the world over as an objective applied science. and whatever could be my opinion on the possibility of investigating character and temperament through handwriting, -- I do not mean to bring in this court anything else but my experience and knowledge of the objective and scientific study of handwriting. I did not say, for instance, that the person who wrote with the violet ink had such character or such temperament. I did not say that the person who wrote with the blue and black ink had such and such character.

THE PRESIDENT: We understand What you have in mind. You are merely indicating objectively what your study of the handwriting shows only for the purpose of comparison as to the possible author of the handwriting, -

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Not the characteristics which went into that person who Wrote.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I limit myself to an identification.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes.

THE WITNESS: And this identification has been a part, an official part of my training as an expert on neuropsychiatry.

Q (By Dr. Krause) I can leave this point, Commandant, but my misgivings originated when you described your career and your training for this job. You quoted a number of works which in my opinion are purely scientific graphological works and do not concern the usual comparison of handwritings which we know normally.

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: If your Honor please, this is entirely a matter of argument and not the subject of cross-examination.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honor, I am not arguing at the moment but I merely took the liberty of explaining my questions.

Q (By Dr. Krause) Commandant, the female witness who has been questioned here, said among other things that the entries on the card were often made in a hurry. Is that your opinion and did you consider that in your opinion? when she made the entries. Did you consider that too, because she didn't have time to sit down? far as I can be sure -- I am sure that several words which would appear to a, let's say, amateur handwriting expert as written by two different persons have in all probability been written by the same person standing up, for instance, or being obliged to write without a support or in a bad physical condition, but I think it is quite easy to consider and to see on this chart -- Yes, but that does not keep me from believing that main question resides in the fact that at least two different persons have written entries on these charts so far.

addition was made this was done in the evening and sometimes even on Sundays. I believe that she had more time to work then than in the hurry during the day. Do you still stick to your statement that the differences, which you also find concerning speed, oblige you to draw the conclusion that two different persons have made entries on this card?

A Well, I do not understand very Well the question. I do not want you to repeat it counsel. I just want to say that, do you mean the entries which have been written with the exception of the violet 1 ink, that is to say the blue and black ink, or do you mean that there is a possibility of identity between the violet ink and the blue and black ink?

blue-black ink, as far as I know, which refer to the prices and the addition of the prices, in my opinion were written by the same person. Therefore no two persons took part in writing those figures.

A In all probability. I agree.

DR. KRAUSE: Yes, thank you.

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: I have only two questions, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. BY MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD. on the handwriting of the so-called Ding Diary an exhibit before Tribunal No. I, in Case No. I? accepted by the Tribunal and whether in the judgment this Tribunal has accepted your view on the genuineness of this document?

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: Thank you very much.

THE PRESIDENT: Mr. Hochwald, do you know whether you will need the other witness again?

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: If Your Honors please, in view of the testimony of the witness, who has herself testified that she has added something on the exhibit at a later date, and with the view that she herself has admitted that somebody else than herself has made entries on the chart, in view of the expert opinion given by Commander Bayle now, I respectfully move that the exhibit may be rule out and not accepted in evidence. Furthermore, I respectfully move that the witness may be warned by the Tribunal as, according to her own admission, she has made statements in this affidavit under oath, which could not be upheld by her on the witness stand.

THE PRESIDENT: We have just been informed that the sound tape is about to run out this evening, so that the ruling will be made tomorrow morning.

The Tribunal will be in recess until tomorrow morning at 9:30.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 12 February 1948 at 0930 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: The Honorable, the Judges of Military Tribunal II.

Military Tribunal II is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor, I would like to ask that for today, too, the defendant Ohlendorf should be excused for this afternoon and, if there should be a session, also this evening, and be brought to room 57 in order to continue our discussion.

THE PRESIDENT: That, of course, will be entirely agreeable, Dr. Aschenauer but we wanted to make an announcement so that all defense counsel will be informed, and the defendants, Prosecution, of course. Tomorrow the defendants will have the opportunity to make their final statements which procedure is provided in the ordinance under which the court operates. So, that the program for the remaining period will be as follows:

Today we will hear the four remaining closing speeches. Then tomorrow morning we will convene in Courtroom #, the large courtroom. The Prosecution will make its final statement. Defense counsel will be permitted extemporaneously to reply to any completely new matter which could by any chance appear in the Prosecution's final statement. And, then following that the defendants will individually make their statements. In order that the defendants will know the approximate length of their remarks we would suggest that 10 minutes would be ample for each defendant, a maximum of 10 minutes. He, of course, does not need to use all that time if he doesn't desire. The defendant Ohlendorf, of course, will be allowed more time - whatever time is required, whatever time he feels is in order burden of outlining the general defense, the law, and so on. Amd, so with that in mind he would not be limited within reasonable bounds, of course.

If any defendant should feel he would require more than ten minutes then the Tribunal should be informed today of that fact so the necessary arrangements can be made. Then, we will add, the defendant Ohlendorf will be excused from attendance in court - you want him all day today?

DR. ASCHENAUER: Only this afternoon and evening, if there is a session.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Ohlendorf will be excused from attendance in court this afternoon and, also, this evening if there should be an evening session.

DR. ASCHNAUER: That means tonight he needn't come either?

THE PRESIDENT: That's right, should there be an evening session.

Not all the lawyers are here this morning. Will those who are present please take it upon themselves to acquaint their colleagues with what the Tribunal has stated? Thank you. BY DR. HOCHWALD:

Q. May it please the Tribunal, I have only a very few questions to the witness. Witness, yesterday after you had testified the Tribunal heard the testimony of an expert witness on the file card which you ---

THE PRESIDENT: Just a moment. BY DR. HOCHWALD:

Q. Witness, yesterday after you had testified the Tribunal heard testimony from an expert witness on the file card which you have allegedly filled out. This expert witness has declared that the two entries, the one opposite the word telephone "Seven Hedinplatz 8" and the entry of 7 February 1942, both written in violet ink, can not possibly be written by the same person who made the other entries. When I asked this witness whether it is his opinion that if one of these two entries was made as late as January 1948, that also the other was made at the same time, the expert witness said that it is his expert opinion that both entries were made at the same time. Will you tell the Tribunal now, and that's the last time I am asking you this question, who made these two entries?

A. I made those entries.

Q. When did you make these two entries?

A. The address I added now in January. The other one at the time when the patient came to us.

Q. Will you tell the Tribunal the date when allegedly the other entry was made?

A. Well, I cannot tell you the date but it was in January, after Frau Haensch had visited us.

Q. Both entries were made at that time after Mrs. Haensch had been present?

A. No, I only entered the address on the card in January.

Q. Witness, will you look at the card once more? Is it not patently clear that the handwriting of these two entries is completely different from all otherhandwriting and is written in different ink, but the ink of these two entries is identical. Are you still remaining with your ....

A. Yes, I only made that one entry up here.

Q. When did you make the entry which allegedly was made on 7 February 1942?

A. That was written at the time when the patient came for treatment.

Q. Will you tell the Tribunal the date please?

A. On 7 February 1942 when the patient came to us as it has been entered here.

Q. I have no further questions, Your Honor. BY THE PRESIDENT:

Q. Witness, how long did Mrs. Haensch have this card in her possession?

A. Frau Haensch never had the card.

Q. She never saw the card?

A. No, she just glanced at it when the note was written by the doctor. It was attached to the card but she didn't look at it very closely.

Q. Which note was written by the doctor?

A. The certificate which was attached to the card. Frau Haensch asked for a certificate for a trial, she said, and this certificate was attached to the card by the doctor and when Frau Haensch called for it I took the certificate of the doctor off the card.

Q. When did Mrs. Haensch call to see you the first time?

A. I cannot tell you the exact date.

Q. How long ago?

A. It must have been the beginning of January.

Q. And what did she say to you?

A. Whether it would be possible that Dr. Maennel could write a doctor's certificate to testify that Dr. Haensch was treated by him in 1942. She said she required this for her husband for a trial which was supposed to be very important.

Q. Then what did you do after she said this?

A. I said, "Yes the doctor will do that if the file card still exists."

Q. And what did you tell her to do, to come back? Did you tell her to come back?

A. Well, I said "We will either send on the certificate or you can call for it." And then she said they had changed their address and lived in another place now.

Q. Well you weren't certain that you would find the card then, were you?

A. No, I did not know that the card still existed.

Q. And then you went to look for the card?

A. Only the following day, I went to look for it.

Q. And how long did you have to look before you found it?

A. Half an hour, or 40 minutes, or 3/4 hour, approximately.

Q. Do you keep the cards according to year?

A. No.

Q. How do you catalog the cards, alphabetically?

A. Yes, alphabetically.

Q. Why should it take you forty minutes to find a card if you have them arranged alphabetically?

A. Well, they were no longer in alphabetical order quite correctly, only approximately. Not all the cards were in it any more because they were needed for the new file index.

Q. About how many cards did you find in this depository?

A. There are several hundred.

Q. Well why would it take 40 minutes to go through several hundred cards?

A. Well, I said the cards were not in proper order because several had been taken out; they were not packed away in boxes properly.

Q. Did you use these cards for kindling fires?

A. No. Yes. After the Russians had been there, some cards were burned that had become soiled but those up in the attic were not used.

Q. Did you ever use these cards to start a fire with?

A. No.

Q. Well, do you know your boss so testified?

A. I don't know that.

Q. Well, you would know if they were used to start a fire with, wouldn't you?

A. Well, I did not use any.

Q. Which entry was made by your sister on this cart?

A. That was the third line from the top I believe.

Q. Well, I don't know your sister, you will have to tell me.

DR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal, please, I do think it is the entry of 26 November 1941. BY THE PRESIDENT: Yes, that is thethird one. Will someone please come here. Hand the witness a sheet of paper. Now, please write on that paper before you "Zehlendorf, Hartmannsweiler Weg 16".

A. I wrote that in German though on the card.

Q. Well, you can write it in German now.

Now underneath that write "Sven Hedinplatz 8". Let us have that. That's all. Does defense counsel desire to put any further questions to the witness? BY DR. KRAUSE:

Q. Witness, do you have the card in front of you still?

A. No.

Q. May I ask you to have a look at the card again, closely. You will find entries on it which were first written with pencil, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And these pencil entries were then written over with ink?

A. Yes.

Q. Who wrote them with ink?

A. I did that, that is my handwriting.

Q. When was it written in ink? Was that done the same day the entries were made with pencil?

A. No, that was made in the evening when there was spare time, we wrote over it with ink.

Q. How often was this done, perhaps you can tell us by looking at the card?

A. You mean here on the card?

Q. Yes.

A. Three times.

Q. Was the original writing in pencil and writing over with ink done with the entry of 7 February 1942?

A. No.

Q. Can you see this only from the card or do you consider that impossible altotether?

A. I beg your pardon.

Q. As you tell me now, on 7 February 1942, that is, the entry of 7 February 1942, was not first made with pencil and then written over with ink.

A. No.

Q. Do you draw this conclusion merely from what you see on the card now or are you saying this because you recollect that this did not take place in this case?

A. No, I only see this from the card.

Q. You only see that from the card, do you? Witness, you have heard that an expert yesterday made two important statements here. The first one was, if I may repeat this here, that the entries in violet ink behind the word telephone and the entry which refers to 7 February 1942 were allegedly made by another person than the other entries on the card. And, secondly, that the entries in violet ink "Sven Hedinplatz 8" and "7 February 1942 for polishing" were probably made at the same time. I would like to ask you to tell me now who asked you about this matter, who approached you to find the card and make statements concerning it.

A. Frau Haensch came and asked.

Q. Was it only Frau Haensch?

A. Yes, only Frau Haensch.

Q. What did Dr. Kirsch, the attorney, tell you when you made your affidavit there?

A. Attorney Kirsch merely wrote it down.

Q. Have you an explanation for the fact how the attorney Kirsch happened to think of the first name Walter Haensch?

A. Well, Dr. Maennel had made an affidavit previously and I know that Dr. Maennel received a letter and probably Dr. Haensch's first name was mentioned on its top. I am not certain but I assume so.

Q. You said yesterday as far as you recollect you imagined the Dr. Haensch who is entered on your file record to be a tall man. Who told you that Dr. Haensch is a tall man?

A. Well, one vaguely recollects a person when one looks at the file card. Sometimes when patients are treated for a long time one recollects something immediately and one still remembers the person himself vaguely.

Q. I asked you purposely this way - who told you? You said you merely have some recollection. Will you tell the Tribunal that nobody told you?

A. Nobody told me.

Q. You then say again that you vaguely recollect that?

A. Yes.

Q. Witness, according to the result of the testimony of the expert I have to say now a certain suspicion arises concerning the defendant.

MR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, this is direct examination or redirect examination. Explanations to the witness are entirely leading and I do think not admissible.

THE PRESIDENT: You can ask direct questions, but you may not draw conclusions and argue them out with the witness.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honor, at that moment I was merely aiming at making a statement in order to put a very important question to the witness.

MR. HOCHWALD: If this question is so important it is necessary that the witness answers unbiased by an explanation to the witness, the witness might be influenced by the explanation.

THE PRESIDENT: And we assume further more that every question put in a trial is important. It isn't always true. BY DR. KRAUSE:

Q. Witness, I would like to ask you now and for the last time even for my part to tell me the full truth to the following question. Did anyone approach you as far as the entry of 7 February 1942 is concerned, that the card should be falsified and that you only made that entry now in January concerning the 7th of February 1942?

A. No. The entry was made on 7 February 1942.

Q. Therefore, if I understand you correctly, you still say that this was done on the 7th of February 1942?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you realize that you would be doing a poor service to the defendant?

MR. HOCHWALD: That is the same explanation to which I have objected, and the objection was upheld by the Tribunal, plwase not to admit the question.

THE PRESIDENT: Don't you see that is argumentation? A witness comes in supposedly entirely impartially, and unbiased to testify. It isn't a question whether a witness does a good or bad service to any individual in the trial. A witness only is to answer the questions. Just put the questions. Don't argue with her.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honor, in that case I have no further questions, but merely want to make the following statement to the Tribunal. I would like to ask that the card and the tests of the handwriting done by the witness should he given to me so that I can get another expert opinion on handwritings about the samples and the card. I consider this necessary because in my opinion the opinion of the expert who testified here yesterday is not absolutely appropriate as a basis for evidence. May I explain that with a few words? The expert who was examined here yesterday is a physician. He judges handwritings, first of all, according to medical points of view for diagnostical purposes. His training, which he described to us here -

THE PRESIDENT: Just a minute, please. Of course, you will be given the opportunity to have the handwriting examined, just as the prosecution had, although you had the same opportunity the prosecution had before. You are waiting now until five minutes to 12 to ask for what amounts to the presentation of further evidence, but as we have indicated before, we won't deny anyone an opportunity to present any evidence which is relevant, regardless of the hour. You will have this opportunity, but we will say to you that the results will be submitted in writing. There will be no further session of court after tomorrow, and whatever argument you desire to present upon the matter will be submitted in writing and it should be in the hands of the Tribunal no later than let us say next Wednesday.

DR. KRAUSE: Yes.

MR. HOCHWALD: May I then respectfully submit that the prosecution should be permitted to get a copy of this expert opinion and be permitted to answer in writing to this export opinion. I only want to point out two things: The card itself was in the hands of Mrs. Haensch in the beginning of January.

This is more than a month. The affidavit was made by the witness on the 27th of January. It is, therefore, by no means a fault from the part of the prosecution that this possibility has been delayed in such a way.

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, well, that is very obvious that there is no fault attaching to the prosecution in this respect.

MR. HOCHWALD: I further want to point out that immediately when Dr. Riediger intended to put in the affidavit I have asked the Tribunal's permission to ask an expert witness in handwriting so defense counsel can not be in doubt that we did not recognize the possibility of this charge.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Hochwald did you say that the card was in the hands of Mrs. Haensch?

MR. HOCHWALD: I am sorry, the witness said that it was not actually in the hands of Mrs. Haensch, but Mrs. Haensch knows from the beginning of January on that this card is in existence. I am sorry that it was not clear.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honor; hero, too, I did not say anything on purpose. I did not ask for the card to compare handwritings or even wanted to use it for that purpose because I wanted to wait until the witness had been examined and until Dr. Maennel had been examined, too. I considered it unsuitable to take part in examining the card before the witness had testified here. According to the results of this testimony, I could come to a resolution whether such an examination would become necessary or not. May I emphasize here that neither Dr. Riediger nor myself ever had any contact with Mrs. Jauer or Dr. Maennel verbally and with the latter only in writing; we only saw the card here when Dr. Maennel handed it over to the Tribunal here. It was never in our hands. I saw it for the first time yesterday. I intentionally did not do anything.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, you have stated that and don't keep repeating yourself. You had access to the card and you didn't take it because you wanted to hear the witness first. You have heard the witness, now you will have an opportunity to test the handwriting and, as we indicated before you will need to get your results in immediately.

DR. KRAUSER: Until Wednesday, inclusively.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. Very well.

MR. HOCHWALD: I have only one question, sorry, your Honor. BY MR. HOCHWALD:

Q. Will you look at the card again, witness? You have testified that the entries on the card were mostly made first By pencil and afterwards by ink. Will you tell the Tribunal how many times of all entries on the card this was made by pencil before it was made by ink?

A. Three times -- it was made three times.

Q. Will you tell the Tribunal further how many entries are on the card?

A. There are 13 entries.

MR. HOCHWALD: I have no further questions, Your Honors, but I have a motion to make.

THE PRESIDENT: Let's have the card, please. BY THE PRESIDENT:

Q. We understood you to say, Mrs. Jauer, that the entry of February 7 was made with a pen owned by Dr. Maennel, is that correct?

A. Yes, I assume so.

Q. Well, you so stated yesterday that it was made with his fountain pen?

Q. But on other occasions you used another pen?

A. Well, he took his fountain pen away again, of course.

Q. He usually carried his pen in his pocket--his fountain pen?

A. Yes.

Q. How do you explain that six years later you happened again to use this very same pen -- Dr. Maennel's pen to write the address on the card?

A. I did not have Dr. Maennel's pen recently when entering the address.

Q. Well, what pen did you use to enter the address on the card in January 1948?

A. Well, either I had another fountain pen which was broken or just an ordinary pen--I don't know.

Q. Well, that was comparatively recently and we have discussed it a great deal, so, therefore, you must have the incident very vividly in your memory now. Which pen did you use when you wrote in the address opposete the word "telephone"?

A. Well, I cannot say that. There were two pens there. I don't know which one I used that day.

Q. Well, it was only Dr. Maennel's pen that has the violet ink, is that right, his fountain pen?

A. We still have the ink. I have never bought any new ink. That must be a coincidence or something. I don't know that the same ink was used again now.

Q. Well, the ink which you use ordinarily is black and blue? That is right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Maennel's pen had violet ink?

A. Yes, but now I use the ink from that bottle to write with. This is fountain pen ink and was kept for fountain pens because it is very hard to get ink in Berlin now and therefore we are now using this ink as well every day.

Q. This violet ink?

A. Yes.

Q. And is this the same bottle you used back in 1942?

A. Yes, it must be that bottle then which was already used at that time and which was used to fill the fountain pen at that time. It could not be different.

Q. So then the ink which you used in 1942 still exists, that is, that ink bottle?

A. Yes, we still use it to write with.

Q. And do you use it now generally in all your writings, this violet ink?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you making your entries now in violet ink?

A. Yes.

Q. And are you using Dr. Maennel's pen or your own pen?

A. No, the pens which are lying on the desk in the doctor's office.

Q. How many pens do you have lying around in the doctor's office?

A. Two.

Q. Well, how is it that all these entries are written with a pen that has a broad point, but only this one of February 7 is written with a fine point? Now, you have given your explanation that this is due to the fact that on February 7, 1942 you used Dr. Maennel's pen?

A. Yes.

Q. Now how does it happen that in January 1948, six years later, you happened to pick up the same pen which was used on 7 February 1942, and that is the only time, as far as this card is concerned, that you used this thin, this fine pointed pen; is that just a coincidence?

A. Well, surely I wrote that with the thin pen now. Now, that is the ordinary pen, I used that to enter that address with.

Q. But it happens to be exactly the same kind of a pen point that you used six years before?

A. That is not the same pen.

Q. Well, it is the same result, isn't it-- it gives the same result?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, just look at it and tell us if in your opinion the handwriting which appears in the address and the handwriting which appears in the February 7 entry don't agree, so far as fineness of writing is concerned?

A. The other one was written with pencil first. Most of then have first been written with pencil and therefore the writing looks broader.

Q. You didn't answer my question. I am asking you whether the hand writing in the telephone address and the handwriting in the February 7 entry are not similar so far as fineness of writing is concerned?

A. Yes, there is a similarity.

Q. Yes. Now, you say it is merely a coincidence that six years later you happened to use the same kind of a pen point?

A. That must be a coincidence then.

Q. Because you tell us that you did not use Dr. Maennel's pen when you wrote the address?

A. I said I have a fountain pen now and one ordinary pen which is very thin -- very fine, and I used that now because the fountain pen is not working properly. I mostly use this thin pen to write with, now.

Q. So it is merely a coincidence that the handwriting in the address bear a similarity to the handwriting in the February 7 entry so far as fineness of writing is concerned in spite of the fact that every other entry on the card is written with a heavy pen?

A. Yes, that is a mere coincidence.

Q. Very well, all right. You usually gave one line to an item -usually, that is correct, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. But occasionally you would put two items on a line, wouldn't you?

A. Yes, but no treatment; that is, no work that Dr. Maennel did.

Q. You would never put on the same line two treatments?

A. No. That hardly happened.

Q. Tell us what those last two items are on the last line-- those two entries, each one preceded with an angle, what are those?

A. Those were two fillings.

Q. So they were two jobs, weren't they?

A. Yes, but the same filling. There were two teeth, but the same filling was put into the two teeth.

Q. Oh, but they were two different teeth?

A. Yes.

Q. Why didn't you enter the polishing item of February 7 on the line above, since it did not require any charge?

A. That was done on another day. That was done at a different day and the dates are always written below each other.

Q. Well, the day isn't so important, especially since you didn't care whether they came back for the polishing or not and you didn't charge for it. If you were so concerned about conserving space on that card, why didn't you enter that polishing item against the item of the actual work of filling the tooth?

A. One does not do that. It never happened.

Q. Well, then tell us if you were not concerned about saving time, why you didn't draw the totalling line underneath the February 7 item instead of above it, especially in view of the fact that April 22 naturally follows February 7?

A. One doesn't think anything of it, one just does it. That is the usual practice, and one does not do it in a commercial manner like a proper bookkeeper. Actually, the treatment had been concluded.

Q. But it was still an item of the treatment and then when you came to total up, why didn't that line come under February 7 rather than above?

A. Well, I did not notice this particularly. It usually is added up that way, or I did it that way.

Q. Would you say that it would be more reasonable to draw the line under the February 7 entry?

A. Yes. In my opinion it does not make any difference where this addition line is made.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. Any other questions.

DR. KRAUSE: I have no questions, only a request. Your Honor, I would like to ask the witness to give me a short specimen of her handwriting. May I ask that she be given some paper?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, she has already written two items here. If you desire that she write something, do it on that card.

DR. KRAUSE: Please write, "Sven Hedinplatz 8".

THE WITNESS: I have no pencil.

DR. KRAUSE: Oh, you have no pencil. Do you have your fountain pen with you? "Sven Hedinplats 8" and below it "7 February 1942 - polished." Your Honor, may I now ask for the card and the specimen of handwriting in order to be able to get an expert opinion on that.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. Well, there is just one more question. BY THE PRESIDENT:

Q. Witness, in every item on that card the tooth which is to be treated is indicated except the item which refers to the polishing. Do you want to tell us why you didn't indicate which tooth was involved in the polishing process?

A. Yes. I already said yesterday that we know which tooth is to be polished. The doctor will only polish that tooth which he filled himself if the patient does not ask to have another tooth polished because it has a sharp edge. Doctor Maennel will only polish that tooth that has been treated, otherwise.

Q. Well, do you make this entry before or after the work is done?

A. Sometimes while the patient is being treated or else immediately afterwards.

Q. Well, it is never made before the work is done?

A. No, it is never made before.

Q. So, therefore, the entry is not put on the card to acquaint the doctor with the particular work that is to be done because he knows?

A. Yes.

Q These entries are put on the card for two reasons: One, to indicate the price and, the other, so that you will have a record of the precise work done.

Q So that glancing at that card now you couldn't tell whether the polishing was done to the tooth which had been treated several days before or to some other tooth which happened to have A sharp edge, could you? filled by Dr. Maennel, be treated, then, of course, I write down that tooth. I mark it on the card and, then, if A sharp edge is polished off and the patient has nothing else to be done to him, then we charge him. and deduction. It would have been much simpler to have indicated on the card as you did on every other item just which tooth had been polished, wouldn't it?

A Yes, here it would be the left upper, No. 7, which Dr. Maennel had filled.

Q Well, you just have to assume that. It isn't on the card. had been treated, it would be entered and the polishing is entered so that we know the treatment has been concluded.

Q Well, that's only A matter of conclusion. That doesn't appear on the card. on your part. It does not appear on the card. it was that tooth that was polished. I said that Dr. Maennel polished teeth which he filled.

Q Is that the way you always abbreviate "polishing" in German, "p-o-l"?

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. All right.

DR. KRAUSE: Thank you.

MR. HORLICK-HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, the prosecution respectfully moves that the witness may be cited for contempt of court for perjury. I do not base this motion on the entirely incredible stories which the witness has told about the pen holders and the sixyear old ink pot. However, I base this motion on the contents of the affidavit and of her own testimony. she knew that at the time when she signed the affidavit it would be used here before this Tribunal -- that she knew Dr. Walter Haensch. The Tribunal certainly will recall that her testimony has clearly shown that she did not know him; that she did not know his Christian name which appears in the affidavit. the chart were made by her. She has testified to this effect before the Tribunal yesterday. She has admitted in cross-examination that at least one of the entries was not made by her own hand and that another one was admittedly made in January 1948. entries in violet ink, which are a falsification of the document, were made by the witness. On the contrary, I do think it is perfectly clear to the Tribunal from the testimony of the expert witness that these two entries were made by somebody else than the witness. However, the witness has testified here in direct examination, and I quote:

"Question of Counsel for Defense: If I understand you correctly then, you testified on oath that whatever it says on this card corresponds to the fact that it is correct.

"The witness: Yes."

guilty of contempt of court and the prosecution respectfully moves that the Tribunal may decide so.

DR. KRAUSE: Your Honors, I object to the motion by the prosecution. In my opinion, the perjury with which the witness is charged has not yet been proved at all.

THE PRESIDENT: Counselor, I don't think it is necessary to make any argumentation in this matter.

DR. Koessl, are you ready to proceed?

DR. KOESSL (ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENDANT SCHUBERT): Yes, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: The motion made by the prosecution is refused. The witness will be excused and we will proceed with the presentation of summation arguments.

(The witness was excused.)

DR. KOESSL: May it please the Court. The opening speech of the Prosecution contains the following sentences to show the obviousness of and give juridical proof for a guilt of the defendants:

"Everyone of the defendants was in a responsible position or assigned as a commander of an extermination unit. By virtue of his position he had the authority to give orders for executions."

"As military commanders these men were bound to laws which are certainly familiar to all who have worn the military uniform. Laws which impose the duty to the commander, as far as it is in his power, to prevent the commission of crimes on the part of those persons who are subordinated to his command."

"They ware lawfully, if not by their conscience, under the obligation to refrain from such activities."

"It is a legal and moral duty to prevent, restrict and condemn the slaughter of innocent persons, a duty which was evidently violated by all defendants." the Einsatzgruppe D. He himself, as well as Ohlendorf, testifying as Court No. II, Case No. IX.

witnesses in their own defense, have described in detail the former's power of authority and there were no contradictions. I refer to the passages on page 583 in the German records, (unfortunately, I never found out the English page) page 4657 ff. German, page 4572 ff., English, pages 4819/20 German and 4729 of the English records. Schubert had come to Russia without that his function had been previously determined. This was customary for the ranks of commanders only and Ohlendorf used him as an Adjutant and office chief at the staff of the Einsatzgruppe. Ohlendorf's statement and Schubert's own testimony give a picture which makes Schubert, as an Adjutant, appear not even responsible to that extent which is customary for an Adjutant all over the world. Ohlendorf has stated literally that he himself did not use an Adjutant, page 583 German records, and that Schubert's assignment as Chief of the office was the most important thing for him. If we hear from Herr Ohlendorf that Schubert could neither exercise a power of command nor was he permitted to give orders, that he had no authority to make decisions in personnel - or technical matters and had no supervisory obligations and not even a general authority to sign, this is fully coinciding with Schubert's description in his testimony (page 4657 ff. of the German records, page 4572 of the English records) and also corresponds with the conditions which evidently existed in the immediate surroundings of such a strong personality as Ohlendorf. Thus, Schubert did not hold a position which would have given him any power of authority let alone a power to decide over life and death. Neither was his position of such a nature to prevent any crimes. This leads me to the incident which the Prosecution has stressed as the strongest proof for its theory of Schubert's penal responsibility, namely: sion of the execution in Sinferopol in December 1941. It has been ascertained that this execution was planned and fixed as to the details of its implementation without that the defendant Schubert was in any way involved in it (page 585 of the German record) (German record, page Court No. II, Case No. IX.

3154, English record, page 3103, German, page 3181, English, page 3130). Once again I shall give a description of the actual role Schubert played in the course of the execution: On a December day in 1941 these shootings were carried out near Sinferopol. The executions have been going on since the forenoon of that day. Ohlendorf himself has seen to it that they are carried out in accordance with his special directives while repeatedly inspecting the course of the action. (page 742 of the German records, German 4706, English 4620 and German 3180, English 3129).

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Koessl, it isn't necessary to read those. Those appear in the transcript.

DR. KOESSL: The passages should be entered in the record without my having to read them.

THE PRESIDENT: They will appear in the record. The reporters are so instructed to leave everything as it appears in the written manuscript which is before the Tribunal.

DR. KOESSL: Thank you. latter could then report to him whether his directives would be complied with (page 585 German records). Now what kind of a mission did Schubert have? The Prosecution asserts that Schubert had acted as a deputy of Ohlendorf.

In order to examine the legal aspects of Schubert's acting for Ohlendorf it is necessary to determine the purpose Ohlendorf pursued with his own personal and repeated inspections. Ohlendorf had given special directives for the implementation of executions which were announced in writing (page 4674 of the German record, page 4588 of the English). On the day when the executions took place it was his intention to see to it, by personal inspection, that the executions were carried out in accordance with these directives in order to remedy or correct, through immediate intervention at the place and time in question, any deficiencies or deviations that might occur. Schubert had Court No. II, Case No. IX.

no such authority neither was it conferred upon him. Schubert was in no position to remedy any arising deficiencies. orders to any officer carrying out the execution. Schubert "could not interfere" (page 586 German record,) "he had no authority to give orders" (same record). He would have had to report to Ohlendorf in case he had noticed deficiencies (page 586 German record).

This express limitation of Schubert's mission is a decisive indication for the legal judgment of whether his inspection was performed as Ohlendorf's deputy or not. For Ohlendorf decided about the kind and extent of Schubert's task when the latter was assigned. he was entrusted with: From the point of penal law it would be of importance if Schubert would have subjectively comprehended and carried out his mission to a greater extent than it was given to him by Ohlendorf. However, this is not the case either. In his testimony, Schubert has clearly described the particulars of his own interpretation in regard to his mission. (Page 4672 of the German record, page 4587 of the English record). he was "some kind of a deputy." The passage quoted by the Prosecution on page 5 of its closing brief from the English record page 4671 says exactly the opposite of what the Prosecution asserts.

In noticing deviations from Ohlendorf's directives Schubert would not have been able to interfere and give instructions; the utmost possible for him to do, according to his own view, was that, in an emergency case, he could have called the attention of the competent officer to a violation of Ohlendorf's directives (page 586 of the German record) (page 4823 of the German, page 4732 of the English, page 4673 of the German, page 4587 of the English records). However, there cannot be any doubt that this authority, provided for an emergency case, was not specifically based on the mission he received, on the contrary, Court No. II, Case No. IX.

everyone in general has a right to this authority who realizes that existing regulations are violated, and considers it necessary to call attention to this fact because of the existence of an emergency case. The authority was no longer within the scope of the mission given to Schubert, it rather belongs to the general rights of every soldier and officer. closing brief asserts incorrectly on pages 7 and 10, but only contains the possibility to draw the attention of the competent officer to violations of Ohlendorf's directives. did not refer at all to such an emergency case, since his interference would not have been necessary in this case at all. (page 4707 of the German record, page 4622 of the English record). Fundamentally his mission, according to his own view, was confined to an inspection the result of which he had to report to his chief. tion for which Ohlendorf himself was competent, constitutes from the legal point of view the decisive limitation of the mission given to Schubert.

Here I must once more thoroughly discuss SCHUBERT's phraseology concerning his assignment in his affidavit of 24.2.47, Prosecution Exh. 28, Doc. Book 1 Eng. p. 108, German p. 141), which has already been mentioned several times during his interrogation in direct and in cross examination.

There SCHUBERT says literally under fig. a) that he had to see to it that the shooting area was located well outside of town, so that there would be no witnesses of the shooting living in the vicinity. According to the actual conditions this phraseology must appear sheer nonsense. Let our memories take us back to the time: the place of execution has been fixed for days, the necessary preparations have been made, executions are taking place regularly, and Herr OHLENDORF Court No. II, Case No. IX.

has already visited the location that same morning. Probably neither Herr OHLENDORF nor SCHUBERT can have seriously thought that SCHUBERT was in any way supposed to exercise any supervision so that in the meantime while OHLENDORF was absent the place of execution would not somehow be changed and the shootings perhaps be carried out in an entirely different place, possibly in a place which was not far from town and therefore could be seen by unwelcome witnesses.

This assumption, by which alone fig. a) with the expression "see to it" ("Beaufsichtigen) might have some meaning, is nevertheless probably so impossible that it must be completely rejected in the case of a proceeding so complicated with respect to organization as the above-mentioned executions. However, the wording of fig. a) must thereby also be denied any meaning. To be sure, this fig. a) acquires a meaning if we take into consideration what SCHUBERT himself reports about how this phraseology came to be used. I refer to the transcript, German p. 4681, Eng. p. 4594. SCHUBERT says there that he discussed the matter for a fairly long time with Mr. WARTENBERG, with whom this phraseology originated, and pointed out to him that he possibly used this word "supervise" ("beaufsichtigen") incorrectly by deriving it from an English word, and that it rightly ought to be "observe" ("besichtigen").

If we only consider fig. a) in this version with the word "observe" it takes on a thoroughly sensible meaning. Without entering into a lengthy analysis now of the phraseology, corrections and uncorrected mistakes in various places in the affidavit I should at least like to point out here that SCHUBERT's statement not only appears credible in itself but also logical and natural. I am convinced that SCHUBERT, who after all is an educated and intelligent man, would never of his own accord have used such phraseology as in fig. a). And in the last analysis our search for evidence has brought us one more proof for precisely this point, which is better and clearer than any other proof one could think of. We recall that this German word "beaufsichtigen", Court No. II, Case No. IX.

which Mr. WARTENBERG wanted to use and actually did use, was already translated by the English translator of the affidavit as "to see", although literally it ought to have been translated as "supervise". An impartial philologist of the original text would have been obvious nonsense and has translated it with the correct meaning. Concerning this I refer to the transcript, German p. 4692, Eng. p. 4606-07.

Figs. b) and c) contain the same word "beaufsichtigen" as fig. a). In connection with the tasks described there this mode of expression makes some sense in itself; however, we must consider its meaning once more later on. tion with the legal structure and effect of the order given by OHLENDORF: 1.) SCHUBERT received and carried out the order with the limitation which OHLENDORF attached to the order. 2.) Accordingly, the crux of the order was merely to inform OHLENDORF whether or not the execution was also carried out according to his instructions during his absence. 3.) Basically SCHUBERT had no occasion at all to interfere. He had no executive power whatsoever.

Therefore, OHLENDORF's order to SCHUBERT to observe the executions in Sinferopol in December 194 cannot be legally regarded as tantamount to acting as OHLENDORF's deputy.

Now what did SCHUBERT actually do? And what is the criminal nature of his act from the legal point of view that is said to connect with the execution of human beings? where it maintains that there were no other officers present when the transportation took place. As a matter of fact, two officers were present, who had Schubert's rank. sees them being loaded aboard and shipped off. Then he drives to the place of execution, sees the rerouting of traffic, the roads blocked Court No. II, Case No. IX.

off, persons being unloaded, valuables handed over, and the shooting. Finally, he drives back once more along the way to the gypsy quarter and there again sees them being loaded aboard and carried off, and then returns to his office. That is what he did. SCHUBERT did not in any way affect persons who participated in the progress of the execution, whether ordinary soldiers or officers. There is no connection whatsoever of cause and effect between SCHUBERT'S inspection and the execution. The statements of OHLENDORF, BRAUNE and SCHUBERT himself are in complete agreement on this point.

SCHUBERT's statements in his affidavit of 24.2.47, Prosecution Exh. 28, Doc. Book 1, Eng. p. 108, German p. 141, and his statements on this point as a witness in his own defense. The statements concerning this take up the largest amount of space in the evidence submitted during the entire trial, and besides myself, both the prosecuting attorneys and the presiding judge themselves have repeatedly helped through appropriate questions to clear up conditions which at first glance appear highly confused. If we sift out the results of this thorough examination of all the inconsistencies between the affidavit and the actual situation, (transcript, German p. 4705 et seq., Eng. 4620 et seq.) we find that SCHUBERT's actions kept within the bounds of what was proper for his limited assignment. He briefly observed the various phases of the execution at the various places, directed his attention to the points concerning which OHLENDORF had given him special instructions, and drove back to headquarters without having anywhere or at any time ordered anything to be done during the course of the action, or having observed anything unusual. Even his report to OHLENDORF on the inspection was so unimportant that OHLENDORF and SCHUBERT do not even remember it any longer. glance creates the impression that SCHUBERT had interfered during the course of the execution -- I am thinking of fig. 4, which in several places contains the phrase "I saw to it that" -- is to a considerable Court No. II, Case No. IX.

extent to be attributed to the fact that the phrase did not originate with SCHUBERT himself. Likewise, the expression "supervise" ("ueberwachen") is used in such a way that it can be clearly seen that the interrogator was trying to represent SCHUBERT'S assignment in an individual case in such a light as would appear to justify the conclusion that SCHUBERT'S position was connected with executive powers and supervisory duties, so that finally an indictment could be brought against the man who was already bound hard and fast by an affidavit. Even the laws of logic are forgotten in this fanatical zeal. When, for example, it says in fig. 5): "This phase was carefully supervised (uebarwacht) by me so that all the valuables would be turned over to Einsatzgruppe D ....... "then one only has to ask one's self the question: How could SCHUBERT supervise the collection carefully and how could he observe the collection of all the valuables if he himself was only a few minutes at the place where the collection went on throughout the entire day? represent the preparation of the outgoing mail as a supervisory activity.

Neither during his interrogation by Mr. WARTENBERG nor in the courtroom did SCHUBERT report any occurrence which permits the conclusion that he displayed any activity during the execution at Sinferopol which could be described with the words: "Superintendence" (beaufsichtigen), "supervision" (ueberwachen) or "seeing to it" (dafuer sorgen). Mr. WARTENBERG has attempted to make up for this lack of activity by the frequent, even strikingly frequent, use of the verbs "superintend", "supervise", and "see to it" in the affidavit. exert a certain amount of pressure in order to obtain truthful statements. For this purpose the technique of interrogating even permits the use of stratagems and tricks.

of the time cost Schubert much trouble and a hard fight. It is clear that Mr. Wartenberg remained adamant when it came to the point of changing that formulation which was his sole reason for preparing the affidavit, especially as the words "supervise" etc. do not so much express a concrete activity as suggest that one's presence has a definite implication. It was, however, impossible to imply this meaning from Schubert's presence because in no mobile unit of Germany was it permitted that a 1st Lieutenant "supervise" a major and several other senior officers. Furthermore, on the same day, Ohlendorf as Troop Chief, and Braune as Kommando Leader were, themselves, witnesses to this execution, consequently, all attempts to brand Schubert as Ohlendorf's substitute, or to charge that he had commanding authority or supervisory duties are frustrated by this fact alone.

THE PRESIDENT: I think that will be a good point in which to have the morning recess, Dr. Koessl.

DR. KOESSL: Yes, your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess fifteen minutes.

(Recess)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. HOFFMAN: Dr. Hoffman for the defendant Nosske. ing session today?

THE PRESIDENT: That will all depend on whether we can get in the remaining closing statements before 4:30 this afternoon. We have three more statements here after Dr. Kossel finishes.

DR. HOFFMAN: Your Honor, then I would ask that the following defendants be excused for this afternoon, and if there is an evening session, also for this evening: The defendants Seibert, Jost, Fendler, Sandberger, Steimle, Nosske, Schulz, Blume and Ott, in order to prepare their final statements.

May I make a suggestion, your Honor. In case there should be an evening session today, it would perhaps be useful that between 5:30 and 8:30 there would be no session, because there is only a possibility for the defense between 6:00 and 8:00 o'clock to speak to the defendants. Since the final statements have to be in writing, it would perhaps be useful if we could take care of it during that period, and have the remainder of the session this evening to be held from 8:30 on. I am speaking for the entire defense.

THE PRESIDENT: That will be agreeable to the Tribunal. If we have an evening session it would be from eight-thirty on until we finish the closing summations. And with regard to the motion made by Dr. Hoffmann, the following defendants will be excused from attendance in Court this afternoon, and if there is an evening session, from this evening's session, the defendants Seibert, Jost, Fendler, Sandberger, Steimle, Nosske, Schultz, Blume, Ott.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Your Honor, after the defendants that you have just mentioned have now been excused this afternoon, and since there is no possibility now to speak to these defendants may I ask that the Secretary General be instructed that he should tell Mr. Joseph in Room 55 that these defendants may be brought over there in order to speak to their counsel?

THE PRESIDENT: Mr. Joseph? Mr. who?

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Yes, Mr. Joseph.

THE PRESIDENT: In which room?

DR. DURCHHOLZ: 57.

THE PRESIDENT: Will the Secretary General so inform Mr. Joseph in Room 57. Very well.

DR. DURCHHOLZ: Thank you, sir.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. Now, such defendants as have their statements ready by four-thirty or five o'clock should turn them in to somebody so that translations can be made tonight. Let's see first to whom to turn them in. Whichever statements are ready this afternoon should be taken to Room 106 and given to Mr. Hodges, not to be delivered anywhere else, because those statements will be given special attention because of the time element, so that as a statement is ready counsel for that particular defendant will take the statement to Room 106. Very well, proceed.

DR. KOESSL: I do not believe that there exists an army in the whole world in which principles of troop leadership different in that respect prevail.

The pressure that Mr. Wartenberg exerted during the interrogations may not even have exceeded the usual limits. But when we hear of threats with a broom or of the stipulation that every correction must be approved by Mr. Wartenberg, or of solitary confinement in an unheated cell, then I, at least, am of the opinion that even in a subsequent purely theoretical consideration of all the circumstances one must at least take into account that the defendant was not free in his decisions, nor at his best to defend his interests in a haggling about words, as Mr. Wartenberg termed the discussion about the expressions "supervise" etc., and to hold his ground.

Schubert's statements in connection with this not only comprise a clarification of prima facie seemingly contradictory actions and statements, but they grant also an insight into Schubert's personality and illuminate the credibility of his own statements. When Schubert here testifies that he was once threatened with a broom by Mr. Wartenberg and thereby puts himself into contradiction with Mr. Wartenberg's statement, then I can only express my conviction that Schubert told the truth. influence whatever that the execution was held, his duty was only to see for himself if it was done in the manner Ohlendorf had ordered, and to report to the latter what he had seen. charge by the Prosecution that Ohlendorf had sent Schubert to substitute for him in inspecting executions, is not in accordance with the powers granted to Schubert, nor with the factual happenings, and furthermore, that the confusing formulations in his affidavit were not corrected by him for the sole reason that he was simply unable to obtain Mr. Wartenberg's approval for it at that time.

English Transcript p. 4589, also in Ohlendorf transcript, where Ohlendorf explains the meaning of the formulations contained in his affidavit, Prosecution Exhibit 148, with regard to the inspections mentioned there. These show clearly that Schubert, with the exception of the Simferopol case, was only sued for general inspections and not for executions as the prosecution asserts on page 10 of the Closing Brief. tional incriminating activity outside the bounds of a general adjutant's functions that Schubert, at intervals, had composed certain reports of the Einsatzgruppe. This is again on Page 15. They supported this claim by a statement of the co-defendant Seibert in his affidavit Document Book III-D, Exhibit 158. On the stand as witnesses, the co-defendants Seibert and Ohlendorf offered an explanation in regard to this assertion of the Prosecution which relieves this point of its incriminating quality. not an essential, but only a formal part of the report namely the reports about changes of personnel and locations, as they appeared regularly on the first page of every Operational Situation Report. In these points the two statements are in full accord, and I believe, since Schubert, too, when examined in his own behalf, said the same thing, neither the Court nor the Prosecution had any doubts as to the correctness of his exposition. increased by the finding that they not only do not contradict the Seibert affidavit, but rather are its explanation. Material contributions to these reports were never part of Schubert's work. One may add that Schubert's function, as elucidated in this point, was in full accord with the scope of tasks he could perform considering his training. ordinate activity consisting only of superficial acts of a technical or organizational nature, which had no material connection whatsoever with the subject matter of the tasks or the acts in themselves.

cleared and I see no possibility to consider Schubert as in any way whatsoever incriminated in regard to it. namely the charge of knowledge of the Fuehrer Order. The way in which he reacted to this knowledge is of import in considerations of judicial nature.

In this respect, Schubert's own testimony alone can elucidate this point, for in a military unit with its discipline demanding unconditional obedience, no superior will be able to testify as to a contrary reaction to an order, as it would surely mean certain destruction for any soldier if he showed even the least counter-reaction. the question of the consent with or the rejection of the Fuehrer Order, we are left to depend entirely on Schubert's testimony and encounter in proving the hereby expressed sentiments to be genuine, one of the main difficulties of this trial, namely, the question of the credibility of the statements of Schubert about himself. For this reason, I am forced to treat the credibility of my client in detail. the foundation for an answer to this question and I believe to be of one mind with the Tribunal if I make here and now the anticipatory assertion that the over-all impression gained from Schubert and his testimony is that he honestly endeavored to present all points, which he was confronted with and had to answer, truthfully.

Sometimes we did notice a slight hesitation on Schubert's part.

A mental inhibition of Schubert's, which characterizes his whole personality and which we encounter in a conspicuous manner again in his correction of his affidavit of 24 February 1947. There too, he placed, in the argument arising from the wording and the permission for correction, at first the greatest weight on having a wording altered that was apt to incriminate another man. Only in the second place he took care of the matters that concerned himself, even making with concessions, so that no other man might be incriminated by an incorrect statement. concerned, Schubert gave the answers without hesitation and without any omission, only there striving for details, where he was certain that truth had not been reached to the full extent. And let us not deceive ourselves by asking why Schubert has struggled so tenaciously for the wording in the Wartenberg case, of all things. This he certainly did not do for reasons of his own safety, but rather out of a fanatical zeal for the truth. explain the seeming contradiction between his affidavit of 24 February 1947, where in sub-section 7 the wording is to be found that the reports contained the number of the villages destroyed and the persons killed, and his deposition that he was in ignorance of the number of the persons executed. In this point too we have seen how carefully Schubert stuck to the truth, explaining that in sub-section 7 of his affidavit it was not a question of execution within the meaning of the Fuehrer Order, but of statements as to the casualties incurred on the occasion of military operations. seeming contradiction between his statement that Seibert had not been Ohlendorf's deputy for the entire sphere of duties of the Einsatzgruppe, on the one hand, and some wordings in his affidavit which curtly called Seibert Ohlendorf's deputy, on the other hand.

For this elucidation too Schubert fought with genuine zeal for the truth even with a sort of petty effort for veracity. The more it had been tried to discover a vagueness or a false judgment in the wording of his affidavits, the more punctiliously did he keep fighting for an elucidation. Yet, this doubt about the question of the capacity of Seibert as a deputy, between the verbal and written statements of Schubert has finally been decided by the Prosecution in favor of the facts stated by Schubert verbally by submitting the doc. No. NO-5111, Doc. Book V D p. 5. I am thinking of the document that shows an organization scheme of Einsatzgruppe D, worked out by Schubert himself, and where Seibert appears as permanent deputy under the section "Staff of the Einsatzgruppe". I think in the English translation the date, December 1945, is missing. This was it what Schubert meant then and in all his later statements, always protesting whenever different statements of facts were to be read into wordings which were not even made by himself. Here the trustworthiness of Schubert could, at the end of long arguments in the course of direct and cross-examinations, finally be proved even through a Prosecution document. Schubert was able to rely on his good memory, apart from his zeal for the truth, in all the statements he made.

There is no need, I believe, to prove Schubert's trsutworthiness, From this starting point, I should suggest that his own statements referring to his knowledge of the Fuehrer Order and the executions be judged, so that later a total evaluation of his conduct may be gathered from his later working methods.

He learned about the Fuehrer Order from Ohlendorf. From his statement also a mental reaction emerges. We saw him arriving, as a final result of his mental struggle, at the conclusion that he was facing the situation completely helplessly. Was that helplessness, that incapability to find a way out, really the utmost left to do for a person who had done something to prevent these crimes, as the Prosecution demands?

Should he to have withdrawn from these things? Russia, to take any action against the goings-on which are under discussion today? Nobody will consider this seriously, in view of the picture we have received of his subordinate activities, of the way he was tied by orders and his complete lack of independence. It must be added that Ohlendorf himself had told him, that he had nothing to do with these things. By that Schubert had been shown his proper place by his chief, and this in a manner so as not to leave him any possibility of supporting an application for transfer or a refusal to carry out orders by pointing to the executions, for with those he had nothing to do and he would only incur the risk of having "his nose rubbed in" even more, as Heydrich had once threatened the defendant Blobel. Moreover, it is remarkable that Schubert, in whose soul the internal struggle about those things had not come to an end by that, learned on the occasion of the Simferopol executions in December 1941 that not the Einsatzgruppe alone was in possession of this Fuehrer Order, but that even the supreme command authority, the 11th Army itself, was giving orders for execution contrary to Ohlendorf's protests, supplying the personal and material assistance required for carrying out the executions. This state of affairs could not but convey to this little lieutenant the conviction that no way out was left to him even through the Wehrmacht.

Coming back to the words used by the Prosecution that "it" was a legal and moral obligation to prevent the slaughter of innocents, to limit, to repudiate it, an obligation which all the defendants have obviously neglected, we arrive first of all at the conclusion that Schubert has not neglected his obligation to repudiate those acts. In the German transcript p. 4656 /57 Schubert has shown us his feelings and he broached this subject again in the course of the cross examination.

Everybody will have to recognize, in just evaluation of these statements that Schubert has not neglected this obligation which the Prosecution stressed as a generally legal and moral one, but rather has fulfilled it. of ordering executions, so he was not in a position to prevent executions. Nor could Schubert be expected to refuse to obey the order to go on an inspection trip, since his refusal would have neither prevented nor limited the execution, the more so since his inspection was in no way causally converted with the chain of events. Thus, Schubert was unable to realize any noticeable personal implication in the crime. Ohlendorf himself has explained to the Tribunal what consequences would have been drawn by him from a refusal to obey orders. office because in the reports which he had to register and to file in the books, statements were contained with regard to executions? this question, because that knowledge of the events was one gained in the routine work in an office, and the events had in each case already been concluded, and, besides, Schubert, was, as an officer in the orderly room placed outside of any power of authority and command with regard to those events and the reports made thereof. The notion of being in connection with crimes within the meaning of the Control Council Law may surely not be extended as far as that. And listening to the words of the Prosecution that "the rank and the position of the defendants comprised the authority and obligation on the part of the defendants to exercise control over their subordinates and that that authority in conjunction with their knowledge renders them unequivocally responsible from the penal point of view", we conclusively exclude those from criminal responsibility who did not possess such an authority and obligation.

Nobody will attribute such an authority over subordinates to Schubert in view of the results of the investigations of this trial. No penal responsibility can, thus, be invoked against Schubert in this respect.

The Prosecution sees a signifiance in Schubert's position within the staff of Einsatzgruppe D. It would be a completely wrong opinion to consider the staff of the Einsatzgruppe as a leadership agency in which every officer would be partly originator, or even only participant in, or accessory to, the acts which were being done in the Einsatzgruppe. If we admitted this as right, we should have left the ground of individual guilt, the basic principle of any criminal responsibility.

Schubert's position regarded in itself is illuminated enough, it was not tied in with any authority. With any other activity of the Einsatzgruppe it had closer relationship than just with the executions, which in no way were promoted by the adjutants. It was a position that always goes with any military unit, but in itself it was neither typical for the tasks of Einsatzgruppe D, nor was the holder of the position charged with any special tasks of the Einsatzgruppe. Schubert as the first lieutenant at the side of a Chief, who is Colonel, 5 officers of the rank of Colonel and Lt. Colonel, who were CommandoLeaders and about 5 other officers of the Staff, superior to him in rank, could not possibly have attained any significant leadershipor Commando position.

DR. KOESSL: Schubert did not even pass on orders. The Prosecution's questions to this effect rare merely hypothetical ones. Not a single case was proved why page 8 of the closing brief is unjustified in referring to page 4657 of the English transcript. On the same page of the closing brief the Prosecution goes too far in explaining the passage in the English record page 4710 by deducing from Schubert's quoted statement that he knew all the missions of the kommando chiefs, although only the general tasks of the members of the staff were mentioned at that point. Schubert was not informed about all missions with which Ohlendorf entrusted the kommando chiefs.

Apart from that the question comesup: Does SCHUBERT's knowledge of the executions have the effect of knowing criminal aims of the SS, here specifically of the SD, and was it SCHUBERT's obligation to withdraw from the SD? To answer this last important question it must be examined of what kind his professional development and activity was before and after the Russian assignment.

He has given us his professional curriculum. The submitted documents SCHUBERT- Exh. 1 and SCHUBERT - Exh. 3show that until his Einsatz in 1941 he had been employed all the time and exclusively as an administrative employee. Of what minor category this position was is disclosed by SCHUBERT -- Exh. 6. A look at the graphic description of the organizational build-up of Office I of the RSHA attached to this document, shows that at first until 1940 SCHUBERT as an assistant clerk belonged with the clerks to the lowest rank among the employees and beginning 1940 as a specialist to the lowest rank within the leadership organizational chart. At first an aide to the Registrar and the Postoffice. SCHUBERT in the course of his career finally becomes a specialist in personnel matters. How his position was during the Russian-Assignment, I have already explained and I only wish to add here that it was a direct continuation of the pure administrative activity, as exercised in Berlin.

Also after his return from the Russian assignment, SCHUBERT at first becomes Adjutant to the Chief of Office III, not an SDspecialist in Office III, but he remains an employee of Office I. This also corresponds to his tasks as Adjutant, which OHLENDORF declared were the same as in Russia. Chief of the waiting-room he calls it. Here too purely clerical work without any participation in the material decisions of Office III. by abolition of the adjutant position, SCHUBERT becomes Assistant Specialist in the Personnel Dep. of Office III and is reinstated as an administrative employee. Schubert-Exh. 3.

The 2 documents SCHUBBRT-Exh. 2 and 4 cast a significant light upon this. The affidavit KONONOFF, a now stateless Russian, who since the First World War lived in Germany and was during the Second World War degraded by the Nazis to an East-worker, is more than a testimony to his decent character. KONONOFF, who lived in daily terror of the Nazi authorities, put confidencesin SCHUBERT and to the SD-men of Schubert and what he has to report on SCHUBERT's, intervention in the cases referred to, are moving testimonials of SCHUBERT's, the SDmember's, aid to the suppressed and mistreated workers of foreign nationality, above all how he helped Russian male and female workers and prisoners of war to obtain humane treatment, the punishment of their oppressors and deceivers, in short to be given their rights and how he thereby disregarded the danger to his official position. The testimonials speak for themselves and what SCHUBERT's secretary, the then student of medicine LACKER, a military service draftee, reports about this time in the SCHUBERT-Document 4 is one more proof for the absolute truthfulness and love for justice that was glowing so much within SCHUBERT, that I cannot but refer to it as the most eminent quality of his whole personality. much as a possibility for a decision of his own, was commandeered into the Einsatzgruppe D, after he had on his own initiative expressed a desire to be released for service with the Army, following the death of his first wife and child during the terror of the bombings.He had just as little chance to determine the end of this assignment and the way he was employed. He wasunder military law and had no choice as to his activity or much less any possibility of leaving the SD. In addition SCHUBERT could not see the acts committed by Einsatzgruppe D in connection with criminal activities of the whole SD or the SS, revealed to us today by the IMT.

The Einsatzgruppen are neither SS- nor SDunits, but mobile organizations of a special type and the execution of the Fuehrer-Order was assigned to them as a Security Police security missions. The English translation contains the expression Security Police task instead of Security Police Security missions. The knowledge of this activity of the Einsatzgruppe cannot therefore establish membership in the criminal circle of persons of the SD or the SS. SCHUBERT during his following activity in Berlin and Augsburg considered himself entirely free and without further connection with any injustice perhaps committed by Einsatzgruppe D in Russia. His interrogation also reveals that he did not know of other crimes committed by the SD and SS, which has give to the organization as a whole the criminal character as pronounced in the IMT - judgment. criminal penal law SCHUBERT is to be held accountable, it must not be overlooked that Control Council Law No. 10 represents on extremely disputed legal basis, since international law cannot be ordered to the vanquished by any authority whatever and national criminal laws, could not be applied retroactively. However since the given situation cannot be altered at present, I ask the High Tribunal to interpret the forms of participation of the Control Council Law No. 10 restrictively. Only such persons should be held accountable as "perpetrator" and "participant" in war crimes and crimes against humanity, to whom own initiative and a causal activity can be proven. Whoever was as an insignificant figure, pressed into a mechanism of tools by, governmental coercion, should at any case be freed of responsibility to international law. If today in practise toward the vanquished the old principle has been abandoned that individuals are not responsible according to international law then the criminal responsibility for governmental measures must by no means be extended to include the broad mass of those, who neither could overlook the cause nor the purpose, neither the tenability in international law, nor the actual necessity of those measures by the state leadership and who by no means could dodge them.

His position as adjutant and director of the office with the staff of Einsatsgruppe D did not connect SCHUBERT with the planning or carrying out of executions; the acknowledgment of reports on executions carried out, does not include consenting participation in the meaning Art. II. fig. 2c of Law No. 10, since this consent always must be given prior to the completion of the act and must be causally connected with it. Also his presence at the execution in Siferopol did not bring SCHUBERT in such a causal relationship to the main act since any promoting action remained absent. His presence to which he was ordered cannot even be regarded as a consent, just as little as his presence in the theater of operation implied consent to the war. The mere presence does not prove any affirmative mental or intellectual attitude toward the events taking place. If one would now want to close the gap in the chain of evidence by referring to the membership in the SD, declared as criminal, then a circulus vitiosus would be formed that way, from which no innocent man could find escape. Such reasoning would adopt the same kind of logic to which HITLER obviously fell fictim, when he issued the unfortunate order under discussion here. Whoever under martial law is commanded to join a mobile unit, to whom the highest state leadership has assigned criminal tasks, does not by virtue of this governmental act enter into a criminal connection with the commission of war crimes and crimes against humanity, since he was coerced into an emergency that was inescapable. To him also the comprehensive specifications of 2d and 2c of Art. II of the Law No. 10 cannot be applied without violating the fundamental principlesof all national codes and even moreof international law.

Art. 347 of the American Rules of Land Warfare of 1940 declares individual members of Armed Forces to be exempt from punishment, if they have committed crimes upon order of their government.

The same stand was taken by the British "Manual of Military Law" of 1944. This principle dominated the common law of warfare throughout both World Wars and could not be made ineffective out of force by legislation of any group of powers. of the soldier by at the same time accusing him of crimes against humanity. So far no satisfying definition of the notion" crimes against humanity" has become known, At any rate the war crime seems to be distinguished from the crime against humanity only by being in causal or only timely connection with the war. Accordingly facts which under the aspect of common law of warfare remain impunitive cannot become punishable as crimes against humanity. in dealing with the question of membership of SD-persons in criminal organizations. An SD-member in a wider sense also belonged to the SS, since the SD was part of the SS. SCHUBERT came to the SD directly from the HITLER YOUTH so that he belonged only indirectly to SS via the SD. He never belonged to any SS-unit. Therefore the High Tribunal will bear with me, if I do not put forth any further arguments in the support of my request that this indirect SS-membership of SCHUBERT may be disregarded. his private and official life such a clean and truthful character, who has chosen the principle of truthfulness, one might say, as his life maxime, that a man of this kind would have become such an honest and valiant fighter for the rights of the oppressed nations, as we have seen him from the affidavit, if he had not been of a clear conscience. It is just this clear conscience which makes SCHUBERT states all his actions and thoughts so precisely and without circumlocation, as we have seen here at the trial. Pure conscience speaks from all of SCHUBERT's words.

And this is proof for me that there is no consciousness of criminal action here. And when the High Tribunal after Counts 1 and 2 will also have to decide on Count 3, then I know that the Tribunal in its endeavour to find the truth and serve justice will not pass over the fact that it came from the innermost, honest conviction, when SCHUBERT, upon questioning at the start of the Trial replied that he considers himself not guilty. my client. During the interrogation through some kind of unclear translation the impression was given that he wanted to express some suspicion that something was being put into his mouth unjustly. This was during the discussion whether he had signed several pages of his affidavit, pages 4614-4616 of the English transcript. My client only wants me to make the statement that he did not have any suspicion of any kind. He did not mean to express any suspicion in this respect so that it is only an assumption which is not based on any kind of premeditation.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. The record will show that explanation, Dr. Koessl.

Dr. Schwarz for the defendant Jost: Before I begin with my presentation I would like to point out, especially to the interpreters, that I shall not mention the quotations, especially those that are in parenthesis.

THE PRESIDENT: The Court Reporter will be directed to include these quotations in the transcript even though not read by counsel.

DR. SCHWARZ: Thank you, Your Honor. little shorter I shall skip the introduction, that is on pages 1 to 7. In view of the time allotted me I must also disregard the general legal questions, or leave them out. They are pages 8 to 21, that is II. Thus I shall begin with III which concerns the personality of the defendant. That is on page 22. I consider this an appropriate moment for a description of the defendant's personality. In doing so, I refer to my statements in the trial-brief for the defendant Jost, pages 50 - 66. from a respectable, honest and upright bourgeois-family, may be made from the depositions of a variety of personalities, former SS leaders or subordinates, National Socialists and non-National Socialists, political persecutees and others, the truest picture being evolved from this very multiplicity and diversity. thanks to a subsidy granted by Jost, considers the latter as a reliable and upright man , resembling the type of a respectable official who endeavored to hide his natural sensitiveness and soft-heartedness behind external self control and reserve. His bearing was clearly indicative of the discord which, in the case of National Socialists, so often resulted from disagreement of ideals with party-reality or disparity between imposed duties and personal feelings. Thomashausen was impressed by Jost's modest standard of living and the simplicity of his bearing, very much in opposition to the habits of others during that time (Affidavit Thomashausen Doc.

Book Jost I, Doc. No. 3, exh. pages 8-9*.

Dr. Best, the former Ministerialdirektor and Chief of Office I of the RSHA (Reich Security Main Office), who has known the defendant since 1930, brings into prominence Jost's almost exaggerated modesty, his calm, reasonable views and his strict sense of justice. With Heydrich and Heydrich's right hand man Mueller, Jost passed for "a lawyer burdened with inhibitions and not prepared to comply with everyone of Heydrich's wishes." first adjutant and Chief of Himmler's personal staff who knew Jost officially, the latter was described, by various high-ranking SSleaders as an upright, calm and conscientious character. The general's personal, official and special contacts with Jost confirmed this impression. Jost was known to defend his personal convictions in a calm, and decisive manner even before his superiors. Wolff had never been able to discover in Jost a leaning towards unbridled excesses or cruelty. On the contrary, Jost was recognized as a man whose actions were ruled by a sense of fairness. General Wolff did not have the impression that Jost was a careerist.

The Latvian Prior Sanders testifies to Jost's readiness to help and his kindliness when he addressed himself to Jost for aid to prisoners. ary for the Eastern Territories at Riga, had the humanly best impression of Jost. He has never heard anything to his disadvantage. On account of his calmness and serenity, Jest enjoyed the best possible reputation and great popularity both with his subordinates and with the population (Affidavit Jedicke Doc. Book Jost I, Doc. No. 15, exh. 15, pages 52-54).

industrious man of open, calm and honest character. Jost had no leaning to excesses (Affidavit Deeken Doc. Book I, Jost Doc. No. 1, Exh. 1 pages 1 - 3). Worms Police Station, Jost was trusted implicitly by the non-National Socialist circles among the people and also by the Jews, while on the other hand, the Party was not satisfied with his activity at the Worms Police Station, because he rejected the Party's attempts to interfere, and saw to it that the Jews were treated justly. All those who applied to Jost officially, were treated equally and received advice and assistance irrespective of their political views. Jost was popular with the Police officials on account of his just behavior. He took under his protection even those who were not Nazis in the event of their being attacked by the Party, and in many instances preserved their posts for them. Seitz confirms Jost's intervention on behalf of Pastor Dogen. Jost freed Rahn, the former Oberguergermeister of Worms from a mass demonstration in which he was in danger of losing his life. straight forward human personality who treated his subordinates in a correct and decent manner. a reserved, quiet and gentle p erson whose reserve bordered on indifference. Jost could only be induced to drop his reserve for the strongest reasons; then, however, he stubbornly defended the point of view which he held to be right.

Dr. Wohlgemuth, surgeon and medical practitioner in Berlin, regarded Jost as being tolerant, and in no way harsh or ruthless. He was modest in his way of living and in the conduct of his household affairs. Wohlgemuth was repeatedly surprised by Jost's humane and just attitude which he combined with objective criticism.

Jost also proved his readiness to help this witness inasmuch as he put him in a position which enabled him to reject the Gestapo's demand that he (Dr. Wohlgemuth) should spy on Prof. Sauerbruch. korn which I shall skip. I shall continue on page 28. the main point. The salient qualities of his character which are repeatedly confirmed are his strong sense of right, his justice, decency humaneness , goodness and integrity, his modesty and tolerance and the lack of every ambition. by nature, and not a militarist. He did not receive the Prussian military type of officers training. He always endeavored to find employment in civil administration, and in any case, his peacetime occupation in the SD was also of a more administrative character.

It should now be easy to illustrate the defendant's political attitude, based on this clear and fine foundation of his character, in order to gain greater understanding of his personality. with regard to the contents of the documents submitted by the Defense and I request the High Court to take into consideration these documents which only give the right picture if read in this connection. fanatic nor a bigot, that he not only rejected excesses, but wherever he had the chance to do so he opposed them sharply, that he had helped people in their political emergency without thought of his own advantages or disadvantages and that for this very reason he also experienced serious difficulties in his official life. Thus as a political entity he also tred the way of decency, tolerance and helpfulness.

Jost's attitude in the Jewish question can be gathered from the affidavits: Deeken, Eisfeller, Thomashausen, Sanders, Klingemann, Everwien, Waneck, Pfarrer Degen, Annemarie Jost, Seitz, Dr.

Wohlgemuth, Dr. Spohr. the Jewish question which ran counter to that which was demanded of him. The affidavit by Thomashausen also gives exhaustive information in this instance, as to how the defendant exposed himself without regard to his person and position, and indeed risked his position and got into difficulties with his superior. I would like to refer to the evidence given by the defendant Jost, page 1158, English page 1141 in the transcript, in which he described how Heydrich reproached him for his conduct which was not, sufficiently National Socialist in character, and that in this instance he saw himself obliged to give up his office. The affidavits of Thomashausen and Waneck confirm these statements. Further information concerning the irreproachable conduct of the defendant with regard to the Jewish question is given in the affidavits by Eisfeller, Everwien, Seitz, Spohr and A. directly or indirectly connected with the defendant, this comprehensive illustration of his personality must also be taken into account.

COURT NO. II, CASE NO. IX.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. SCHWARZ: I now come to point IV, the position and responsibility of the defendant. Counts I and II of the indictment. dictment the defendant is reproached with his activity as Chief of Einsatzgruppe A. At the same time reproaches are levelled against him, which do not concern the affairs of Einsatzgruppe A, but incidents in the field of the civil administration, in fact the office of the Reich Commissioner for the Ostland. a single concrete reproach can be made. There is no assertion, still less any evidence of any case of murder occurring either in the SK Ia or in the Commandos Krasnowardeisk or Leknia - the only two commandos of which Einsatzgruppe A was composed. capacity of Chief of Einsatzgruppe A, the indictment gives an entirely wrong idea. Of Jews, Communists and Partisans of whom considerably more than 100,000 were, according to the Prosecution, allegedly assassinated in the area under the control of Einsatzgruppe A, not a single person was murdered during the period in which the defendant Jost was in charge; more details will follow later. Even according to the statements of the Prosecution, out of considerably more than 100,000 assassinated persons only about 1,300 persons were killed while the defendant was in charge, i.e. an infinitesimal fraction of the number which the Prosecution asserts were killed in the area of Einsatzgruppe A. This must be emphasized since the Prosecution has assigned to the defendant a position not due to him.

The defendant cannot be held responsible for the actions of his predecessors. hald responsible in his capacity as Chief of Einsatzgruppe A, since the incidents described under Nos. 6 S and T of the indictment took place in the area of the office of the Reich Commissioner for the Ostland which was under civil administration; it must now, for safety's sake, be investigated whether the defendant can be held responsible for these incidents in his capacity as Commander of the SIPO and of the SD (security service) for the Ostland, although as regards the time when they occurred the defendant cannot be charged with these incidents. question in my trial brief on pages 36 - 43 to which I refer here. Reich Commissioner Ostland was composed of the territories of Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania and White Ruthenia. The Reich Commissioner was in charge; he had powers that cannot be compared to those of the Chief of any other agency since he was subordinated directly to the Fuehrer. He was the immediate superior of the Higher SS and Police leader who, on his part, was the superior of the Commander of the SIPO and of the SD, consequently of the defendant Jost. was invested with actual powers. He was the superior of the local SS and Police leader to whom the Commander of the SIPO and the SD were in turn subordinate.

of the SIPO and SD. However, this title does not represent the actual state of things. Ohlendorf and the witness Erlich, the Commander of the SIPO and the SD Ostland had, in practice, the position of an Inspector (a post which was usual in the Reich territory) and not the position of a real Commander (transcripts of 14 October 1947, German page 592, English page 586, cross examination Ohlendorf - trial-brief for Heinz Jost page 41 - affidavit Erlich, Dec. Book Jost III, German and English page 13.) plans which have been submitted (Doc. Book Jost III, page 14/15) illustrate that the power of command of the Commander of the SIPO in the Ostland was restricted. in question, the extent of the area - about 400,000 qkm and in a country without roads and railways it is natural that responsibility can in practice only rest with the local agencies which must, therefore, have the necessary powers; in this case it was first of all the Commissioner General and, under him the SS and Police leader who exercised these powers. This fact is apparent from the letter which the Commissioner General in White Ruthenia sent to the Reich Commissioner, and in which the Commissioner General complains about a campaign against Jews. of the SIPO and the SD, but, as I said, to the competent SS and Police leader locally. The statements of Sandberger and of witness Hartel give particulars about the responsibility of the SS and Police leader; they confirm the above assertions.

the organization of the Civil Administration, the defendant Jost was also limited in his work by Heydrich as soon as he took up his duties. Actually the restriction ordered by Heydrich only confirmed the existing state of things. defendant is not responsible for individual executive measures carried out locally. raised by the Prosecution will show the same result.

can be made concerning the various points under counts I and II of the Indictment:

1. Report of Events USSR No. 166. This report, dated 27 March 1942, was put together, on this date , from earlier reports received from the competent headquarters. On 27 March the defendant had not yet taken over his duties as Chief of the Einsatzgruppe and Commander of the Security Police. He took up office only on 29 March 1942. In view of the facts which have come to light during the trial, it is, I think, quite clear that the events set forth in the report took place a long time before 27 March. Again and again it has become clear that a few weeks passed between the occurrance of the various incidents reported from Russia and the drawing up of the reports in Berlin. The defendant can, therefore, in no way be held responsible for the events referred to in this report; neither did he nor could he know anything about them; much less could he have taken part in them. on 27 March 1942 when that Einsatzgruppe reported that 15,000 Jews had been shot at Tscherwen it has not produced any evidence to bear this out. But even if Jost had actually commanded Einsatzgruppe A as early as 27 March 1942, he could not be held responsible for this incident, since, in any case, the incident itself took place and must have taken place some time prior to 27 March 1942. this report, dated 17 April 1942, was carried out because of Communist activities and the maintenance of connections to partisan groups. Stick hand grenades and explosives had been found with some of the Communists. The execution took place - as in all cases of this type after individual investigation and proof of guilt.

in whose case the investigation showed that they had indulged in Communist propaganda up to the last moment. cannot be denied. As regards the justification of this conduct I would expressly refer to the quotations mentioned in my trial brief, p. 45; particularly to ordinance No. 1 of the Military Government, which show that then the death penalty is provided for offenses considerably less grave than those under discussion here. It must be remembered in this connection that Communist propaganda in occupied Russian territory did not mean the study of Karl Marx's or Lenin's doctrines, that Communist propaganda there meant, on the contrary, inducement to such participation in sabotage, terrorism, partisan warfare and incitement to violence, as well as instigation to murder, arson and manslaughter. Such actions are incompatible with the laws of war and have quite definitely entailed in any war the death penalty for the perpetrator according to general laws of war. in any way in these actions. He has neither issued orders nor given his consent nor did he know anything about these measures before they were carried out. For this reason, too, criminal responsibility of the defendant is out of question. 14 Jews who - among others - were shot at Kauen - were shot not because they were Jews, but because they, too, had made propaganda for Communism. This became quite clear during the direct examination of the defendant. perpetrators who were Jews had to be described only as "Jews" and not as "saboteurs, marauders, etc." in the various accounts and incident reports. Sandberger stated in his testimony among other matters: "According to the order.... Jews had to be entered in the column headed 'Jews' even when they were treated as Communists."

tions on this document, to which I may make some reference.

building of the department of the commander of the Security Police and SD, no indiccation whatsoever may be found that the defendant Jost was in any way connected with the 243 insane allegedly killed on 14 April 1942. No unit number can be ascertained, to say nothing of the name of a person responsible; it must even be seriously doubted whether this killing took place at all, as on the report submitted in photostat there is a signature, not handwritten, but merely typed, altogether an unusual procedure. The two other relevant documents were not even submitted by the Prosecution. Security Police and SD Latvia addressed to the Registrar's Office of the City of Riga, dated 19 May 1942, as well as the two other documents of the same kind which were allegedly found were said to have been discovered in the building of the sender and not that of the addressee. It is in practice unimaginable that the mailing of these three documents, the dates of which are several months apart, should have been omitted. 1942, should only have been reported on 19 March 1942, an incident on 14 April, should have been reported only on 28 May, and an incident on 22 October 1942, should have been reported only on 15 March 1943. Even if they were genuine it would be quite impossible to deduce a responsibility on the part of the defendant from them, especially in view of the fact that the killings, if they happened at all, could have been carried out by SS units which were not under the command of the defendant, or by any other police units, or even by the Wehrmacht. tains any reference whatsoever to the alleged happenings. Since, in other cases of liquidation of insane persons which were brought up during the trial, they are referred to in the reports of events there appears to be no reason why these happenings should not have been reported.

These circumstances almost force one to draw the conclusion that the alleged killings did not take place at all. order for the killings or that he was involved in any way in the happenings of 14 April 1942, which are the only ones occurring during the period of his responsibility. the International Military Tribunal and therefore has special value as evidence, then it may be pointed out that the happenings at Katyn could not be cleared up by the International Military Tribunal either. Considering everything it is absolutely plausible that the defendant neither knew before the 14 April 1942, of planned measure against the insane, nor after the 14 April 1942 heard of the alleged execution of such a measure.

Amongst other things it is stated in this report, "On 9 May 1942, 28 members of the Partisan organization White Ruthenia were publicly executed by hanging in the city area of Minsk .

Prosecution Document, Document Vol. 5-A, Document No. 2262. one may conclude, without laying oneself open to a charge of indulging in wishful interpretation here, that the 251 persons not executed publicly were all Partisans or at least such persons who were guilty of some infringement of the laws of warfare which carried the death penalty. This is supported by the fact that the 251 persons were not all Jews, in other words, it was not a proper action against Jews. The same applies here as in the abovementioned case of Olita of 7 April 1942 (C. 2), or Kauen. The fact that the number of Jews among those executed was shown separately from the others does not by any means prove that they were executed merely because they were Jews. As was the case on other occasions, this was probably done only to determine how many Jews were taking part in Partisan, or other activities. (Statements Sandberger, transcript of 17 November 1947, German page 2461, English page 2410). all customary to carry out actual executions of Jews as understood by the Prosecution, together with the execution of Partisans, etc, On the other hand, Jews, as far as they themselves were Partisans, were, of course, shot together with other Partisans, as undoubtedly was the case here. In addition to this it must in particular be considered that, according to orders given, the executions of Jews were to be carried out as inconspicuously as possible. This fact, too, speaks against the assumption that the Jews in question were supposed to have been executed merely because they were Jews. At the time under discussion many thousands of Jews were still living in Minsk, so that, if one had wanted to carry out an action against Jews, one would not have confined oneself to a small number, and moreover carried out the executions together with those of the Partisans. Hence, the argument of the Prosecution concerning the interpretation of Document NO-5188, Exh.

326, is wrong. following sentence in the document, "In Minsk, an action was carried out against a railroad terrorist group; 126 persons were arrested. The number of those arrested shows thedangerous strength of this terrorist - and Partisan group" .

Document No. 3876, Exh. 223 in Document Book 5-A gives exhaustive information of the participation of Jews in the Partisan, movement and illegal activities. of the document book, page 54/55 of the original report, which, as I have just found out, are not included in the English text, details are given on pages 87/88 of the document book, pages 57/59 of the original about the considerable strength of the Partisan groups - up to the strength of a battalion - in white Ruthenia and Minsk.

"In Minsk the chief of a partisan recruitment agency, a Jew, was arrested. In a fresh campaign against the partisan movement in White Ruthenia it has been possible so far to arrest 163 people. Numberous pistols, hand grenades, machine guns, carbines and ammunition were seized. Investigations so far have disclosed the following: staff, composed of 10 departments, whose heads were all Bolshevist officers or army administrative officials. ROKOV, the Chief of the Soviet Partisan Movement of Ninsk, and numberous other leaders were arrested. The staff had set itself the task of poisoning the Commissar General, contaminating wells and water installations in Minsk and reconnoitring military objects. Several bacterial cultures were seized. The reconnoitring of military objects was already for advanced." partisan groups, which consists of 200 to 400 men. Furthermore it is stated:

"Side by side with the Partisan Department there is the Party in Minsk, which exercises a certain control. It was possible to arrest the organizer of the Party machine, the Grusinian Jew Mustafa (page 59 of original) LELIKURDGLY. The management of the Party was in the hands of a committee consisting of seven persons. An illegal group of 60 Ghetto Jews financed Party activities, procured weapons, and continued to reinforce the Partisan group. 60 to 80 Jews were sent from the ghetto to join the Partisans. Several receiving sets as well as bandaging materials and drugs were seized in the home of the Jew DELIKURDGLY. Furthermore a perfectly functioning printing shop was dismantled and 8 typewriters confiscated." ment Book 5-A than in the English Document Book 5-A and bears the report dated March 1942, reveals that both recruitment for the Partisan movement and the organization of the Party, which is hardly separate from the Partisan movement, were essentially in the hands of Jews, that strong group of Jews - 60 men - effected the financing and procured weapons, and that strong groups of 60 to 80 Jews were sent to the Partisans.

partisan-shootings on 9 May 1942. It proves that the actions of 9 May were necessary, justified, and therefore legal according to martial law. It may be assumed that the shootings of 9 May 1942 were the outcome of the events of March 1942, in that the partisans, including the Jews, who had been arrested in March 1942 and who had participated, received their punishment on 9 May 1942 after having been tried previously. part of the defendant JOST,insofar as any responsibility whatever for the shootings Of 9 may 1942 could possibly be ascribed to him. This holds good, if for no other reason, then because of the fact that the defendant gave no order, nor did he participate in any way in this case. The relevant orders, as the document shows, were on the contrary given direct by the Commissar General in charge of that domain, or by the Wehrmacht. This fact then clarifies the fundamental question of responsibility for incidents in areas under civilian administration. that HEYDRICH had given the respective commander a respite for the enactment of the action against the Jews in White Ruthenia until after the harvest had been brought in. (transer 22 Oct. 1947, German page 1158 English page 1151, direct examination JOST- transcript 20 January 1948, direct examination STREUCH - affidavit ZENNER, Document Book I STRAUCH. Minsk at the time, as he had indicated to the defendant on the occasion of the discussion in Riga on 31 march 1 April 1942. In view of the respite greats by HEYDRICH to STRAUCH, but postponing the Jewish executions until after the harvest had been brought in, there was no reason whatever for such executions in May 1942, insofar as they were not, as explained above, executions connected with partisan or other punishable activities.

This fact too, shows that the events of 9 May 1942 were not an actual anti-Jewish campaign. for events in White Ruthenia during the time from March until September 1942, as, according to HEYDRICH's declarations, events in White Ruthenia were no particular concern of his, and he was above all things not responsible for executive measures, as is proved by the above described incident.

1. The Prosecution is unable to bring a charge of, and much less to prove, one single execution in the entire domain of Einsatzgruppe A, namely Krasnowardeisk and Loknia, during the time from 29 March 1942 to roughly 2 September 1942, which was the defendant's term of office as chief of Einsatzgruppen A; nor has any other punishable action or deed been brought forward.

2. Concerning the events outside the domain of Einsatzgruppe A. i.e., in the Reich Commissariat Ostland, and the Main districts (Generalbezirke) it may be regarded as proved that the events dealt with in action reports 186, doc. NO-3236, exh. 109 and action report 195, exh. 56, doc. No. 3277, date from the time before the defendant took office.

The contents of Doc. USSR-41, exh. 101, are not proved, Punishable conduct of the defendant JOST in particular cannot be regarded as having been proved.

This leaves the events of action report No. 193, NO-3261, exh. 55, with 22 shootings on 7 April 1942 in Olita for active Communist Activity and contact with Partisan groups, and the shooting of 22 persons in Kauen, for proved Communist propaganda activities, and finally the shooting of 253 partisans in Minsk on 9 May 1942. of the size of Greater Germany.

white Ruthenia for.the following previously discussed, reasons:

the defendant's position as Commander of the Sipo and the specific restriction of his executive powers, through HEYDRICH, due to the vastness and complexity of the area and the consequences arising therefrom, but especially in view of the defendant's attitude regarding the enactment of the Fuehrer-order, which I shall discuss in detail. connection to the statements and argumentation of the co-defendant STRAUCH, as well as to those of the other co-defendants, inasfar as they relevent. that the charge against JOST cannot be upheld, then it will be shown even more clearly through the clarification of the subjective part of the facts and the description of the situation that would have arisen if the defendant had really acted as the Prosecution asserts, namely if he had enacted the issued orders in a formal and strict manner, that the defendant cannot be charged with any punishable offense.

The defendant's attitude toward the execution problem and HENNICKE whom he had in known previously, in Smolensk. The subject of the execution problem was brought up during the conversation, and the defendant stated unequivocally that he would never let himself be drawn into such things. The defendant's statements gave HENNICKE the impression that if need be, JOST would certainly act accordingly. message for the defendant was received, conferring on him the position of chief of Einsatzgruppe A, and BdS for the Ostland. The radio message greatly perturbed and depressed the defendant, who told HENNICKE that he would, not comply with this command without protest, but would contact HEYDRICH immediately to have it revoked.

HENNICKE had the impression that these remarks were in keeping with JOST's inner most attitude toward these matters, and that he wished to have no further dealings whatever with the Sipo and the SD. (Affidavit HENNICKE, JOST's examination). attitude toward the assignment, and his intentions to escape such an appointment. They are in conformity with his psychological make-up and character as described earlier.

The defendant's words were soon followed by action. but failed at first. However, he soon had an opportunity of speaking to Heydrich, as the latter arrived in Riga himself at the end of March 1942. The contents of his talk which the defendant had with him and especially his attempt to have his assignment and the Fuehrer-Order revoked, are explained in greater detail in Jost's statements in the witness box. ( Transcript of 21 October 1947, German page 1162/64, English page 1146/49). revocation of the assignment, he nevertheless achieved the restriction of his assignment, and tasks at least so far as duties and duration were concerned. On this occasion the defendant adopted the attitude which he had already previously explained to Hennicke, and he declares in particular that he was unable to carry out measures such as were here demanded of him. of a possible transfer, and that, at least for the moment he would receive no specific instructions for a continued execution of the Fuehrer-Order. In support of the above I refer to: ventures to speak to his local superior, the Higher SS and Police Leader Jeckeln, about the Fuehrer Order.

In view of Jeckeln's personality, as revealed in various reports of events which were introduced in the proceedings, this was rather a critical undertaking. He had the advantage of being able to refer to his previous conference with Heydrich and to modify his attitude on the basis of that discussion. Yet his statements are not accepted favorably. But the defendant at least achieved the following: he did not receive any special instructions for executions. could in all fairness be expected to do. To do more than that, the defendant would have had to sacrifice his own life considering Jost's personality, the defendant must be given particularly high credit for his attitude. acquanit the commanders in Lithuania, Latvia and Esthonia of his personal attitude and of the result of his conference with Heydrich in order to achieve that for the time being executions of Jews would no longer be carried out. (Transcript dated 22 October 1947, German page 1181, English page 1165 direct examination Jost.)

In that respect the defendant's testimony is also correborated by defendant Sandberger's statements. (Transcript dated 14 November 1947).

The result of the defendant's action is evident from the fact that during the following period no further executions were reported from the area in question, at least not during the time of the defendant's activity. This alone proved the credibility of the defendant's statement in the most unmistakeable manner. by an order of Heydrich to surrender Jews under 16 and over 32 years of age for special treatment, while the other age groups were to be made available for labor allocation. The defendant credibly described and proved why he could not - and consequently did not - transmit this order. (Transcript dated 22 October 1947, German age 1182, 1183, English page 1165/67. surprise by an order of Heydrich to surrender Jews under 16 and over 32 years of ago for special treatment, while the other age groups were to be made available for labor allocation. The defendant credibly described and proved why he could not - and consequently did not - transmit this order, ( Transcript dated 22 October 1947, German page 1162, 1183, English page 1165/ 67. Direct examination Jost). (Affidavits, Best Nyhoegen, and Jost.

Dr. Leibbrandt, the former department chief of the Ministry of the Interior who was present at Jost's conference with Rosenberg at a later date, is also in a position to report that the latter had told him at that time that he had expressed his disapproval of the execution of such impossible orders to Heydrich (Doc. Book Jost I, page 19).

In spite of the clear order and Heydrich's and Jeckeln's attitude which is known to him from the previous conference, Jost decides to visit Heydrich In Berlin. This proves the defendant's strong instinctive disapproval of these execution orders. It was a risk for him to report to his superior once more in connection with this question, even if he were to employ the most diplomatic means to achieve his aims. During the conference Jost was then also informed of his assignment for active duty in no uncertain terms etc.

( Affidavits Dest, and Jost.) The defendant was unable to achieve the cancellation of the order, where as he was assured of his recall, which he urgently desired.

However, owing to Heydrich's death shortly afterwards the recall was never effected. his conviction, for instance in Krasnowardeisk he prevented the liquidation of insane persons requested by some Army Headquarters. (Transcript dated 22 October 1947, German p. 1189, English p. 1172.

Direct examination Jost). This is corroborated by the statement of the former Major General of the Waffen-SS Klingemann (Doc. volume Jost I, page 49/51). when, at the end of July 1942, Reichskommissar Lohse revealed to him his desire to report to the Fuehrer that the Eastern territory had been freed of Jews. Also in this case the defendant refuses to cooperate in the execution of measures of this kind. (Transcript dated 22 October 1941.) with Lohse, came home, Major General Jedicke, commander of the regular police, was waiting for him there. He informed the latter of his conversation with the Reichskommissar. Jedicke commented: "Well, that takes courage: Congratulations. Did you also consider that this might cost your life?" (Affidavits Jost and Jedicke). to a viewpoint which he had once considered right, regardless of danger to his own person. the lives of thousands.

After Heydrich's death the defendant was unabating in his endeavors to get away from the activity he disliked. He repeatedly tried to contact Himmler and he finally succeeded during the last third of August 1942. By this alone he incurred a great risk since he had not been ordered to present himself to Himmler.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Schwarz, in the statement at the bottom of page 53, "later on the defendant was rewarded for his conduct which saved the lives of thousands. " To what do you refer? What happened later on?

DR. SCHWARZ: He was drafted to the Waffen-SS later on.

THE PRESIDENT: You say he was "rewarded."

DR. SCHWARZ: I am not getting the translation, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: The statement says that "later on the defendant was rewarded for his conduct." Do you moon the word "rewarded" to suggest that his action was approved.

DR. SCHWARZ: Your Honor, I believe this is a mistranslation in the German text. It does not mean "reward," but it means "receipt," "receipt of the reward," "a receipt for receiving something. "

THE PRESIDENT: Mr. Glancy -

MR. GLANCY: I think possibly it is used in an ironic sense, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, if it is used in an ironic sense then it makes sense. What is actually the German word, the literal translation of the German word?

INTERPRETER JUELICH: "Reward" is the correct translation of the original, but it may mean something different.

THE PRESIDENT: Do you mean that in a cynical or saracastic sense, that he was paid for the rebellion by being demoted, is that what you mean?

DR. SCHWARZ: Certainly, Your Honor, it is sarcastic -- it means that in fact he was punished.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well.

DR. SCHWARZ: In connection with this personal visit, I refer to the defendant's description in the witness-box and to the relevant affidavits.

(Affidavits Best, Nyhoegen, Annemarie Jost.)

The defendant had to listen to harsh words, such as "I have to decide how I can make up for that (strict adherence to orders) and how I can teach you " or "Order are not to be discussed or talked about, orders are to be carried out ". That this conversation did not have any serious consequences for the defendant, at least for the moment, was probably due to the fact that Himmler took Jost's poor state of health into consideration.

Jost was at least able to obtain the approval for his recall from Riga and his transfer from the SD (Security Service ) to the ministry for the East. (Affidavit Best as above) (Affidavit Wohlgemuth, Doc. Book Jost I V).

The discussion with Rosenberg, "which took place in November 1942, ran along the same lines. At the time Jost was no longer concerned with affairs regarding Jews. He had no reason whatsoever to commit himself again in the same matter. He nevertheless took the opportunity at his first meeting with his superior, to state his personal views once again without thought of personal gains. On this occasion the defendant again opposed the execution of the pertinent orders. He tried to induce Rosenberg to prevent further executions of Jews. (Affidavit Dr. Leibbrandt, Doc. Book Jost I, page 19).

This also proves again that the Prosecution's opinion of the defendant is erroneous and untenable.

A few days after the call on Himmler the defendant's recall was actually effected. Thus his activity in the East came to an end.

The consequences and the result of the defendant's activity. different than the way the Prosecution tried to present it, For 5 months Jost was chief of an Einsatzgruppe and commander of the Sipo (Security Police) and of the SD in the East. During this time not a single person was reported dead from the entire territory of the Einsatzgruppe. Reports from the territory of the Reich Commissariate show that 2 partisans and Communist activists were shot. Within the entire territory neither a Kommissar nor a Gipsy was shot and not a single Jew was shot only because he was a Jew.

his predecessor Stahlecker. A comparison of the two results alone makes the indictment against Jost appear untenable. took up has duties, more than 40,000 Jews were living in the countries of Lithuania, Latvia, and Esthonia; the same number of Jews were living when the defendant left his office as the report of events, submitted by the Prosecution, prove. Thus about 2600 Jews were at that time still living in Riga, 900 in Duenaburg, 300 in Libau, 4500 in Schaulen, 15 000 in Kaunas and 20 - 25 000 in Vilna. Had the defendant executed the Fuehrer and Heydrich orders, then no Jews would probably have been left at the time when he was recalled from his office.

The defendant's statement is also supported by the following fact: regarding the individual persons responsible for the persecutions of Jews in the Baltics and in White Ruthenia. (Doc. Book of the Prosecution III - A, doc. No. 3872, exh. 110, German page 17 - 20, English page 1012). that he had been given a few days in which to compile this list of names and that for this purpose various persons had been interrogated. The defendant Jost's name - who was the chief of the co-defendant Sandberger 5 months - does not appear in this document. That can only be ascribed to the fact that Sandberger could not link the name of the defendant Jost with persecutions of Jews in the Baltics and in White Ruthenia and was therefore unable to list it. There is no logical reason why Sandberger, who listed the names of a greater number of co-defendants like Ohlendorf, Strauch, Nosske, Rasch, should not have mentioned the defendant Jost, if according to his opinion and his knowledge, the latter had been responsible for the persecution of Jews in the territory in question.

the executions of the persecutions of Jews have been submitted while Jost held office. Furthermore Faulhaber's affidavit proved (Doc. Book Jost I, page 21/22) that at the time when Jost was in Riga - that is at the end of August 1942 - there were still about 25 000 Jews in Vilna alone. Various reports of events or situation reports also show, that the number of Jews in the area in question did not vary during the period from March to September 1942. Jost's responsibility for his area, therefore, is this, that he has not destroyed life but has saved the lives of many thousands on account of his attitude dictated by a strict sense of justice, his decent moral principles and his conscience. On no account can the defendant, therefore, be charged with being guilty either in the eyes of the law or even morally. In view of all those circumstances it would mean basing one's judgment on formal reasoning if one intended to charge the defendant with a crime against humanity or with a war crime. The defendant was not, as the Prosecution declared in its opening statement, "presumptious enough to decide the fate of human beings, their death being the intended manifestation of his power and of his contempt for them with which he was filled". The defendant did not exercise his power for carrying out evil, but good intentions. He did not allow himself to be guided by feelings of contempt, as is corroborated by the statements of all witnesses who made affidavits. Even if one assumed that one or the other incident had happened, which might justify the raising of the question of guilt, one really could not - if one were guided by reasonable considerations - make him responsible for them. One could have to take into account his proved fundamental attitude and the extent of the area subordinated to him, the bad transport and communication conditions in this area, the unclear situation with regard, to orders which was apt to load to action being taken by all kinds of departments, and all the other circumstances, which had already been mentioned previously.

Incidentally it may also be mentioned - in order to round off picture of the defendant's personality - that he had explained his views on the Jewish question to members of his headquarters on the occasion of a rollcall and had pointed out that even the person, the life and the property of a Jew enjoyed the protection of the law. Furthermore, one of the first steps he took was to express his objection to Heydrich with regard to a decree concerning the treatment by the Police of Latvians, Estonians and Lithuanians who were employed in the Reich, and to effect the cancellation of this decree despite the fact that this decree did not even concern the sphere of his authority. in Riga as on 1 May 1942 and recommended the same measure to be taken in Estonia as well. These incidents further emphasize the general attitude of the defendant towards members of other races and nations and even towards political opponents. to produce the witnesses Nyhoogen and Landgraf, who had the most extensive insight into these events. Nyhoogen is a prisoner-of-war in Russia, whilst Landgraf is missing.

VII. The consequences of the defendant's course of action affecting him personally. talks with HEYDRICH and HIMMLER did not, of course, remain without repercussions so far as he himself was concerned. The defendant now encountered many difficulties in his path. He had given up his past, without being immediately entrusted with other tasks. He stayed with his new office in the Ministry for the East without occupation for 13 months. He was in fact being passed over. His temporary assignment as chief of liaison with an army group, that is to quite an inferior post, accentuates the impossible situation into which the defendant had got himself. (Affidavits HILDEBRANDT, and REST) prevented JOST's employment even outside the SS and the Police. Although BERGER, Chief of the SS Main Office, tried to provide a post for the defendant in the public or civil sector, he was unsuccessful, as HIMMLER did not agree to this. (Affidavits BERGER and HILDEBRANDT) HIMMLER was not satisfied with having JOST "shelved"; on the contrary he ordered him to be drafted into the Waffen SS as a corporal - a truly degrading procedure. Accordingly JOST was then to be assigned immediately,to a front unit, without previous training and medical examination and inspite of his impaired state of health of which HIMMLER know. Even the General of the Waffen SS, BERGER, wasunable to do anything about by pointing out to HIMMLER that under these circumstances JOST's conscription would be equal to a "Himmelfahrtskommando" (suicide commando). As has been stated by BERGER, HIMMLER used to take such measures whenever any of his subordinates acted in any way contrary to his orders. (Affidavit BERGER). The final cause for HIMMLER's action end the renewed order given to BERGER to have JOST drafted immediately, may have been the defendant's refusal - of which HIMMLER had gained knowledge through HILDESBRANDT to be re-assigned to the Security Police. At that time HIMMLER had used the grossest invectives against JOST, when talking to HILDEBRANDT, and had declared "that now he would certainly bring him (JOST) to his senses". (Affidavit HILDEBRANDT). JOST's conscription was ordered to list until the end of the war.

It was made known as a warning to higher SS and police Headquarters by means of a circular - a heavy blow to the defendant who was now finally "done for", a victim of his uprightness. He had been deprived of his reputation and his honor. These facts have been corroborated by the witnesses THOMASHAUSEN, NYHOFGEN and EVERWIEN. (Affidavits THOMASHAUSEN, NYHOFGEN and EVERWIEN). with not being promoted and not receiving any decorations during the whole the war and not even during his assignment to the Eastern front. Eventually one went so far as to link up the defendant with the happenings on 20 July 1944. Probably at the instigation of the Chief of the Office IV of the Reich Security Main Office, MUELLER, with whom the defendant had been at variance right from the beginning, he was searched for and suspected of having concealed the Oberourgermeister Dr. GOERDELER in his apartment. (Affidavit HEINRICH) (Transcript dated 14 October 1947, cross examination OHLENDORF). the defendant suffered through his upright and honest conduct. The defendant could have saved himself all that, of he had complied with orders. He chose to take the difficult path, which his attitude and his conscience dictated to him. VIII. Count III of the Indictment. belonged to a criminal organization, i.e. Office VI of the Reich Security Main Office and the SS. In the IMT-Verdict the SD and consequently Office VI was declared a criminal organization, because it was maintained that Office VI was a counter-intelligence organization of the Gestapo.

Actually the Prosection does not contend that the defendant had himself committed a criminal act during the period from September 1939 to August 1941, when he belonged to the Office VI; the prosecutor too pointed out during the defendant's examination, that membership of Office VI was by no means an important point. The prosecutor declared. when questioned by the Presiding Judge as to whether he accused the defendant of a crime in connection with his activity at the Reich Security Main Office: "No, Your Honor, that is only an irrelevant point".

In this connection it must be pointed out that:

1) the Office VI was no counter intelligence organization of the Gestapo, but an intelligence service for the procurement of political and economic news from abroad,

2) the Office VI accordingly had no professional connection whatsoever with the Gestapo and had nothing to do with the facts with which the Gestapo was charged; and,

3) the defendant had not gained any knowledge of these facts during his term of office from 1939 until 1941. ments of the defendant in the witness box. tasks of the Office VI and the fact that this Office VI was no counter intelligence organization of the Gestapo, are confirmed by the following affidavits: VOLLHEIM, BEST, WANECK, FINKE, DAUFEIDT and OHLENDORF. libitum, show clearly the tasks of Office VI and the non-existence of any connection with Office IV. Proof has therefore been furnished that the tasks of this office were legally founded. Furthermore the prosecution and annihilation of the Jews, atrocities and murder in concentration camps, excesses in the administration of the occupied territories, the carrying into effect of the slave labor program, and the illtreatment and murder of prisoner-of-war, with which the IMT Verdict charged the Gestapo, happened at a time, which precluded the possibility of JOST's having gained any knowledge thereof while ha held a position with the Office VI.

who had either participated in the perpetration of a crime or had not severed his connection with the organization after having gained knowledge thereof. But at the same time the verdict says (page 104) that the members of the Security Police and the SD had no opportunity during the war, to exert any influence whatever on the type of their activity, In spite of this being established in the verdict, it remains for the Tribunal to examine what the defendant undertook to quit the service of the SD and what was the result of his endeavors. The defendant, in his evidence, has given a detailed description of his relationship with the Chief of the Security Police, HEYDRICH, and the Chief of Office IV, MUELLER; of how he had at first tried to protect Office VI from MUELLER's lust for power and to keep it away from tasks, which had nothing in common with its purpose and structure, and which he furthermore considered dangerous; and last but not least he has described how he endeavored to leave the SD when he considered it impossible for material, personal and political reasons to continue to cooperate with HEYDRICH and MUELLER respectively. These declarations by the defendant are absolutely confirmed by the following affidavits: The following list I shall not read into the record but would like to ask you to take note of it. relations of the defendant to his then chiefs HEYDRICH and MUELLER, of his conception of the tasks assigned to him, and above all of his attempts to leave the SD and of the fact that he actually left the SD on account of his attitude and his endeavors approximately in August 1941. Though it is true that no formal discharge took place, it is decisive that, through his subsequent transfer to the Ministry for the East in the Reich Security Main Office, he no longer performed any functions.

There, namely in the Ministry for the Fast, no use was made of JOST's services, and without any steps on his part and against his express wish, he was employed in Riga. employment for 7 months was by no means pleased with this new task, as might have been expect d after his long period of inactivity. Nor did he reach to HEYDRICH's obvious attempt at reconciliation but immediately asked HEYDRICH's again to reverse this assignment, and in any case to give it a time-limit. Thereby he stressed anew that under no circumstances was he willing to return to the sphere of activity of the Security Police and the SD. When HEYDRICH did not keep his promise of an early recall, he Went to see him again in Berlin on 22 May 1942, in order to effect his recall. HEYDRICH gave his promise, together with the unambiguous threat that he would have him drafted into the Waffen-SS after his recall.

Even after HEYDRICH's death, JOST's endeavors were continuously directed towards bringing about his recall, and after having tried many times in vain, he succeeded in seeing HIMMLER during the last part of August. The defendant related this discussion with HIMMLER in detail.

result of this discussion. In this case he had again succeeded in leaving this kind of work, even though it was not possible for him to leave the organization altogether during the war. Only after 13 months of inactivity was the defendant given an unimportant position as liaison officer of the ministry of the East with the army group at Nikolayev. When the position of commander of the Security Police was offered to him again in February 1944, he resolutely refused it, since he did not want to be subordinated again to HIMMLER's authority. JOST's refusal, which was made without considering his own person, was made known to HIMMLER and led to JOST's final drafting into the Waffen-SS. in 1941 as chief of office VI and in 1942 as chief of Einsatzgruppe A and Commander Ostland as also in 1944, in order to be able to leave the Security Police and SD, namely HIMMLER's field of activity. he maintained this attitude without regard for his own advantages. In practice it was impossible for him to achieve any more. He has proved that he tried everything that could be asked of him, and thereby succeeded in not performing any functions, at least after fall 1942, within the scope of the Security Police, SD, or SS, with the exception of his being drafted into the Waffen-SS. Taking this into consideration, he cannot be convicted for membership in a criminal organization. In this connection I wish to refer to the statement made by the British Chief Prosecutor in the verdict of the International Military Tribunal, namely that there was one way of leaving, namely via the forces. By his attitude towards HEYDRICH and HIMMLER' JOST provoked this course of events and accepted it.

Through his assignment to the Einsatzgruppe, JOST's membership to Office VI Reich Security I Main Office would have stopped even if he had not, de facto, left before. As Chief of the Office VI Reich Security Main Office, JOST committed no crimes. Since his activity at that time was lawful, he could not of his own accord have gained any knowledge of the criminal nature of Office VI, as was ascertained by the International Military Tribunal. Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos were no authorities, agencies or parts of the organization of the Chief of the Security Police and the SD even less so of the Offices III, VI and VII of the SD, which were declared criminal. Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos were on the contrary militant and mobile units set up ad hoc and attached to army groups or armies for police purposes. This is not changed even by the fact that the Chief of the Security Police and the SD could give pertinent directives to the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommandos. The Einsatzgruppen and-kommandos did not thereby become agencies of the Chief of the Security Police and the SD. In this case he acted as the professional agent who was at the disposal of the commander in chief of the army group and the armed forces respectively. Therefore the knowledge of the events in the East which JOST acquired in 1942, i.e. many months after his withdrawal from Office VI of Reich Security Main Office, cannot be cited as proof of his knowledge of the criminal nature of Office VI at the time when he was still office chief. This knowledge would need to be immediately connected with his activity in Office VI. However in this case the link between time and subject matter is missing. It is therefore a fact that at the time of his activity in Office VI Reich Security Rain Office, JOST was not conscious at all of any wrongdoing. direct examination. By his activity in Office VI of the Reich Security Main Office, he automatically became a member of the SS-formation Security Service.

The peculiarity of this formation was that it did not possess an organization of its own. There were neither Stuerme nor Standarten within this special SS formation Security Service. Therefore no SS service wasperformed in it either. Since this special formation existed only theoretically and actually made no appearance, it lacked the prerequisites for criminal activity right from the beginning, and no member of this formation could have been conscious of belonging to a criminal organization. of my colleague, Dr. Gawlik, for the defendants Seibert and Naumann, according to which one can judge Jost's membership in the SS; Jost's is not charged with involuntary membership in the Waffen-SS by the Prosecution. I am now coming to Point IX. commander of the Security Police and the Security Service Ostland, JOSTfor the first time received full knowledge of the Fuehrer order. It became clear to him that he was faced with a binding order given by his highest superior, the Fuehrer, and he also became aware what actions were demanded of him on the basis of this Fuehrer order. disposition, his attitude was one of opposition to this order right from the beginning. and necessities surrounding him; and with his personal attitude. Undoubtedly he was confronted with a conflict of duties. The defendant tried to free himself from this conflict of duties by immediately and repeatedly attempting to sever all personal connection with the execution of the Fuehrer order either by having his superiors cancel the further execution of the Fuehrer-Order on the basis of his remonstrances or by being released from this order entirely. He continued to make every effort in order to achieve this -- as has been proved and explained already in detail -- without having regard for his person or for the fact that he was thereby risking his life. action, he again, at the risk of his life, undertook to delay the further execution of the Fuehrer-Order and later the HEYDRICH-Order. However, the defendant could not make up his mind flatly to oppose the order. However, the considerations which were especially impressed upon him -- as a soldier -- namely that in his position as a superior he was not to give a bad example, that disobedience on his part would undermine the discipline of the forces, that by this he would become guilty of aiding the enemy and in fact would become a traitor to his people kept him from taking such an action. At the same time the defendant was of course aware of the fact that he would speedily lose his life if he went beyond that which he had already done. training as jurist and his three years' practice as an attorney, the defendant -- in the position in which he found himself -- took the course which, to a certain extent, made him appear dishonrable in the eyes of his superiors and also his comrades, as is proved by his degrading enlistment into the Waffen SS with the rank of a sergeant.

On the basis of his character the defendant valued decision according to his conscience, more than the execution of a binding order which, it is true, he considered legal yet which he himself felt unable to carry out.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess.

(Recess.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. SCHWARZ: It must be admitted that the defendant for his part did everything that could reasonably have been exported of him. It is impossible to maintain that the defendant should have gone further and should have flatly refused an order or become what would have to be considered a traitor to his people. Yet the defendant would in fact have betrayed his people -- a crime punished by the death sentence in all civilized states -- if by flatly disobeying orders he had undermined the discipline of the forces and thus aided the enemy. author of the orders in question which were given by the Fuehrer and by HEYDRICH; that he never issued orders of his own on the basis of these orders; that these fundamental orders had existed and had already been carried out for a long time past and that under these circumstances the defendant had no possibility of making a decision of his own free will. duties and the unexpectability ......., the defendant must also be acquitted of guilt and punishment with regard to the subjective side of the case. or participation in acts -- which according to the explanations given under paragraph IV to VI is out of the question -- the defendant should also be acquitted of guilt and punishment on the basis of assumed selfdefense, of an assumed state of emergency, a state of emergency arising from an order received and the conception of a general state of necessity, as was applied particularly in the Flick sentence. be acquitted of guilt and punishment.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Ratz.

DR. RATZ: Dr. Ratz for the defendant Von Radetzky. make a brief remark. On 7 February I handed in a trial brief which has already been translated and which will be submitted to the Tribunal within the next few days. This trial brief is an important completion of my final plea. Your Honors -

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Ratz, will you please follow up that trial brief and see that it does get to us quickly. Don't just assume that mechanically it will finally reach us. Keep an active interest in it yourself.

DR. RITZ: Yes, your Honor.

Your Honors: shootings which they offer in the indictment is still not sufficient wholly and completely to life the veil and clear away the fog surrounding the question of the criminal guilt of each of the defendants sitting here, in spite of all the operation reports with dates, figures and names. In its opening speech of 29 September 1947 the prosecution described the  doctrine of the Master Race and inferior races", apparently with the intention of demonstrating how such a thing could be possible, why such acts are to be attributed to the defendants, and where the roots of their guilt are to be found. But it would mean going only half way if, in this trial of all trials, one did not investigate the character of each individual defendant and if one did not utilize every means of cognition to gain a true picture of the nature and the character of each one of them. This applies particularly if the name of a defendant, like that of the defendant v. RADETZKY, is nowhere to be found in any report of events concerning shootings. There is only a hint there for the correct judgment of what he did and and what he did not do and of what he submitted to the court; his personality.

The defendant v. RADETZKY is a Baltic German. He comes from an ethnic group which until 1939 had nothing at all be do with the Third Reich, either spiritually or culturally, and which for centuries has been a closed community in customs, morals and manner of thinking, the individual members of which have been and still are today tru representatives of their Baltic homeland with regard to what they think, feel and want. ments of the defendant v. RADETZKY in the witness stand, concerning his origin and the influences in his old homeland which had a decisive part in building his character; it is therefore, probably superfluous for me to go once more into the conditions in the Baltic countries which prevailed there until the resettlement of the defendant. I would only like to summarize once more the reasons why particularly in the case of the defendant v. RADETZKY one cannot simply assume that on the basis of his development he unconditionally endorsed the National Socialist theory and/or its result. On the contrary, a transition into the ideas of National Socialism was impossible for the following reasons:

1.) From time immemorial, the Baltic Germans nave been very part of the Protestant civilization in the North;

2.) The Prussian principles of subordination, of the obedience to civilian life in its entirety, was foreign to the Balts;

3.) The entire history of the Balts is a history of their autonomy in school, church, justice and culture; the policy of regulating all walks of life from "above" was 4.) The Balt's country of origin is a homeland for diversified principle by which peoples my live together in peace; The defendant v. RADETZKY was forced to go to Germany with his ethnic group at that time.

It would be incorrect and unjust to brand this defendant with a stamp bearing the National Socialist view of life and to try to maintain that he endorsed the Nazi ideology of the master race. For this reason he is supposed to have been an arbitrary instrument of a systematic program of genicide.

In his own homeland, v. RADETZKY had experienced the cost of belonging to a national minority. In personal danger, in personal suffering and personal injury, Besides the Germans there were other minorities in Latvia who had the same needs and troubles the Germans had. These minorities were of mutual assistance to each other, and on the witness stand v. RADETZKY has told us that he owed the upward trend of his firm in those years of special affliction from 1936 on, to close business cooperation with Jewish firms.

From 1936 on! Can one seriously claim or even believe that from 1939 on, or at least from 1941 on, v. RADETZKY in gratitude for his compulsory resettlement to Germany or in gratitude for his enforced drafting into the Sonderkommando subscribed to the doctrine of the existence of one higher and many inferior races, and that the most inferior races are the Jews and the gypsies?

Or should we rather not believe in the steadfastness of his conviction that only mutual tolerance and regard of peoples in ethnic groups can be the prerequisite of the common good, thus the national tolerance which is as deep rooted in him as a Balt as the sense of freedom is in the Swiss.

Young RADETZKY's inclination were in for different fields from those of politics: he had to rebuild an economic existence for himself and his old mother and wanted to regain his lost property as a businessman. To be sure, he also had a deeprooted social sense and took over the direction of an office for vocational guildance and assitance with the German People's Community, the organization of the German minority of the country, recognized by state and international law; he founded homes for the families of white-collar workers and officials and a company-aid fund, and no one can claim that as a German he would not have stayed within the limits of legal and normal activity of his patriotism. autumn of 1939 came the resettlement of the Baltic Germans from their old homeland by the Baltic Sea to the region of Posnan. It was not the sort of emigration which takes place when the homeland has become top small for its population and now on its own initiative it seeks a new homeland in the hope of bettering its personal condition: it was an emigration determined upon by the government over the heads of those concerned. In reality it was a mass flight before the advancing Bolshevist armies which were on the verge of occupying the Baltic countries. In all reason one cannot speak of a voluntary impulse. It was nothing short of a tragedy involving 60,000 people who had to leave their homeland, their dwellings and houses, and at best could wretchedly take some furniture and a few cattle with them. to hold v. RADETZKY responsible for what happened to the former inhabitants in the new area of settlement. The Resettlement Center was solely responsible for the emigration of the settlers.

v. RADETZKY, a businessman and economic expert, took part in this portenteous transferring of his compatriots from their homeland as an economic counsel both in the appraisal of the property left behind in the homeland and in their economic care at their destination in Poznan.

The Balts set up their own Immigration Advisory Office which was staffed exclusively by Balts and served the sole interest of the resettled Balts, and there can hardly be any doubt about its character as a social, unpolitical enterprise. Once again we can observe the conduct of the defendant v. RADETZKY in a relatively free situation: he did not fawn upon the National Socialist Offices and also did not prove to be one of those National Socialist preachers who had been frustrated up to that point, but he helped and only helped, insofar as he could help at all, with his energies in the general confusion, and he was just as astonished as his Baltic compatriots when the Gauleiter of the NSDAP received the Baltic Germans with the friendly threat that he would soon exercise their domineering attitude and teach them National Socialism. In this external and internal distress into which v. RADETZKY and his compatriots had fallen as a result of National Socialism, he truly did not have the heart to acknowledge a particular belief in National Socialism or even to enter the SS.

I would like to repeat what I said in the beginning: The Balts came as refugees, who were looking for work and shelter; they had to adapt themselves and enter the Party and its affiliations if they wanted to profit by a moderate influence upon their fate: they could hardly criticize the recruiting of the Party, since they came from a foreign country. It would hardly be possible, therefore, to hold it against v. RADETZKY, if, in his hopeless situation and in the face of his existence which had again been shattered, he had joined the SS, hoping for a modest improvement in his situation. In spite of this, von RADETZKY came to the SS, however, under conditions which were for him just as unexpected and involuntary. He did not simply join through the system of pressure from above, he was forced into the SS.

It happened in this way: in the fall of 1939 the Baltic German Emigration Advisory Office in Poznan was taken over by the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans upon the order of HIMMLER as Reich Commissar; it would have been an exception and almost a miracle if this office had remained free from the general tendency of centralization. Had the Balts not offered any resistance, their organization would have been dissolved without opposition, and an increase of suffering, worry, and distress on the part of the resettlers would have been the certain result. Even though events might have taken the same course as previously, there was still from all outward appearances the "Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans Emigration Advisory Office -- Poznan," and even though the Baltic German employees, among them von RADETZKY, had remained the same as far as their personality and identity were concerned and their work remained unaltered in every way, they were still assigned to the SS. During his stay in Poznan HIMMLER personally took them into the SS on 12 and 13 December 1939 and appointed them at the same time SS-offieers. simultaneously when von RADETZKY was taken into the SS he was appointed SS-Untersturmfuehrer. had come to Germany as a Baltic German and foreigner, was taken into the SS as an Officer without any further investigation of his person and without his application. The witness KUBITZ, former Director with the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans, has explained in detail to us this event, which is certainly a singular one, (affidavit, dated 28 November 1947, Document Book RADETZKY II, page 54 ff., Document No. 14, Exhibit 4). He remarks as follows:

"I am able to testify as follows in this respect on the basis of my practical knowledge; von the SS; made no SS oath, paid no dues, was not SS duties.

The honorary officer was carried as a belong to an SS unit.

He exercised no power of literature.

To be sure, the Honorary SS--officer Main Office and not by an SS unit.

I also remember not as a regular SS-officer."

Resettlement of the Baltic Germans, with Headquarters in Riga, and subsequently Personnel Chief of the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans, in other words certainly also a competent witness, supplements this statement in his affidavit of 14 November 1947 (Doc. Bk. RADETZKY II, p. 57, Doc. No. 15, Exh. 5) when he states:

"After the first resettlement, there existed a Poznan in which v. RADETZKY worked; when this Honorary officers by the SS; among them was v.RADETZKY.

From my activity as Personnel Chief of SS; it was a written order which stated that SS Main Office.

Thus v. RADETZKY was in no in connection with this transfer."

the former SS-Obergruppenfuehrer LORENZ states:

"HIMMLER, during a visit to Poznan about the middle of December 1939, had shown extreme indignation at the existence of an independent representation of the Baltic Germans in the form of the Immigration Advisory Office. By HIMMLER's order it was made an annex of the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans. At this occasion the greater part of the personnel was taken over and put into uniform............

In this manner also v. RADETZKY was taken over by the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans and it was contemplated to give him as well as several other Baltic German employees, insignia of a senior rank. In February 1940 v. RADETZKY was ordered to report to Berlin and for the first time was issued the uniform of a second lieutenant. I wish to emphasize that this transfer came about without any request or action on the part of v. RADETZKY and that he was in no position to promote or counteract it." (Doc. Bk. RADETZKY III, p. 8 f. Doc. No. 35).

May it please the Tribunal. Behind the verdict of the IMT, which declares as criminal certain organizations and groups and thus finds their members guilty of criminal acts, stands the incontestable principle of the criminal code of all civilized nations which demands that only a person, who voluntary, knowingly and willingly commits an act, shall be treated as a criminal; therefore, the IMT excerpts those members of the SS from being declared criminal who were drafted into its ranks by the State in suchaa matter as to leave then no other choice, and those who did not commit such crimes.

The admission of the defendant v. RADETZKY was a purely passive act as far as he is concerned. I further quote from LORENZ' above-mentioned affidavit?

"HIMMLER issued his orders during his inspection and not as Reichsfuehrer-SS.

With regard to governmental authority.

In this capacity Immigration Advisory Office".v. RADETZKY, who was accepted not on political grounds but for reasons connected with the resettlement action, and particularly in order that he could be in uniform while officially dealing with the Russians, had as little choice as any other person who was drafted into the Waffen-SS for purely military purposes.

In due deliberation with reason and justice conscription for state duties cannot be charged one way on another today as a crime to those concerned. No further discussion is needed of the fact that the execution of the state treaties with the Baltic states and/or Russia concerning the resettlement of Baltic Germans represented a state matter. the part of the defendants not only on the claim that they participated in shootings; in some cases, and this includes the case of my client, the accountability is based on the assertion that the defendant in question had held a responsible position and therefore had authority to order executions, but also to prevent then.

Since the defendant in question had violated his legal and moral duty of preventing the execution of innocent people, he was, for his reason alone, responsible for what happened. The prosecution's argumentation in the case of the defendant v. RADETZKY is quite simple: v. RADETZKY at the time held the rank of SS-Captain and thus was next to the highest leader of the Kommando BLOBEL, therefore on account of his position alone he should be held fully responsible. This argumentation, however, is incorrect since the SS-rank in itself did not bestow on a person any authority within an Einsatzkomamando. The position within an Einsatzkommando, and thus the authority and responsibility, was not determined by the SS-rank but, as was and still is customary in civil service setup, of every state, by the orders from superior headquarters in the same Sector, in this case by orders from the Einsatzgruppe.

with very little talent for administration and organization and a very poorly developed scent if one were to assert that the responsible leaders of a Sonderkommando, which is scheduled to carry out assignments of the gravest nature in the East, were picked in such a manner. In order to illustrate how incorrect it is to confound SS-rank and power of command in the Einsatzkommando, I quote from the affidavit of the Amtschef (Chief of Office) of the RSHA Walter Schellenberg, of 4 Oct. 47 (Doc. Bk. Radetzky I, p. 24, Doc. No. 10, Exh. 10):

"In May 1941 many ethnic Germans from the Baltic Area were drafted for the SD (RSHA) under the Emergency Service Decree. These persons were assigned to Einsatzgruppen as interpreters and experts on the country in view of their knowledge of the Russian language. These persons so drafted under the Emergency Service Decree were so-called "persons wearing uniform", in other words, regardless of their previous membership in organizations they donned the SS-uniform. There were no specific rules concerning rank insignia, they Were issued quite indiscriminately in consideration of age and previous positions and ranks." to render service on the basis of their draft by the civil authority under the Emergency Service Decree, this situation in itself explains why there can be no talk of "authority" or "power of command" as far as these persons are concerned. The need to put them in uniform resulted from the nature of their assignment; they were employed by a mobile outfit in enemy territory.

identity between von Radetzky's rank in the SS and his position in SK 4a is also substantiated by the available personnel records of the defendant von Radetzky (NO-4711). In vain we look for an order by the SS Personnel Main Office or the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans decreeing von Radetzky's transfer to the RSHA or to the Einsatzgruppe C or to SK 4a, in vain we look for any other indication that usually can be found in a Personal File in connection with the transfer of an SS-Leader for duty in another office. Yet on the first page of his file card we find the following data: "Trained vocation: business man; at present Deputy Chief of Ethnic Immigrants; furthermore Employer: Immigration advisory Office for Ethnic Germans at Poznan; drafted on 19 May 1941 into a Sonderkommando of the Security Police."

In this connection I would like to explicitly establish the following: Emergency Servide Decree: a less involuntarily way of committing a person to render service cannot be conceived!

Yet another fact should receive attention: from a viewpoint of seniority von Radetzky never was the senior Leader next to the Commander; both at Blobel's time and otherwise von Radetzky was subordinate not only to the Commander but also to other SS-officers. This fact has been clearly substantiated by the defendant's statements on the witness stand as well as by the affidavits of members of the Einsatzgruppe and the Kommandos which were introduced. have nurtured a false ambition to ever have held the position which the Prosecution has ascribed to him. And even by way of the relatively neutral activity of objective reporting von Radetzky was not Chief of this Section but only Special Advisor as, here again, he also was subordinate to another SS-officer in addition to the Commander. It thus is impossible to uphold the assertion that von Radetzky was second-incommand of the Kommando next to Blobel, regardless from which viewpoint one may consider his position.

that he was a member of the SD Organization which was declared criminal. The question as to whether the defendant von Radetzky became a member of the SD be being drafted under the Emergency Service Decree to a Sonderkommando, must be answered in the negative already because the IMT judgment in discussing the membership in the SD expressly emphasizes that the Security Police and the SD were voluntary organizations. I wish in this connection to quote verbatim the respective passage of the judgment (page 104 of the Nymphenburger Edition 1946):

"The Security Police and the SD were voluntary organizations. It is true that many state and administration officials were transferred into the Security Police. The assertion that this transfer was a compulsory one results in nothing but that they had to accept the transfer or to withdraw, thereby possibly exposing themselves to official disgrace. During the war the members of the Security Police and the SD had no free choice with regard to their activity within this organization and the refusal to fill a certain position, especially in the service within the occupied territories, could have inflicted heavy punishments. There remains, however, the fact that all members of the Security Police and the SD voluntarily joined this organization under no duress other than the wish to retain their position as civil servants." drafted and made liable to do emergency service may, therefore, today not be regarded as a member of the SD or the RSHA according to the sense of this judgment. tion: It may be true that the defendant was made liable to emergency service, yet this cannot mean an exoneration for him, because (1) the Emergency Service Decree of 15 October 1938 does not form a sufficient legal foundation for the drafting into the Security Police and the SD (Cf. Affidavit of Dr. Hans Heinrich of 7 January 1948, Doc.

No. 5814, Doc. Book V C) and (2) the compulsion of a draft on the basis of the Emergency Service Decree nevertheless, was not so far reaching that upon certain efforts one could not have evaded it.

In this connection the following should be stated: Reich is not under discussion in this connection. It would be of no use to attempt to prove, for instance, to a former prisoner that his commitment to a concentration camp had no legal foundation. Incidentally, the argument of the non-existing legal foundation is also substantially incorrect. In his order Gazette of 20 July 1942 (Doc. Book IV Radetzky, Doc. No. 39) the Chief of the Security Police and the SD, on his own authority, confirmed and ordered the draft into the ranks of the Security Police and the SD on the basis of this Emergency Service Decree of 15 October 1938. The Chief of the administrative department and simultaneously the personnel officer of the NuernbergFuerth Police Headquarters in the years 1933 to 1945, Regierungsdirektor Dr. Alfons Holz, further confirmed on the basis of his practical experience of many years (Doc. Book Radetzky IV, Doc. No. 40) that it was the regular practice of the Nuernberg-Fuerth Police Headquarters to draft persons into the Gestapo and the SD as well as into the SS on the basis of the Emergency Service Decree. In addition, on the basis of his practical handling of the Emergency Service Decree for years, Dr. Holz declared as follows:

"I am acquainted with Article 1 of the Emergency Service Regulation of 15 October 1938, in which is stated in paragraph III that service on the basis of the Defense Law, in the Reich Labor Service , in the Border Customs Defense (Zollgrenzschutz), on the Police etc. always has priority over Emergency Service. This regulation is to be understood to the effect that service on the basis of the Defense Law, in the Reich Labor Service, in the Border Customs Defense, in the Police, etc. cannot be altered by an Emergency Service draft, and that persons who are clearly serving on the basis of the Defense Law, in the Reich Labor Service , in the Border Customs Defense, in the Police, etc.

can not be drafted to service on the basis of the Emergency Service regulation".

And he continues:

"It may not be concluded from that this an "indispensable" status based on the Defense Law could not have been altered by an Emergency Service draft. Rather, the procedure was such that an Emergency Service draft could overrule an "indispensable" status for a civil service, i.e. outside of the Defense Law, without any trouble. In practice this was handled in such a way that the man drafting for emergency service had to negotiate with the civilian office for which the "indispensable" status applied, for instance with the town administration."

Finally, Dr. Holz also made statements which are based on his practical experience of many years with regard to the question as to whether one could evade the Emergency Service Decree. He states that he does not know of one single case where somebody would have dared to make an attempt of evading the draft for emergency service. Everybody knew that such a behavior would have been interpreted as political unreliability or as sabotage and that his behavior would have caused state police interference with the customary consequences, such as commitment to a concentration camp. Finally, Dr. Holz declared that he did not experience a single case in his practice where a person liable to emergency service would have succeeded in evading the draft.

Thus it is evident: It is not very commendable to trap a defendant today by applying judicial theories based on the decrees and laws of the Third Reich. sequence of his career as civil servant or by being drafted into emergency service, had come into the mysterious sphere of the RSHA, Heydrich's threat applied to all of them, namely that the very attempt voluntarily to resign would mean concentration camp and physical extermination of the renegade.

a dozen times, ventured to get out of the liability for emergency service. First of all he asked his employer, the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans, to requisition him; Radunski in his affidavit of 14 November 1947 (Doc. Book Radetzky II, page 60, Doc. No. 15, Exh. 5) stated that von Radetzky's application for re-employment with with the Repatriation Office for Ethnic Germans was not processed by chief of staff Behrends because the latter shunned quarrels with the SD in personnel matters. At every change of commanders with Sonderkommando Ha, von Radetzky repeated his risky attempt, he troubled his Baltic friend von Freytag-Loeringhoven, who for a certain time was Ic of Army Group Center, to assist him in this dangerous game. He repeatedly informed first one person then the other, in Einsatzgruppe I, of his wishes, always hoping perhaps some time to contact the right man and to discover the right way. A gracious fate protected the defendant von Radetzky so that this, not only dangerous, but I may say, also naive playing with fire did not one day become a flame, consuming him. As regards his naivety, I must in this connection refresh your memory that von Radetzky told us how he sent two memoranda from Shitomir to the Reich Minister for the Occupied Eastern Territories , one concerning the treatment of the Jewish question, hoping thus to effect a change of the German policy in the East. One must have been a Baltic German of the mould of a Radetzky with so much ignorance about the actual conditions on the one hand and with so much faith in the good of human nature on the other, in order at all to get the idea of writing such a memorandum. Maybe this imperturbably decent and good character of the defendant von Radetzky is the reason why his desires were not taken amiss and why he was not treated in agreement with Heydrich's threat. With this confiding naivery he seriously and obstinately purused his goal and first of all succeeded in being granted leave from the middle of December 1941 until the middle of March 1942; and then h e was very fortunate in finally finding a man right in the center of the RSHA with whom he not only could speak openly but who even promised him his full support; this was defendant Schulz, at that time Personnel Officer in the RSHA, with whose assistance von Radetzky , after long, vain efforts, finally succeeded in being released from Eastern assignment (Einsatz). declares verbatim as follows (page 108 of the quoted edition):"The Tribunal declares the group of such members of the Gestapo and the SD to be criminal according to the sense of the statutes as held the positions enumerated in the previous section, as were members of the organizations or remained so, although they knew that these were being used for the performance of deeds which according to Article 6 of the statute have been declared to be criminal and such as being members of the organization personally participated in the perpetrated in the perpetration of such crimes."

amy be said in summarizing: (1) the defendant was not a member of the SD in the sense of this sentence, since he joined the service of the Einsatzgruppe and the RSHA on the basis of a civilian draft, the so-called Emergency Service obligation, and never in any way voluntarily; (2) he cannot be reproached for having stayed in the service since he made every effort that reasonably may be expected from him, considering the situation at that time, in order to escape this service, rendered involuntarily and reluctantly, and he did so immediately employing every opportunity offering itself regardless of possible consequences as we could see from his discussion with the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe Thomas. A third point speaks in favor of the defendant von Radetzky: Not only was he not a member of the SD, he also never participated in the perpetration of the crimes mentioned in the sentence of the IMT.

the individual responsibility of the defendant v. RADETZKY; (1) by ascribing to him a special position and authority in Sonderkommando 4a on the basis of his rank in the General SS, saying: this very authority makes the defendant appear guilty; (2) by presenting his mere belonging to Sonderkommando 4a as evidence for his criminal participation in executions; one could assume that it was impossible to have belonged to Sonderkommando 4a as an officer without being entangled with these things. the General SS are evidence for the authority and the sphere of responsibility of the defendant within Sonderkommando 4a; in addition, that his duties to begin with were adjusted to the purpose of his emergency service obligation. It is still necessary to discuss the further development of the activity of the defendant v. RADETZKY with Sonderkommando 4a in order to remove every doubt about the miscarriage of the argumentation of the Prosecution concerning the individual guilt of this defendant. cution expresses at the conclusion of its opening statement of 29 September 1947, saying that the defendants were under the obligation, if not by their conscience then by law, to refrain from such an activity. The story of the activity of the defendant v. RADETZKY is nothing but a successful attempt, attended by equal shares of good luck and ability, to stay out. Since he also regarded his activity as interpreter as dangerous-under no circumstances would he have to deal with interrogations - he merely restricted himself to reporting and thus gradually severed his connections with Sonderkommando 4a altogether, he became liaison officer to the army and in this practical manner achieved what was not possible for him in any other way. of Einsatzgruppe C, Karl HENNICKE, of 28 November 1947(Doc. Book I RADETZKY II, page 76, Doc.No. 20, Exh. 14) I quote his statement with regard to v. RADETZKY's activity as follows:

"In each of the Sonderkommandos, or Kommandos, the Secu which kept the person concerned fully occupied.

The official reports in some way or other.

For this purpose he had to sources of information of all kinds.

The reports were drafted (according to the department to which they went), mental head III.

The drafting of reports which prepared charge of department IV of the Kommando concerned.

As far matters were prepared by their own officials."

clusively with execution; but the duties of the Special Adviser IV and/or the Chief IV in the Staff of Einsatzgruppe C comprised all police and similar measures. There was a separate to Special Adviser in the Staff of Einsatzgruppe C for executive matters.

In Sokal where v. RADETZKY for the first time learned of the Fuehrer order, he made sure once more in a discussion with his Commander, BLOBEL, about his special task which concerned reporting for the SD and registration of documents, and he received the assurance that he would be given no such assignment as the other officer of the Kommando since he did not have the necessary qualifications, that is police training, v. RADETZKY also were rank insignia different from those of the other leaders of equal rank, who were exercising police functions; this, possibly, was only a formality, yet in the Wehrmacht this was definite proof as to the kind and scope of the authority and duties of the wearer of the uniform; also the amount and manner of payment assured v. RADETZKY that he was not regular T/O officer in the Sk4a but only a civilian drafted under the Emergency Service Law, even though he held the rank of (Captain) in the General SS. While v. RADETZKY had to be satisfied with a daily allowance of RM 1.20,a Captain of the SD of the Secret State Police, who to all outward appearance was of equal rank, received exactly ten times the amount.

In connection with his job of reporting, the defendant v. RADETZKY came into increasingly close contact with the headquarters of the 6th Army, be it on the distributing or the receiving end, for their duty, too consisted of reporting and thus their interests ran parallel to those of v. RADETZKY.

Here he saw for himself an opportunity to escape the narrowmindedness of the Kommando after his initial attempt to resign had failed. He worked his way intentionally toward the position of a Liaison officer since only in this way could he escape the constant danger of being drafted for executive work. Thus he succeeded in becoming detached from the Kommando as early as one month after the invasion of Russia.

He was sent on temporary duty with the G-II of the A03 (Army High Command Section 3) of the 6th Army, a Major LULEY, whose affidavit of 7 October 1947 can be found on p. 42 of my Doc. Bk. 1 (Exh. 15, Doc. No. 11); LULEY reports that from - August 1941 until the middle of December 1941 v. RADETZKY maintained constant local contact with him and that after he took leave of absence at that time for several months he resumed his functions on his return from furlough. Through his well-informed reports on the situation in agriculture, commerce, and industry von RADETZKY had attracted above all the attention of the economic secitons of the Army and now as Liaison officer with the Army had a special opportunity of reporting from a central point, and it was here that he found one of the few places where, in an indirect manner and a form unique under the prevailing circumstances, he was able to point out the effects of the Fuehrer order. In his closer entourage at that time was also the Liaison Official of the Reich Ministry for Foreign Affairs, Councillor of Legation von SCHUBERT, whose affidavit of 1 November 1947 can be found on page 72 of my Doc.Bk.II (Exh. 17, Doc. No. R 19). Von SCHUBERT, also had to file reports, in his case with the Reich Ministry for foreign Affairs, and they dealt with the morale of the Soviet Army on the basis of the material arriving at G-II from prisoner of war statements, furthermore with the morale of the population in the occupied territory, the supply situation of the population, cultural affairs, such as re-ortanization of the school system, and with the re-organization of the self-administration of the population. Von SCHUBERT received many an idea for his reports from Von RADETZKY, who also gave him hints with regard to offices and persons who would give him further enlightenment.

Von RADETZKY, in this connection, proved to be an outstanding expert while revealing at the same time that he was a most severe critic and opponent of the official German policy toward the East. gical report of the further official assignments and the career of the defendant, Von RADETZKY. With the help of affidavits from many witnesses I have been able to demonstrate without any gap whatsoever von RADETZKY's activity during the period from June 1941 until the beginning of 1944 and beyond, and in such a manner that for any given part of this period there are always several statements available. I therefore, need not carry on this presentation since the Tribunal can easily gain from the perusal of my document books a precise picture without any further argumentation on my part; this picture clearly and distinctly shows the following:

Von RADETZKY, who in June 1941 was drafted as a "person rendering emergency service without an employment contract" in an assignment as interpreter and expert on the country with Sk4a and who at once was used, in addition, as Special Advisor III for reports to the SD, soon, that is as of August 1941, was given the assignment as Liaison Officer with the Army and he exercised these functions at various Army headquarters until he resigned from Sk4a, and even thereafter. He could not be drafted for executive tasks in the Sk4a since he formally held only a rank in the SS; since he had had no training in police work, in other words since helacked technical qualifications, he could not at all be utilized in this field and he actually was not utilized in the security police work of which the so-called executive matters formed a part. For this reason, i.e. the fact that he was not a full-time and technically trained police officer, Von RADETZKY wielded no power of command in the Sk4a, and, therefore, never could become a Chief of the Kommando or of a Vorkommando or Sup-Kommando nor could he ever become deputy to such a Leader, and he never did.

with the army and in maintaining himself in this office "since he was able to move about in military circles and possessed the necessary poise" to quote the fitting remarks which the witness BENDT made in his affidavit of 21 January 1948, Doc. Bk. RADETZKY IV, Doc. No. 36, but also certainly because, from a technical point of view he was a stranger within the Sk4a and could not be given an other assignment. Logical thinking will lead yet to the following conclusion:

1) If v. RADETZKY constantly was Liaison Officer with the Army, then he must have been geographically separated from his Kommando; one would have to expect the existence of special circumstances if one were to assume that he participated all the same in executions; there was for him all the less reason for this since his capacity and time were efficiently made use of at another place, i.e. within his assignment as Liaison Officer, not to speak of his additional time-consuming task of reporter within the scope of duties of Department III. Furthermore; As Liaison Officer with the Army he was under constant observation and could be watched better than if he would have trudged along within the unit of the Sk4a; all the more elucidating and valuable are the unanimous statements by the witnesses to the effect that Von RADETZKY never had anything to do with executions and even less ever was Deputy of the Chief of the Kommando. And thirdly; if Von RADETZKY exercised either as Chief of a Sub-kommando or as Acting Commander of the Sonderkommando or in any other way security police functions within the scope of activities of the Sonderkommando - a situation that, as we know, never materialized - then why was he kept on as Liaison Officer to the Army? One certainly could have assigned him a position of greater responsibility and with better prospects in the Security Police Service, as the witness BENDT, who certainly is an expert in such questions, correctly pointed out. There is yet another question to which one cannot find a sensible answer; why should it have been just Von RADETZKY who was used in executive matters as long as there was a sufficient number of technically trained officers available? Neither in his personality, nor in his training nor in reports of events or similar documents, nor in testimonies do we find an answer to these questions.

One thing, though, is clear and obvious; the defendant Von RADETZKY was only belatedly included among the defendants of this trial on the basis of the affidavit of 6 June 1947 of his former Commander BLOBEL (Doc. NO. 3824, Doc. Bk. I of the Prosecution, Exh. 31) who states therein that among other things W. v. RADETZKY took charge of Sonderkommando 4 a during his absence and that under his direction, too, a number of mass executions took place. witness-stand, to their full extent if concerns Von RADETZKY (Transcript of 29 Oct. 47, p. 1660 ff. German,1622 English.

DR. RATZ: I shall interpolate here that I am skipping the remaining part of this paragraph and I shall continue with the next paragraph. KRAEGE who states in his affidavit he had been (Doc.Bk. III C, No-4765 Exh. 137, p. 30 Engl. p. 47 German) under the impression that v. RADETZKY was Chief of the Verkommando LUCK. Yet with this witness the prosecution experienced no less a mishap than with the witness BLOBEL; before this high Tribunal he termed his "Impression" of the past incorrect and made most valuable and positive statements in defense of Von RADETZKY, which can be summarized that Von RADETZKY at the time in question was engaged in the registration of enemy documents and in reporting, not however in executions. (Examination KRAEGE of 17 Dec. 1947, p. 4319/20, 4322/23 Engl. p. 4403, 4408/9 Germ). established three new theses: 1) the alleged responsibility of Von RADETZKY for the compulsory evacuation of the Poles, an accusation lying absolutely outside the framework of the indictment and which was already repudiated by my previous statements; the alleged illegal drafting of Von RADETZKY into the Sonderkommando on the basis of the Emergency Service Decree.

I have also repudiated this argument previously; 3) the recommendation for promotion by the Reich Security Main Office of 15 October 1942, NO-4771 X, concerning v. RADETZKY in which the following sentence appears: "During the advance in the Summer of 1942 SS-Hauptsturmfuehrer v. RADETZKY was entrusted with the direction of a Telilkommando". I would like to make a brief statement as far as this recommendation of promotion is concerned. First of all I would like to use this document in favor of the defendant. The Reich Security Main Office requests the SS-Personnel Main Office to promote SS-Hauptsturmfuehrer v. RADETZKY. If v. RADETZKY was not under the jurisdiction of the Reich Security main Office, as is unequivocally shown by this request for promotion, then v. RADETZKY was not an officer either in the Security Police or the SD; even in October 1942 he was "a person rendering emergency service without an employment contract", who had received a rank in the Allgemeine SS, as was stated previously, and not by virtue of some position within the sphere of activities of the RSHA. In further consideration of the alleged incrimination of v. RADETZKY by this document I would like to quote the prosecution witness. Albert HARTL, who in his affidavit of 6 January 1948 (Doc. Bk. RADETZKY III, Doc. No. 32) states In this connection:

"I made the acquaintance of v. RADETZKY in Kharkow in the Spring of 1942.

Neither at the time I met him nor later during the Summer RADETZKY was a Teilkommando Leader.

At the time I met him he was also later.

If a Teilkommando v. RADTZKY had existed, I would existence of such a Teilkommando v. RADTZKY during my work with the BDS.

At the time I learned about all the Teilkommandos. If there had been a Teilkommando v. RADETZKY I would remember it with near-certainty."

The prosecution witness Albert HARTL concludes his affidavit with the following words:

"I do not know why the paragraph: "v. RADETZKY was Teilkommando fuehrer in the summer of 1942", was written into the suggestion for Prosecution submits as evidence.

I only know that at times some motion.

Thus I remember for instance the suggestion to give SS (Generalfeldmarschall von BOCK, later Generalfeldmarschall von WEICHS), the War Merit Cross 1st class.

In this suggestion it was consisted solely of his activity as liaison officer". The statement of this witness agrees with the affidavit of Heinz UNGLAUBE, who was in Kiev as supply officer with the Commander of the Security Police and the SD for the Ukraine, with the rank of a Hauptsturmfuehrer from May 1942 to August 1943.

(Document Book RADETZKY III, Doc. No. 33). He states:

"and I can state with absolute certainty that there never existed in the Ukraine a Kommando or Teilkommando by the name of "RADETZKY" during the above period.

Furthermore, I can state for certain at least by name if not personally". UNGLAUBE further says:

"When I am told that a suggestion for promotion of RADETZKY also for promotion.

Such things happened at times." Your Honors! I would like to say in summary: v. RADETZKY was drafted and liable for emergency service, i.e. on the basis of his knowledge of languages he was forcefully removed from his former activity and assigned to a Kommando. He had hardly been instated as an interpreter, when he accepted an activity probably practiced by every army and its retinue, by the neutral duty of registration of documents, and beyond that he devoted himself to the reports made to him about the country and its people. He was immediately forced into a clear and decisive opposition by the Fuehrer Order, of which he heard nothing until he came to Russia, and his further progress in the Kommando was nothing else but a carrying out of this order, which his conscience induced him to oppose. On the witness stand, v. RADETZKY gave a candid and detailed report of his course. What he said nothing about was the spiritual suffering he experienced. On the other hand, he opposed it with whatever means were at his command in his situation. He soon succeeded in having himself removed from the Kommando and in changing over to the position of a liaison officer, a position which, as is well known, is endowed with no authority over anyone. However, he was not satisfied with this, and directly and indirectly attempted to intervene wherever this seemed possible and sensible, as for instance in Luck or in the case of his intercession when the Waffen-SS Company, which was originally assigned to the Kommando, was relieved. v. RADETZKY was a lone wolf in the Kommando and was not at ease there, as the witnesses freely stated in the affidavits submitted, members of the Vehrmacht have further testified that they knew that v. RADETZKY wanted to leave the Kommando and tried to achieve this by connections with the Vehrmacht v. RADETZKY's attitude was also known by the outside and he had already placed himself in a very risky situation. If he did not take the final step, i,e. open opposition with all its attendant consequences, and by that I mean imprisonment in a concentration camp with no prospect of ever regaining his freedom, this happened because he had nothing directly to do with carrying out given orders:

in retrospect, one cannot in all fairness demand this of him today. In the course of the presentation of evidence, I have demonstrated that v. RADETZKY was only a nominal SS-Fuehrer and that he was not amember of the RSHA or one of the offices under it, and that he was never fully recognized. This was his position within the Kommando, in which he had no support and no influence of any sort. If v. RADETZKY had held the position ascribed to him by the Prosecution, this would have to have been expressed in one way or another in the documents. He would not have been secretly given the fictitious activity of a Teilkommandofuehrer in his last mention for promotion, if he had actually held the position of a deputy or a department chief. He certainly would have shown a different official development than was actually the case. We know that until the end he was employed only in subordinate or secondary positions. I have already explained why the defendant has even been put in the dock, why he of all persons was chosen from among the hundreds of SS-Fuehrers and thousands of members of the Einsatzgruppe. On the basis of the BLOBEL affidavit, the Prosecution could not assume anything else but that v. RADETZKY was actually active in this sense; thereupon they held v. RADETZKY responsible for a series of actions in which they supposed he had participated. Their surmise was completely refuted by BLOBEL's authentic disavowal on the witness stand and by the entire presentation of evidence. To be sure, BLOBEL neglected to say who actually represented him; but even that, I believe, has now been cleared up beyond a shadow of a doubt. v. RADETZKY's defense was made especially difficult from the beginning by the fact that he had no friends and no correspondents available from the period of his assignment to the East. Luck was kind to us, however, and helped us find an unexpected number of witnesses who were willing and in a position to confirm under oath everything v. RADETZKY himself had said concerning his activity and his conduct in the Last in all points and for all periods of time which came into consideration for us.

However, on the other hand, it is a lamentable fact that no other human community can mourn so many losses as the Baltic German ethnic group which was resettled at the beginning of the war, so that in spite of everything, many important witnesses were still not available. In addition to this, the six members of the defendant's family managed to save only their lives and nothing else when they fled from the East, so that important documents of the defendant could no longer be obtained. However, as I said, I have succeeded in suite of this in presenting complete proof for the activity of the defendant in the East, which is contained in 35 statements under oath and which refutes in detail the charges of the Prosecution, while confirming the statements of the defendant. Today there can not be the slightest doubt concerning that which I was able to say even in my Opening Statement to the court, that v. RADETZKY was not involved in any criminal act. Still another glance at the character of the defendant: He gave freely of his assistance to poor, afflicted people whenever they asked for his aid, without considering him elf; above all, until the end of the war, he rendered such extensive help to political and racial persecutees in the Baltic German Immigrant Advisory Office that he exposed himself to serious personal danger. After the surrender, he turned his energies to a broad program of re-education in the internment camp, and here again he proved that he not only wanted to wait until justice showed him his furure position; he helped people discover a place in the newly developing order, so that they could again become useful members of society.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Ratz, I have had a chance to glance at this and I notice that in the last paragraph of this summation there appears a sentence which I cannot believe you sincerely mean. I want you to look at this before you read it and see if there is a sentence in that last paragraph that you would want to omit.

DR. RATZ: You mean, Your Honor, the sentence immediately before the end?

THE PRESIDENT: Yes.

DR. RATZ: Then I can only imagine, Your Honor, that you mean the two sentences before the last.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, that's up to you. You have the paragraph before you and this should strike you in the eye as being a very improper statement. If it doesn't strike you, then we will have to call it to your attention, but it should certainly he very obvious to you that that is no remark to make in court, so I will leave it up to you whether you want to read it or not.

DR. RATZ: Your Honor, I can only understand through interpretation that it does not correspond to the German, that the translation does not correspond to the German phrasing, because in the German form it is completely all right, but I shall omit these two sentences. I believe that as such there should be no misgivings according to the German version.

THE PRESIDENT: You know that this Tribunal is here to do justice and justice alone.

DR. RATZ: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal is interested only in ascertaining the truth, and certainly the statement as it appears in English cannot be accepted.

DR. RATZ: I can only say, Your Honors, that I never had any other opinion and that not even remotely did I want to say anything else. It thus can only be a translation which does not give the sense of the original, but I shall omit these two sentences, and I would ask you to believe that not even remotely did I have in mind to say anything which would not find the approval of the Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed.

DR. RATZ: In conclusion I would like to state:

cerning the question of v. RADETZKY's criminal participation in the crimes which took place; he did not voluntarily enter upon this course and did not for one moment voluntarily pursue it; did nothing, abetted nothing and agreed to nothing of anything which is under indictrment here. What the defendant v. RADETZKY did and what he proclaimed to be his thoughts and feelings was nothing but opposition and refusal, and clearly recognizable evasion to the very Unit of what could be expected with regard to what his conscience had forbidden him to do. I shall withdraw the next two sentences. Therefore, I can ask with complete confidence for the acquittal of the defendant v. RADETZKY?

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will now recess until 8:30 this evening when it will hear the final plea in behalf of the Defendant Haensch. We presume that counsel will be here at that time and we repeat what we said today: that such statements as are ready, that is, the defendants' final statements, will be taken to Room 106 as soon as possible. defendant or a counsel may be excused from this evening's session, if the proper motion is made to the Tribunal.

DR. RATZ (ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENDANT VON RADETZKY): Your Honors. I ask that the Defendant von Radetzky be excused from this evening's session in order to prepare his final statement.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, the Defendant von Radetzky will be excused from attendance in court this evening.

MR. GLANCY: Your Honors, I see one of the other defendants is interested in being excused. Perhaps his request can be made by one of the defense counsel now present, if the men in the dock would so indicate.

THE PRESIDENT: That is the Defendant Ruehl. Would you like to be excused this evening?

THE DEFENDANT RUEHL: Yes, if Your Honors please.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant Ruehl will be excused from attendance in court this evening so that he may work on his final statement.

this time prepared their final statements or will have then ready, at the very latest at nine o'clock tomorrow morning so that the necessary translations may be made.

The Tribunal will now be in recess until this evening at 8:30.

(A recess was taken until 2030 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: You may proceed.

DR. KRAUSE: Dr. Drause for the defendant Haensch. Your Honor, the defendant Haensch, together with all other defendants in the case, has been accused of having committed three different offenses: Crimes against humanity, war-crimes and membership in organizations declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal. The first two counts are closely linked to each other as they both refer to the same fact i.e. the activity of the defendant as a leader of the Sonderkommando IV b, I shall, therefore, deal with this matter in the first part of this plea and in the second part with those accusations which refer to the defendant's membership in the SD and the SS. Document In the garrison strength roster of the report Book IIA of the of events No. 156 of 16 January 1942, the defendant Prosecution, is mentioned for the first time as the leader of P. 61 Doc. However, Doc. Book The defendant himself has always given the IIIC of Prosecution, p. 54 middle of March 1943 as the date of his taking-over Doc. No. No-4567 Exh. No. 140 of command, even in his affidavit of 21 July 1942 transcript According to this, although he was already appointed p. 3273 ff.

12 Feb 1948_E_26_1_ MSD_ Arminger (Juelich) his first letter from Russia, about their trip. There he mentioned that they, i.e. he and the defendant, stopped for some days both in Lemberg and in Kiew, and that following the journey by train they had covered another long distance by car. Considering that they were traveling during that winter. which was extraordinarily cold even by Russian standards, which already at that time almost brought German military operations in the East to a standstill, and that the transportation difficulties, which already in Remberg caused an interruption of the journey lasting several days, which grew in proportion as they approached the front-lines, then it becomes clear that the whole journey must actually have taken not only days but weeks. Unfortunately no witnesses are now available who could testify directly as to the time when the defendant finally joined the Kommando. But on the witness stand the co-defendant V. Radetzky stated the time when Obersturmbannfuehrer, Dr. Erwin Weinmann, joined the Sonderkommando IVa in Kharkov. This happened in the middle of March. The defendant must have also reached his destination about the same time. (German transcript p. 4321 and following) that Dr. Erwin Weinmann had been on active duty already since 13 January 1942, (Prosecution document No. NO-3251) These efforts were, however, unsuccessful.

The letter submitted by the Prosecution from the SS Main Personnel Office to the Reich Ministry of the Interior, dated 21 November 1942, concerning the release of the Oberburgermaster of Tuebinger has no probative value since it is based on mistaken identity. According to the inquiry which I made by wire to the municipal administration of Tuebingen on 22 January 1948, and according to the information given to me in the telegraphic answer dated 23 January 1948, not Dr. Erwin Weinmann but a Dr. Ernst Weinmann (the family name "Einmann" contained in the second wire is a typing error) holds the office of Oberbuergermeister. This is confirmed 12 Feb 1948_E_MSD_26_2_Arminger (Juelich) also by the affidavit of Professor Wilhelm Gieseler, dated 28 January 1943, interpol to which I shall still hand in, who at that time was Ratsherr of Tuebingen.

The Oberbuergermeister, Dr. Ernst Weinmann, is a brother of Dr. Erwin Weinmann, the person referred to. (Haensch Doc. Book IV pp. 1 and 2 Doc. No. 29 and 30 Exh. No. 31 and 32) I admit that it is probable that Dr. Erwin Weinmann already received his order of transfer in January 1942 like the defendant.

But he did not actually take over the Kommando until the middle of March 1942. transfer a more or less prolonged period elapsed before the person concerned actually entered upon duty. Thus, e.g. the co-defendant Biberstein on the witness stand stated that he did not join his Kommando until 18 September 1942 although the appointment as leader of the Kommando dates back to 14 July 1942. Another similar case is that of the Defendant Braune. Martenz, dated 23 October and wO November 1947 are of importance. Martenz was attached to the Sonderkommando IVb as investigator during the term of service of the defendant, but also already under his predecessor Braune. (Haensch Doc. Book I, p. 15 and II, p. 1 Doc. No. 12 and 16 Exhibits No. 15 and 19) As he explains in the period from February till May 1942 he was detailed for a skiing course. When he left the Kommando at the beginning of February 1942, Braune was still leader of the Kommando but was at that time away on leave returning from this leave to join the Kommando in the middle of February. Interpolate: Martenz met him in Kiev on that occasion. also thereby been confirmed. Not until his return from the skiing course at the beginning of May did Martenz find that in the meantime the defendant had become leader of the Kommando.

12 Feb 1948_E_MSD_26_3_Arminger (Juelich) the command of the Sonderkommando VI b until 15 March 1942. The erroneous statement in the garrison strength roster of report of events No. 156, dated 16 January 1942, which losts both the defendant and Dr. Weinmann as Kommando leaders already at that time, can be explained simply by the fact that the report office of the RSHA which made up the reports of events used the dates of the orders of transfer as a basis. again terminated. (Haensch Doc. Book I, p.8, Doc. No. 6 Exhibit No. 10) This appears from the submitted army postcard which the defendant sent to his wife on 17 June 1942. Therein he says that he had just been ordered by radiogram back to Berlin but that for offiical reasons he could not leave until 24 June 1942. Further a telegram from Sturmbannfuehrer Braune, dated 24 June 1942, has been submitted to the Tribunal as evidence, in which Braune once more informs the defendant's wife that her husband had been ordered to return, asking her to be in Berlin again 27 June 1942 on. This also proves the accuracy of the statements of the defendant concerning the date of his return from the Kommando. (Haensch Doc. Book I, p. 9, Doc. No. 7 Exhibit No. 11.) 1942, however, the defendant was not constantly with the Kommando either at first. In April 1942, he was in Kiew on official business for several days. Then at the end of April 1942 he was ordered to a meeting in Prague, from which he did not return until the last third of May. In Prague the defendant and the co-defendant Schulz met each other, as was definitely as confirmed by the latter. The defendant combined this official trip with a visit to his wife in Berlin which lasted several days. In Prague he visited Frau Marie Krueger-Martius, the sister-in-law of Lisa Kruegger-Martius, already mentioned. In this connection I once more refer to the affidavits of Lisa Krueger-Martinus and Frau Erika Coulon, dated 2 November and 24 November 1947, as well as to the affidavit of Frau Marie Krueger 12 Feb 1948_E_MSD_26_4_Arminger (Juelich) Martius and Frau Erika Coulon, dated 2 November and 24 November 1947, as well as to the affidavit of Frau Marie Krueger-Martius, dated 16 October 1947.

the command of the defendant, the garrison strength roster in the reports of events, on which again the Prosecution founds its charges, to a certain extent also represents a false picture. Up to and including report No. 190, dated 8 April 1942, the garrison locations of Sonderkommando IV b are given as follows: (Prosecution Doc. Book II D, p. 1. Doc. No. NO-3359, Exhibit No. 84) Kramatorskaja with detachments in Shitomir, Rovno, Winnica. Then in subsequent reports, starting with No. 191, dated 10 April 1942, only Gorlowka is listed as a garrison. (Prosecution Doc. Book III A, p. 74, Doc. No. NO-3256Exh. No.) Kommandoo the Kommando with its staff was actually in Gorlowka. For this report of events No. 183, dated 20 March 1942, contains irrefutable proof. The garrison strength roster of this report states, it is true, that the garrisons hitherto reported were not changed. (Prosecution Doc. Book III A, p. 80 Doc. No. NO-3234 Exhibit No. 108) This should then mean with respect to Sonderkommando IV b that the Hauptkommando was still located in Krammtorskaja. However, the text of the report reads: "As reported by Sonderkommando IV b, Gorlowka, ...". It is indicative of the unreliability of the garrison strength roster in the beginning of the reports of events that the persons preparing the reports do not notice this error in the garrison strength roster, of report of events No. 183, dated 20 March 1942, but allowed it to be repeated 6 times until finally correcting in report of events. No 191, dated 10 April 1942, which, as already mentioned, for the first 12 Feb 1948_E_MSD_26_5_Arminger (Juelich) time lists Gerlowka as a garrison.

If based hereon it can be maintained that the lists given in the garrison strength roster of the reports of events are not correct for the Hauptkommando, this applies still more to the Teilkommandos. In no period of the term of command of the defendant were any detachments of Sonderkommando IV b stationed in Shitomir, Rowno and Winnica. But such Teilkommandos were located in Artemovsk, Kramatorskaja, and finally also in Barvenskova. All these places, including Gorlowka, are located in the area between Slaviansk and Stalino directly on the Eastern border of the Ukraine in the Donez district, whereas Shitomir, Rowne, and Winnica are on the western border of the Ukraine, Rowne even in former Polish territory. to no less than between 700 and 900 kilometers in a straight line, shows that Sonderkommando IV b at that time could not possibly have had anything to do with Shitomir, Rowno, and Winnica. As Sonderkommando advancing together with the combat troops, the Kommando had exclusively security tasks in the front lines and was therefore never used in any other place than in the operational area of the army. This appears from the defendant's own statements as well as from all reports in which the Sonderkommando IV b is in any way referred to. I refer once more to report of events No. 183, dated 20 March 1942, in which the proximity of the front is expressly mentioned. (Prosecution Doc. Book III A, p. 80. Doc. No. NO-3288 Exhibit No. 108) before the Tribunal. (Transcript p. 2914 ff.) In the spring of 1942, Hartl was deputy consultant of personnel matters with Einsatzgruppe C in Kiew, and therefore familiar with the assignments of the various groups. Even though he cannot recall now the exact limitations of the area under the command of Sonderkommando IV b, he still remembers with certainty that the Kommando was operating in the industrial area of Southern Russia, i.e. in the Donez River Valley. But this is something quite different from the territory of Western Ukraine around 12 Feb 1948_E_MSD_26_6_Arminger (Juelich) Shitomir, Rowne, and Winnica.

never at all garrisones in these towns. (Transcript p. 4096 ff.) According to the statement of the co-defendant Fendler, who belonged to the Kommando from the beginning of the Eastern compaign until 2 October 1941, the Sonderkommando IV b never was in the towns of Shitomir and Rowno, but once stopped in Winnica for 8 or 10 days, leaving the place again in closed formation. At no stage of the advance were detachmentments of the Kommando left behind in any place, nor were they later sent back anywhere. Neither did the Kommando have any other connections with the rear area. This is proved also by the route of the Sonderkommando IV b according to the reports of events preceding report No. 154, dated 12 January 1942, which has for the first time the incorrect location of the alleged Teilkommando. Shitomir, Rowne, and Wihnica, was already under civil administration when the defendant arrived in Russia. (Prosecution Doc. Book III A p. 63, Doc. No. NO-4533 Exhibit No. 107) E.g. report of events No. 168, dated 13 February 1942, already lists separate commanders of the Security Police and the SD for Rowne and Shitomir respectively. I interpoltate: namely Dr. Putz and Dr. Ratze Berger. As soon as a certain district of the occupied territory was turned over to civil administration, all activities of the Einsatz-and Sonderkommandos were suspended, as explained by the co-defendant Ohlendorf, since the security duties were then taken over by the local police offices. Shitomir, Rowne and Winnica, which however, was never actually the case, their activity had to be concluded in February 1942 at the latest. (Transcript page 594 ff.) explained if one studies the report of events No. 129 of 5 November 12 Feb 1948_E_MSE_26_7_Arminger (Juelich) 1941 and those of subsequent dates.

In these reports the Teilkommandos in Shitomir, Rowno and Winnica are surprisingly enough referred to as such of EK V and even under exactly the same designation. This makes it clear that they belonged to the forces of EK V and not to those of the SK IV b. This statement is further substantiated by the fact that the garrison of EK V has located at Kiew. The Teilkommandos in Shitomir. Rowno and Winnica were therefore situated in its area of authority. Therefore, this is an obvious mistake. (Porseuction document book II D, page 8 No. NO-3159 Exhibit No. 85) Starting with report of events No. 154, of 12 January 1942, EKV is no longer mentioned in the garrison strength Roster.

It had been abolished in the course of the establishment of the Civil Administration. It is therefore not likely that the Teilkommandos stationed even to the West of Kiew should have remained activated after this date. They must have been affected too by the deactivation and were mentioned for a time as still being with the SK IV b only on account of an error of the reporting office, until also this mistake in the garrison strength rosters had finally been corrected in the report of events No. 191 of 10 April 1942. (Prosecution document book II A page 113 No. NO-3278 Exhibit No. 51) jurisdictional areas, therefore amounts to the following, that is, that SK IV b was only operating in the east Ukrainian sector at the time the defendant was there, which sector is marked by the towns of Gorlowka, Artemowsk, and Krmatorskoja and Barwenkowa.

C. The Activity Itself. questions concerning the Kommando period and the Kommando spheres, I turn now to the individual events with which the defendant, in his capacity as leader of SK IV b, has been charged.

12 Feb 1948_E_MSD_26_8_Arminger (Juelich)

1.) The prosecution submitted as evidence for the alleged criminal activity of the defendant in Russia, first of all the report of events No. 173, of 25 February 1942. This report states:

"Through the Sonderkommando IV b, 861 summary shootings were carried out during the time of 14 January to 12 February 1942. Among the victims were 649 political functionaries, 52 saboteurs and partisans and 139 Jews." (Prosecution Document Book I, pg. 118 Document No. NO 3340 exhibit No. 22) because he was at this time, as had been proved, still in Berlin.

2.) Next, the defendant is charged with an action about which the report of events No. 177, of 6 March 1942, mentions the following: (Prosecution document book, p. 65 II C, document No. NO-3240 exhibit No. 80) "Owing to the extremely low temparatures and the snow drifts.

The Police actions were reduced following the lull at the front, which because of the protracted stay of the Kommandos brought about a considerable number of incidents.

Through the Sonderkommando IV b a total of 1317 persons (among them 63 political activities, 30 saboteurs and Partisans and 1224 Jews) were executed. As a result of these measures the community of Artomowsk became free of Jews also." No. 11, made up about 8 weeks later and submitted as a supplement by the prosecution, which stated; the following about this incident:

"In the remaining areas of the Eastern front the task of the Security Police and the SD apart from the actions against individual Jews who were politically or criminally active, consisted in the general parting of larger communitions. Thus in Rakow alone 1500 Jews and in Artemowsk, 1224 Jews were shot, so that these communities are not free of Jews." (Prosecution document book I page 51 document No. NO-2662 exhibit No. 13) 12 Feb 1948_E_MSD_26_9_Arminger (Juelich) above mentioned community Rakow belonged at no time to the area under the command, of SK IV b and that this is also not maintained by the Prosecution, Rakow is situated about 30 kilometers west of Minsk and belonged at that time to the area of the Einsatzgruppe A. Therefore, I must concern myself only with the shootings carried out in Artomowsk.

neither of the two reports quoted. One thing is certain; they must have been carried out before 6 March 1942, the date of report of events No. 177, because otherwise it would have been impossible to mention them in the report. Moreover, the shootings must have been executed before 4 March 1942, because the report winds up with this date. This alone in itself should be sufficient proof that the defendant had no connection with these measures, because he was not yet assigned to this command.

However, the shootings at Artemowsk cannot be determined as having taken place at a certain period. I stress this question because it is significant also for another reason which I shall discuss later on. Obviously the prosecution agrees with me that the events took place prior to 4 March or at least prior to 6 March 1942. On the other hand, the prosecution maintains that the activity and situation report No. 11 mentions the report-period from 1 March until 31 March 1942 and hence infers that the shootings at Artemowsk must have taken place in March 1942. This, however, is a false conclusion. ports represent monthly reports. In order to make a comparison, I request that reference be made to report No. 9 covering the period from 1 February to 28 February 1942. They were intended for the Foreign Office according to the accompanying letters attached to them, and represent a concise summary of the reports of events of the corresponding month. Therefore, the mentioned report period does not prove by any means that the reported events actually took place during this time, but that the reports of events based on the events were drawn up at this period. Both, i.e. the operational - as well as the activity and situation reports, were compiled at the Reich Main Security Office. the actual events and their recording in the report of events, often a period of 6 to 8 weeks elapsed. If, therefore, the report of events No. 177 of 6 March 1942, mention is made of shootings at Artemowsk then this alone, in all probability, infers, that these shootings were carried out not just a few days before but considerably earlier. This becomes a definite fact if one considers the further contents of the report of events No. 177. same report by one concerning the EK V in which it states:

"As a result of the activity of the Einsatzkommando V b, a total of 1880 have been shot; among them political activists, 114 sabo teurs and looters as well as 1580 Jews.

This Kommando also car ried out an operation against members of the Bandera group."

and not even in February 1942. I refer in this connection again to report of events No. 154 of 12 January 1942 and others in which the EK V is no longer mentioned in the garrison strength rosters. Report of events No. 177, of 6 March 1942, concern therefore events which must have taken place prior to the destination of EK V, that is during January 1942 at the latest. port of events No. 189, of 3 April 1942, in the form of a photostat and an excerpt. The text of the excerpt contains only two paragraphs. They read:

"In Shitomir the soldier's cemetary at Cayssin had been desecra ted by persons unknown.

In the course of the subsequent inves Among them were:

1 mentally deranged person." ity of Shitomir, I proved that the SK IV b was never active in this area. The report itself does not mention anything as to who had carried out this measure. I could have been done only by the local Police offices, which had already been established there in February 1942 and which were subordinated to a special command of the Security Police and the SD. I may point out that this commander had also been definitely mentioned in the report of events No. 188, of 1 April 1942, which the prosecution submitted together with report of events No. 189, of 3 April 1942, already dealt with in this connection.

No other security units existed at this time. cribe the further mentioned execution of 434 persons, among them 352 Jews, to the SK IV-b. The submitted excerpt from report of events No. 189, of 3 April 1942, is misleading in that respect. Because it contains only the two paragraphs quoted it is apt to cause the impression that the shooting of 434 persons, including the 352 Jews, also took place in Shitomir. However, the photostat of the entire report gives quite another picture. According to it, the excerpt has been taken from an extensive report of Einsatzkommando C, altogether comprising seven paragraphs. Paragraphs one and two of this summary report concerns Kiew, the third concerns Schepetowka, the fourth concerns Nikelajew, the fifth Illowainschka, and the sixth Shitomir. The seventh and last paragraph then states in conclusion, how many persons had been subjected to special treatment during the time from 28 March to 31 March inclusive, in total i.e. in the entire area of Einsatzgruppe C. however, SK IV b did not participate in all these events, since all the localities quoted were outside of its sphere of activity at that time.

Finally, the report from the occupied Eastern territories, No. 6, dated 6 June 1942, was shown to the defendant. This report contains the following:

"Toward the end of April beginning of May 1942, several exten munists in the Commander's jurisdictional area Gorlowka.

Of the 1,038 persons arrested 727 were given 'special treatment', tivists and NKWD agents."

were carried out in the area of SK IV b but executed by the Wehrmacht and not by SK IV b. The Wehrmacht had reserved for itself the combatting of partisans and similar elements in those areas where extensive measures were necessary, and had organized special units for this purpose. A small Sonderkommando such as SK IV b, with a strength of only seventy men, and which, in addition, was split up into several Teilkommandos in various locations, would never have been able to carry out such operations, since it was not up to a completely organized and armed band simply for the reason that they were outnumbered. Consequently, when the report speaks of several large-scale operations then it can already be established from the very beginning that these operations were conducted by the Wehrmacht. They were mentioned in the reports of the Einsatzgruppen only because the reports of events and the reports from the occupied Eastern territories were supposed to provide as complete a picture as possible of the security measures which had been taken. tions mentioned here only in so far as a few experienced criminal police officials of the Kommando had been requested by the Wehrmacht for their assistance and assigned there in one or two cases. These officials for the length of their assignment were subject to the sole order of the leader of the particular Wehrmacht unit who thereby assumed sole responsibility for their actions. They were never used for executions. because the incidents happened at a time when he was absent from the Kommando temporarily for the second time, namely, on the occasion of his trip to Berlin and Prague. Also, he had nothing to do with the transfer of the officials; rather, this was initiated through his deputy at that time. These events became know to him only from the report which he had received from his deputy following his return from the above-mentioned trip. Also, this report contained information to the effect that a few such Wehrmacht operations had taken place, and this has been substantiated by the defendant on the witness stand.

which could be regarded as a crime. The containing of partisans, members of the Destruction Battalions, saboteurs, and looters is an action permissible according to International Law. I believe I do not have to touch upon this matter further. The report also shows that those persons apprehended were not killed indiscriminately but that only some 75 percent were actually affected by the so-called "special treatment". In other words, the cases were all investigated.

executed there were also a few Communist activists and NKWD agents, then this does by no means mean that these persons had been executed only because of their membership in the Communist Party or belonged to the NKWD without otherwise being particularly incriminated by other facts.

The focal point here rests on the fact, that, as can be clearly seen from the report, these were Communist activists and NKWD agents. These were no innocuous civilians but men who worked for the cause of the Soviets behind the German lines. The offices to which the report was transmitted did not have to be informed in detail as to how and in what nature this activity took place, since the operations of Communist elements, which had taken on active proportions, had long been known. These very persons created the chief danger to the security of the fighting troops since they were the ones who incited the resistance of the civilian population secretly but all the more effectively, and who created and maintained secret communication with the Soviet armed forces and the Soviet leadership.

II. The Activity According to the Statements of the Defendant it charges the defendant with war crimes and crimes against humanity, is completely exhausted. However, this will still require a certain elaboration as to what the defendant himself has stated regarding his activity with the SK IVb. him by Streckenbach, Director of AMT I in the RSHA, as well as by Heydrich, to the effect that he was to be responsible within his area of command for the security of the combat zone according to the directives as issued by the Wehrmacht. The instructions which he received from Thomas, Chief of the Einsatzgruppe C, were identical. An order, the execution of which would have been a crime according to the principles of humanity and according to the recognized rules of war, was never transmitted to him from any quarters.

In addition, up to the time who had been designated as inferior.

I shall return to this point termed as allegedly inferior.

However, at the time the defendant Haensch This was confirmed as well by the witness Martenz, in his affiDoc.Book I, p.15, davit, dated 23 October 1947. With the exception of a few Jewish Doc. In this connection refer to the statements by the Co Spring 1942.

My colleague Durchholz has expressed the same in his final plea for the Co-Defendant Schulz.

Consequently, the de in toto were carried out, that is, two by the main Kommando in Gorlowka, one by the Teilkommando in Artemowsk, and one by the Teilkommando in Berwenkowa.

In each case, these had to do with small groups, in all some 60 parsons. These were exclusively saboteurs, spies, looters, and similar elements who as has been established, had acted unmistakably against the decrees which had been issued and made public for the security of the fighting troops. tions which were carried out by specialists thoroughly trained in criminology -- I interpolate -- and every accused person was given a hearing. The results of the investigations were then written down, the officials in charge of the investigations were then heard again verbally, and thereafter the decision was reached. May I again call particular attention to the fact, in this connection, that the defendant, as a professional lawyer, who had passed his State examination, was capable, according to German law, of holding the office of a judge. This was also true of the Director of the Executive Department. It can make no difference in the evaluation of the trial whether in this connection the defendant functioned formally as a judge or not; in practice, however, he reached his decisions in the only way that this could be expected of a judge. The executive procedure in the SK IVb was, therefore, at the time of the defendant, at least just as legally tenable as a procedure in a court martial, at which persons experienced in criminal law and judges, for the most part, are not to be found. Apart from that, a proceedings had been regulated by the OKW and the OKH, that is, the highest authority, and the defendant had been told not to change this. It was not up to him to change the procedure and to investigate it. that this was initiated, and decided upon by the Wehrmacht. The Wehrmacht had only commissioned the Teilkommando located there with the execution of punishment.

The charges raised against him fendant.

From this he has been suffering, and shall continue to suffer The defendant'smembership in the SD and the SS.

I shall now deal with the part which covers the defendant's contained in the transcript of my Opening Statement.

It is stated therein, that the defendant was a member of the General-SS.

However, this is not correct.

As I shall prove with the following, the de A. Data Concerning the SD Membership

1.) Date of Joining the SD of the SS.

This was in connection with his work as Rats assessor in Daeboln (Saxony). These activities were the reason for interfering in the city administration.

This, in turn, Haensche been a member since 1931, and that he also lost his job with Doc. Bk. I, Pg.10 the city of Daeblen. The above-mentioned facts can be suband 11, Doc. No. stantiated by the findings of the Daebeln Circuit Court of 1 8 and 9, Exh. No. July 1935, and by the affidavit of the former Daebeln Mayor, 12and13.

Arne Nietzsche, of 17 October, 1947, by which the defendant's statements are corroborated.

When the defendant made out the leadership.

At that time he did not know that the SS had and considering such reports, that is, the SD.

He only learned Prosec. Doc. Bk. fendant of his curriculum vitae dated 22 August 1937, which had III C.Pg. 86,Doc.No. been drafted for the personnel files , and in which it is stated 3261, Exh. No. that he had submitted the reports in his capacity as SD Confi141 dential Agent.

From this, the Prosecution thought it could prior to this incident.

However, by this statement, as re in the report he had become a confidential agent for the SD, but he certainly did not intend to show that he had acted in accordance with an already existing SD instruction.

There were no such confidential connections in this sense. Only in this particular case was the defendant working as SD Confidential Agent, but he did not act in that capacity either before or after this incident. by his stand for an orderlycity administration, which was to be protected against arbitrary Party interference, they approached him to take over the office for legal consultation and judicial, matters with the newly activated SD administrative District Chemnitz. The defendant agreed to this, as being an expelled Party member, he had no chances for the time being to receive another appointment. He considered the Chemnitz job only an emergency and transitary solution, as he had decided to follow a civil service career. He joined the Chemnitz SD on 1 august 1935 on the basis of a purelyprivate contract. However, the defendant intended to return to civil service afterhis expulsion from the Party had been rescinded, which he tried to expedite. unexpectedly. The defendant, without submitting a corresponding application, was formally transferred as an Unterscharfuehrer to the SS Special Formation, the SD in 1 May 1936. This did not affect his activities at all. He had still the choice of resigning, as soon as he could return to civil service.

II. His Continued SD Membership. were concluded. The final decision decreed that the defendant's expulsion from the Party was rescinded, and that the defendant was to be punished only by being reprimanded and warned. The Gauleiter of Saxony decreed, in addition to this, that the defendant was not to be appointed to any party office for the duration of three years. Because of this, he was unable to reenter civil service for the same period, as no government authority would have dated to employ a reprimanded Party Member, particularly inconsideration of the unity of Party and State firmly enacted by law, and in contradiction to the intentions as expressed by the Party Leadership.

In spite of that, the defendant had repeatedly tried to reenter government service. However, his efforts were of no avail.

to remain with the SD for an indefinite period, and to wait for the expiration of the ban. On 1 November 1936, he was transferred from Chemnitz to the SD Main Office in Berlin, the predecessor of the future Reich Security Main Office, where he was assigned to take over Personnel Main Department I as special advisor on disciplinary matters. When the Reich Security Main Office was established, his department was incorporated in Department I of the Reich Security Main Office. In order to prove this I refer to the affidavit by Walter Schellenberg of 23 October 1947. Also the testimony of defendants Ott and Sandberger.

war had meanwhile broken out. The defendant was not in a position any longer to resign from his SD job. Even though, this would not have been possible before, especially since he had been permanently employed, without special arrangements being made. The Chief of the Security Police and the SD had prevailed with the Wehrmacht that in case of war the Reich Security Main Office members were to be exclusively under his assignment command. The induction centers made a corresponding special entry in the military passports of Reich Security Main Office members. By virtue of this special power of command, the Chief of the Security Police and the SD demanded that each member of the Reich Security Main Office should remain in his position. He even resorted to the extreme measure by instigating disciplinary action in reply to all release applications for joing the Army. This is shown by the affidavit of Gettfried Klingemann of 30 October 1947, who was the Chief of the Personnel Department for the Reich Security Main Office in 1939. From then on the defendant was really tied down. He was subject to martial law and had to continue his work with the Reich Security Main Office whether he liked it or not. Just as before, it was his task to deal with disciplinary matters within Department I.

assigned to the Eastern Einsatz for a period of approximately three months. Actually he was still a member of Department I, with the sole exception that his particular official duties rested during that period, and after concluding his assignment to the Eastern Einsatz he had no difficulties in returning to his old position. Only this and nothing else was the reason for his missions towards the interrogator Mr. Wartenberg, when he - the defendant - stated that he had been assigned to Russia as special adviser for disciplinary matters. In the statement drafted by Mr. Wartenberg on 8 July 1947, which the defendant did not see until it was submitted during the cross-examination, these, his statements, were found to erreneously formulated, and this is the reason whyc the defendant refused to sign the affidavit which was written down by Mr. Wartenberg based on his erroneous initial draft.

Prosecution Document No. NO-5572, Exhibit No. 187. Reich Security Main Office Departments. If the indictment states to Count III under B,: that he had been also a member of Departments III, VI, and VII, this statement is false. The defendant himself never made any such statement, nor did the Prosecution submit any relevant evidence. This evidence can never be submitted, because it is an irrefutable fact that the defendant was never a member of Departments III, VI, and VII. Here, I want to make a special point that the Prosecution has made a very fundamental mistake. tion before, to resign from the Reich Security Main Office during the war, the defendant tried everything to attain this long-wished for aim, as he felt in his position, which he had been forced to accept in order to tide him over his period of unemployment at that time, and in which he was being retained against his will because of the exegencies of war. This has been substantiated by the affidavits of Herbert Dossier of 23 October 1947, of Lisa Krueger-Mettus of 29 September 1947 and 2 November 1947, of Elisabeth-Charlette Ebeinghaus of 23 October 1947, of Gottfried Klingemann of 30 October 1947, of Erika Coulon of 24 November 1947, and of Frau Charlette Hermstaedt of 31 October 1947.

Frau Hermstaedt was the defendant's secretary in the RSHA and consequently, was particularly well informed of his endeavors in this respect.

In July 1943, the defendant ceased to work for the Reich Security Main Office. After a short informatery orientation the defendant, on 1 September 1943, reported the Office Of the Reich Plenipotentiary in Denmark, where he continued up to the end of the war as Referent in the Main Department Administration and legal matters. This is proved by the Affidavits of Friedrich Stahlmann of 27 October 1947 and 4 December 1947, as well as of Werner Best of 31 October and 26 December 1947. Stalhmann was a senior administration official in the Office of the Reich Plenipotentiary. The Court knows the person of Herr Best.

The defendant's new position was not a transfer by the Reich Security Main Office, but a was an entirely independent assignment. The defendant also ceased to receive his salary from the Reich Security Main Office; he was now paid by the Legation Pay Office of the Foreign Office in Berlin, as is proved by the money order stub of March 1944. Consequently, this transfer from the Reich Security Main Office did not only concern his removal from the personnel roster but also his being cancelled in the pay office recrods.

Otherwise, he had no further contacts with the SD after that time.

Haensch Doc. Bk. II, Pg. 8, Doc. No. 21, Exhibit No. 24.

It most now to be examined as to how the defendant's SD membership should be evaluated in the light of a criminal responsibility. The IMT verdict states that only those SD members belonged to a criminal group, to whom the following three requirements applied:

1.) They were to have occupied a specially defined position

2.) They were to have been SD members before 1 September 1939 This verdict does not show quite clearly which positions the IMT had in mind as regards the first requirement. Of the Reich Security Main Office Department, only Departments III, VI, and VII have been mentioned. Department I, which was the defendant's department, has, therefore, been excluded.

istrative District in Chmenitz cannot be included, because both factually and in organizational matters, this office was headed by Central Department I of the former SD Main Office, the predecessor of Department I in the Reich Security Main Office. to do with the SD. This was a military assignment. The Einsatzkommando and Sonderkommando were military units, which had not been activated solely from SD and Gestapo members, but also by drafting members of the criminal police, the constabulary, the Waffen-SS, and other groups or formations, which have not been declared criminal. This is not the point in question, as all other prerequisites do not apply to the defendant. his own free volition, but was forced to remain in this organization in accordance with the war laws and the regulations which the Chief of the Security Police and the SD had decreed concerning the commitment of members of the Reich Security Main Office in the Wehrmacht. Above all, his assignment to the Kommandos in Russia was not a voluntary act. It was based on the Einsatz order of the Chief of the Security Police and the SD, which if not carried out would have been tantamount to mutiny and would have incurred most severe punishment for the defendants. The defendant could not have been expected to assume this responsibility. As to the question whether this could be expected of the defendant, I refer to the arguments of my colleague Lummert, with whom I fully agree. of the Einsatz and Sonderkommandos, he had absolutely no reason for not taking over the command of SK IV b. He only knew that these Kommandos were assigned in order to obtain the necessary security and order for carrying out the military operations in the occupied area and specifically at the rear of the front lines. Of what was otherwise done by the Einsatz and Sonderkommandos, the defendant had no knowledge and he was other organizations served over and above what they were actually supposed to do.

him no opportunity for finding out about these particular things. The accounts and reports from the Eastern front, from which he could have gained the knowledge, were not accessible to him. As the distribution key in the various reports of events shows, they were sent only to specific groups within specific departments, besides being sent to the department Chiefs. In addition Department I is not even listed. For example, I cite report of events No. 47 of 9 August 1941. even mentioned in the official conferences within department I. In accordance with the express order of Hitler the most rigorous secrecy was maintained before those persons who were not directly concerned with it in their official capacity. From the evidence, the court knows that for the handling of matters pertaining to the Jews, there was even a secret department which was kept completely apart and secluded from the other offices in a separate place to which no one had entrance except those persons employed there. other groups regarded as inferior, were kept from the special advisers for disciplinary matters, apparently with special care. investigation. The disciplinary officials would have lost every standard for judging official lapses on the part of those members of the Security Police and the SD employed in Germany, and would have experienced the most grave internal conflicts if they had learned what was going on in the occupied Eastern territories as performed according to order by the members of these organizations assigned to these territories. The prosecution is obviously of the opinion that the defendant must have connection with his own activity in Russia.

In this connection I must say the following: initiate him into these matters, because, as I have described, he came to an area in which there were no more Jews. Of course, his superiors in the RSHA, Heydrich and Streckenbach and also Thomas, the Chief of Einsatzgruppe C, had exact information about these natters. Therefore, they consciously avoided brining up the subject before him. It can even be assumed that the defendant was ordered to this part of the Eastern front because here he could gain the front-line experience which Himmler required of every member of the RSHA, without coming into contact with things of which he was supposed to know nothing, considering his future activity as special adviser in disciplinary matters. of Jews which had taken place earlier. The last execution of this sort, i.e. the one in Artemowsk, had occurred, not as the prosecution says, a few days before the defendant took over the leadership of the Kommando, but a number of weeks prior to this. In this connection may I refer to the statements I made in the first part of my final plea. Minutes or other written documents were no longer available, therefore, since it was forbidden to keep them. Moreover, may I once again remind you that the staff of SK IV b was not located in Artemowsk, but only a Teilkommando was stationed there. The defendant only visited the latter, lasting perhaps one and a half hours at a time, for purposes of inspection. On these occasions only current matters were discussed. At any rate, neither the predecessor of the defendant, Braune nor the non of the Kommando over uttered a word about the fact that there had been shootings of Jews by SK IV b. resumed his activities as RSHA special adviser for disciplinary matters, the situation was the same as before. The reports of events or, as they were not sent to department I, and their contents were otherwise kept strictly secret.

The practical effects of the handling of the racial problem was a matter concerning which the little man on the street knew much more than the officials in the RSHA who were not directly connected defendant knew nothing of the persecution of Jews also explain why he did not know anything about the Fuehrer order, which was supposed to have been the basis for these measures. He did not need to be familiar with this order in order to perform his tasks as Fuehrer of SK IV b, since at his time it no longer had any significance in the Kommando areas.

Knowledge of such an order, however, would have had nothing less than a tragic effect for the activities of the defendant as RSHA special adviser for disciplinary matters.

III. The question of the defendant's participation in criminal also had he personal connection of any sort with crimes against humanity and war crimes, neither as a perpetrator nor as a participant. the defendant constantly conducted himself as can only be expected of a humane and just man. As Kommandofuehrer in the East, he saw to it that no one was persecuted without cause and that the civilian population of the occupied territory was spared unnecessary oppression. The affidavit of Hans Steinwede, of 22 December 1947, to cite only this one example, proves how he was regarded as a special advisor for disciplinary matters. Steinwede's error with regard to the defendant's authority in department I of the RSHA has been corrected by the affidavit submitted by the codefendant, Erwin Schulz, of 12 January 1948. an assistant judge, an assessor, of the Gestapo in Berlin, and he had him punished because he had maltreated a Jew. Reich Plenipotentiary in Denmark is of particular significance in this connection. Of course, these activities have nothing further to do with his membership in the SD, but they demonstrate the over-all personal conduct of the defendant with penetrating distinctness. There the defendant intervened in every possible way for a compromise between the interests of the German Wehrmacht and the concerns of the Danish civilian population, including the American and English citizens interned in Denmark, and in numerous cases where there were indications of undue severity, he interceded in a helpful manner, in direct and shart contrast to the German police.

I will not go into the multitude of details here, but will refer to the affidavits of Friedrich Stalmann, of 4 November and 4 December 1947, and of Werner Best, of 31 October and 26 December 1947. praisal of the character of the defendant. The same applies to the affidavits of Elizabeth Charlotte Ebbinghaus, of 23 October 1947, Frau Lisa Krueger-Martius, of 29 September and 2 November 1947, of Frau MariaKrueger-Martius, of 16 October 1947, of Frau Erika Coulon, of 24 November 1947, and of Frau Charlotte Harmstaedt, of 21 October 1947. I would also like to call the attention of the court to these.

C. Closing comment to Part II. not guilty on count III of the indictment.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will now be in recess until tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock, and tomorrow's session will take place in Courtroom No. 1.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 13 February 1948, at 0930 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: The Honorable, the Judges of Military Tribunal II.

PRESIDENT: Some time ago'several weeks ago the Tribunal discussed with counsel of both sides the order of presentation of the final pleas or summations. Several of defense counsel were of the impression that they were entitled to the final word. We indicated at the time, and we repeat today that the order of the presentation is not of paramount importance. After all, it is the substance of the speech and not the order in which it is heard which determines just how much it helps to elucidate the issued involved. In Anglo-American procedure the prosecution invariably terminates the argument because the prosecution has the burden of proof. We decided that the prosecution would make the final speech in this case, not so much because of the burden it must sustain, but because of the physical and mechanical difficulties with which it was confronted and which were more numerous than those which confronted defense counsel. Nonetheless, although the prosecution will have the final speech in this case, defense counsel will still be allowed an opportunity to make further remarks. In keeping with the policy which has been demonstrated rather repetitiously throughout this trial and which perhaps sometimes it has been demonstrated we fear to the annoyance of the prosecution, we allow the defense every possible latitude in the presentation of arguments or of evidence which they believe are of importance in the defense. Thus, after the prosecution will have completed its final speech this morning, such of defense counsel who believe that they should reply to what is new in the prosecution's final utterance will be permitted to make those extemporaneous remarks. We will insist that these extemporaneous remarks be addressed only to what is new in the argument presented by prosecution counsel and not merely be a duplicate of some argument which has already been made by defense counsel in final statement or summation already delivered.

We will now hear from the prosecution.

GENERAL TAYLOR: May it please the Tribunal. dence in support of the indictment which has been brought against these defendants. On 30 September, 136 days ago, the prosecution rested its ease. In view of the nature of the crimes charged here, and the conclusive documentary proof in support thereof, the desperate nonsense which has been chattered during the twenty-one intervening weeks may jar the ear but it can hardly surprise the mind. week for each defendant the prosecution sees not the slightest necessity for or benefit from a tedious rehearsal of the details of the record. We are filing briefs summarizing the evidence against each individual defendant. In this oral statement, we will confine ourselves to the very few general matters raised by the defense which warrant a few words. briefly what the prosecution's evidence showed with respect to the organized program of murder of which these men are the chief surviving executors. It is only too well known that anti-semitism was a cardinal point of Nazi ideology. Throughout the early years of the Third Reich, the Jews of Germany were subjected to ever more severe restrictions, persecutions, and barbarities, and by 1939 life in Germany was all but intolerable for them. The war presented Himmler and Heydrich with what, to them, was a golden opportunity to carry these doctrines to their logical and terrible conclusion--the extermination of all Jews in Germany and in the countries overrun by the Wehrmacht. But practical problems soon cropped up. No one, at least for centuries, had ever tried to eradicate an entire antional and racial group, and it rapidly became apparent that such a project was.....

PRESIDENT: General Taylor, I suggest that you speak a little more slowly for the benefit of the interpreter.

GENERAL TAYLOR: ...an ambitious undertaking which required time and money and manpower and planning! With the invasion of the Soviet Union, the project was put on a really systematic footing. the most part, the approximately 3,000 members of the four so-called "Einsatzgruppen" of the SS, whose leading members are indicted here. The members of these units were carefully instructed as to their mission by Heydrich himself. Their general task was to insure the "political security" of the conquered territories in Russia, and as part of this function they were directed to exterminate all Jews, Gypsies, government officials, Communist party leaders, and other so-called "undesirable elements" in their assigned territories. With the support of the Army leaders, this program was faithfully carried out, and resulted in the murder of at least a million Jews and other human beings during the first two years of the Russian campaign. The defendants have not seriously endeavored to controvert these facts, which conclusively prove the crimes of genocide and the other war crimes and crimes against humanity charged in the indictment. Nor, with a few exceptions as to precise dates -- for the most part insignificant -- have the defendants attempted to contradict the clear proof that they commanded or were otherwise connected the Einsatzgruppen as charged in the indictment. All of the foregoing is clearly established by the documents introduced by the prosecution, consisting chiefly of the defendants' own reports of their activities. escape the damning effect of the conclusive proof afforded by their own records? Only a few of them have been so utterly foolish as to deny that they knew that the Einsatzgruppen had been directed to kill Jews and government officials as described above, or that such executions indeed took place, and in the face of the proof, such a defense is, preposterous.

These defendants who were in charge of these units at the outset of the Russian campaign received instructions which were terribly clear. Those who came in later learned about it from their superiors and predecessors. Mass executions of Jews by the Einsatzgruppen took place in all sectors of the Russian front. We may well believe that the members of the Einsatzgruppen were brutalized by what they did and what they saw being done around them, but they did not become so blase as to carry out these mass executions without even talking about it among themselves. The subject matter of this proceeding is horrible, but it is hardly boring. And furthermore, quite apart from the inherent incredibility of this defense, it is easy to see why very few of the defendants have ventured to put it forth. Most of the defendants have relied upon the so-called defense of "superior orders", and if no order was given to kill Jews and others, or if such an order was not perfectly well-known to all the members of the Einsatzgruppen, then of course the defense that these executions were committed under the compulsion of such an order can not be made. In any event, the very idea that the defendants did not know of both the order and of the executions is so ridiculous that we have already dignified it overmuch.

various times during the trial which deserve some comment. Some of the defendants have sought refuge in the contention that they as individuals did not take an active or direct part in the actual executions, but were primarily concerned with administrative matters or other phases of the operations of the Einsatzgruppen. Other defendants claim that the units under their command did not carry out the order for the killing of Jews and Gypsies and Government Officials, and other undesirables. With respect to reports showing that their units did in fact execute large numbers of people, the excuse is given that the victims were either proven criminals or were all executed by way of reprisal in the course of the anti-partisan warfare being waged behind the front in Russia. And the third point - made by numerous defendants - is that they acted under the compulsion of "superior orders". we will, shortly, make a few observations on what effect, if any, a few of the defendants - most notably the defendant Ohlendorf - have advanced as a defense the very motives which led them to commit these murders; they have bluntly taken the position that under the circumstances which confronted them, the killing of all Jews - even Jewish children - was a necessary and proper part of warfare. This sinister doctrine we will deal with in conclusion. available, conclusive, and susceptible of very brief statement. We do not propose now to examine the evidence, or the application of these arguments, with respect to each of the individual defendants; that has been done in the written briefs which we have filed or are filing with the Tribunal, we have no desire to protract the trial on this, its last day, by laboring the obvious or burdening the transcript with a detailed refutation of flimsy and desperate contentions.

Some of them - for example, Jost and Naumann, and Blobel - were the commanders or deputy commanders of the Einsatzgruppen or their subordinate units the Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos, with slightly greater plausibility. Thus the argument has also been put forth by the lower ranking defendants - such as Ruehl, Schubert and Graf - who were officers and staff members, but not in command of these units. participate directly , the elementary principle must be borne in mind that, neither under Control Council Law no. 10 nor under any known system of criminal law, is guilt for murder confined to the man who pulls the trigger or buries the corpse. In line with recognized principles common to all civilized legal systems, paragraph 2 of article II of Control Council Law No. 10 specifies a number of types of connection with crime which are sufficient to establish guilt. Thus, not only are principals guilty but also accessories, those who take a consenting part in the commission of crime or are connected with plans or enterprises involved in its commission, those who order or abet crime, and those who belong to an organization or group engaged in the commission of crime. These provisions embody no harsh or novel principles of criminal responsibility, and a moment's reflection on their meaning will indicate how inadequate is the defense which we are now considering. matters which they affirm establish that their responsibility is, in fact, deeper than that of some of the other defendants. It is, of course, highly probable that these defendants did not, at least very often, participate personally in executions. And it would indeed be strange had they done so. Not even a regimental or battalion commander in battle spends much of his time personally shooting a gun -- it is his task to organize and direct the shooting by the men who serve under him.

And when these defendants tell us that they were chiefly engaged in "administrative work" this means only that they were engaged in the general management and direction of the work of the Einsatz units which they commanded. The "administrative work" which these top leaders and their immediate staffs performed at times - as in the case of Jost -- included such interesting tasks as the ordering of additional gas vans to be utilized for mass exterminations. But such items like that one are colorful rather than necessary to establish guilt. We are not aware that General Yamashita, with his own hand, took the life of anyone in the Phillipines, and surely General Anton Dostler did not serve as a member of the firing squad which shot down the fifteen American commandos who had been taken prisoner in Italy. waking hours to the extermination of Jews. The Einsatzgruppen had a general mission of which these executions were a very important part, but they did have some other things to do. We are quite prepared to believe that the defendants spent some of their time writing general reports to the RSHA and to the military intelligence officers, and that they at times scrutinized captured documents, in pursuit of what the defendant Six was plased to call "cultural objectives". Often, as the defendant Klingelhoefer conceded, the purpose of the documentary research was to identify intended victims of Einsatz executions. But, in any event, these circumstances are no more important than the conceded fact that the defendants had to take time out to eat and sleep in order to carry on. So far from being a defense or even a circumstance in mitigation, the fact that defendants like Naumann did not personally shoot a great many people, but rather devoted themselves to directing the overall operations of the Einsatzgruppen, only serves to establish their deeper responsibility for the crimes of the men under their command. such as Radetzky and Ruehl, and Schubert and Graf. It is a little different, but not much.

Even though these men were not in command, they can not escape the fact that they were members of Einsatz units whose express mission, well known to all the members, was to carry out a large scale program of murder. Any member who assisted in enabling these units to function, knowing what was afoot, is guilty of the crimes committed by the unit. The cook in the galley of a pirate ship does not escape the yardarm merely because he himself does not brandish a cutlass. The man who stands at the door of a bank and scans the environs may appear to be the most peaceable of citizens, but if his purpose is to warn his robber confederates inside the bank of the approach of the police, his guilt is clear enough. And if we assume, for the purposes of argument, that the defendants such as Schubert and Graf have succeeded in establishing that their role was an auxiliary one, they are still in no better position than the cook or the robbers watchman. group of defendants - including Schulz, Blobel, Sandberger, Steimle, Haensch and Nosske -- have claimed that they did not carry out the order. And they say that executions reported by units under their command are justified on the basis that the victims were in all cases partisans, or that they were executed in reprisal for attacks by partisans, or were proven criminals. their contention is palpably false even at first glance. Blobel, for example, was in command of Sonderkommando 4 a of Einsatzgruppe C when his unit entered the Russian city of Kiev. This ancient city had not seen such carnage since its destruction by the Monguls centuries before. As the records show, Blobel's unit killed 35,000 people in Kiev in two days, and 60,000 over the course of six months. Schulz's Einsatzkommando 5 killed 12,000 people during the six weeks of his command . Sandberger's Einsatzkommando I A of Einsatzgruppe A killed 14,500 people, including according to one report, 1,158 "Jews and Communists" at one fell swoop.

And even as to the other defendants whose recorded murders do not run to five figures, nevertheless the number of executions reported is still more than ample - particularly in view of the established pattern and purpose of Einsatzgruppen activities -- to compel the inference that these executions were certainly not all undertaken solely against partisans or by way of reprisal. the situation of the defendants is not much the better for our charity. In thus exculpating themselves under Count One of the Indictment, they have simultaneously inculpated themselves under Count Two, which charges atrocities and offenses against the laws of war, including the murder and ill-treatment of the civilian population of occupied countries. As a most eminent authority on international law has pointed out, "a war crime does not cease to be such for the reason that it is committed under the guise of reprisals". extreme as reprisals, which can be taken only when an unlawful act of warfare has first been committed by the other side. Counter-action can only be taken as a last resort, and the sole purpose of reprisals is to discourage the continuance of unlawful acts of warfare by the enemy. Reprisals may never exceed the degree of violence of the acts which they seek to stop, or the degree reasonably necessary to accomplish this purpose. by the Einsatz units never conformed with the requirements laid down by the laws of war. So far from being measures of retaliation for unlawful acts of warfare by the Russians, they were carefully planned in advance long before Germany launched the attach which began the war. Furthermore, nothing is more clearly established by the laws of war than that no surrendered combatant - whether he is a partisan, spy, or guerrilla - and no civilian may be executed without the benefit of a court-martial or military court trial to determine his guilt.

This was well known to each defendant and is written in the pay book of every German soldier. The defendants have not even pretended that this requirement was fulfilled. If we had applied to these defendants the kind of law which they administered prior to the executions they carried out, this trial would have ended the day before it began.

In arguing that the victims of the Einsatz executions were "partisans" the defendants become enmeshed in a hopeless mase of contradictions and confusions. If their own records show that the victims were Jews, they reply that all Jews were partisans. If the records show the executions of partisans, the they are asked how they knew that the victims were partisans, they reply that they must have been partisans because they had been ascertained to be Jews. This, of course, is flatly contradictory to the argument advanced by Jodl, the defendant before the IMT, who assured us that "there were enxt to no Jews among the partisans. In the main, these partisans were fanatic, steelhard Russian fighters, mostly white Russians."1 "cultural research", but the Judicial process, however summary, was not part of the activity of the Einsatzgruppen. As the defendant Klingelhoefer finally admitted on cross-examination, "whether or not the Jews had violated any order, whether they left or stayed in the ghetto, and whether or not they contacted the partisans, they were all killed".2 And the defendant Blume admitted that interrogations were not held in order to determine guilt or innocence, but to obtain information, and that the interrogation was always followed by the death of the subject.3 Having noted these admissions which, revealing as they are, serve merely to confirm what is abundantly clear from the documentary proof, we may turn to 1. IMT mimeographed transcript, p. 11075. See also the admission to the JODL's counsel, Vol.

IV, Trial of the Major War Criminals, p. 487. 2. Tr. p. 3939 3. Record p. 3756 the third general proposition which a number of the defendants have urged on the Tribunal.

That is the defense of command did carry out mass executions of Jews, gypsies, and political officials, but seek to escape the burden of guilt by pleading that they carried out these executions under the compulsion of superior orders. To this group belong Ohlendorf, Naumann, Blume, Braune, and Ott. It should be noted at the very outset that the putting forward of this plea of superior orders cuts the ground from under the defenses which we have just been considering, If, as Ohlendorf and these other defendants tell us, Hitler did order the Einsatz units to execute all Jews and political officials, and if, in obedience to Hitler's order, such executions were carried out, then there is less than nothing left of defenses such as lack of knowledge, or that the victims of the executions were all partisans. And in fact, the documents make it clear beyond the slightest doubt where the truth lies -- the order for the mass executions of Jews and political officials was given, and it was carried out and there remains for consideration only the question whether the fact that these defendants acted pursuant to an order shall be held to better their position before this Tribunal in any way. to the effect of superior orders on criminal responsibility are by now well established Normally, a subordinate is entitled to assume that orders issued to him by his superiors are lawful and do not require him to commit crimes in execution thereof; and we cannot hold the subordinates responsible to make careful inquiry or elaborate research into the background of the order to make sure that it is in fact lawful. But this general presumption for the benefit of subordinates has no application where, on its face, the order is palpably criminal. These principles have been concisely set forth in the decision of the German Supreme Court at Leipzig in the so-called Llandovery Castle Case (1921): I will quote from that opinion:

"...It is certainly to be urged in favour of the military count upon its legality.

But no such confidence can be doubt whatever against the law.

This happens only in rare and exceptional cases.

But this case was precise ly one of them.

For in the present instance, it was per breach of law.

As naval officers by profession, they were people.

They well know that this was the case here." The language of this decision is precisely applicable to the present case; here also we are dealing with even more obviously criminal orders to kill "defenseless people" on the sole ground that they were Jews, gypsies, or government or party officials. And, in any event, the scope and affect to be allowed the plea of "superior orders" are expressly set forth in Control Council Law No. 10, which is governing on this Tribunal and which states: 1 "The fact that any person acted pursuant to the order ed in mitigation."

So we are left, with this question of mitigation. In dealing with this matter, the prosecution believes that there are at least three matters which deserve primary consideration. The first is--what was the attitude of the defendants towards the criminal order and the criminal acts which it required? Obviously, if the defendants were in sympathy with or merely indifferent to the criminal character of the order, its existence can be allowed, no mitigating effect. If, and only if, the Tribunal is satisfied as to any defendant that he was opposed to and revolted by the character of the criminal order, then two other matters warrant consideration. First -- how well equipped, by rank and education, was the accused to resist the compulsory impact of the order? And secondly, how 1. Control Council Law No. 10, Article II, paragrapy 4 (b). This pro deep was the criminalnature of the order?

For by this we can, to some extent, measure the gravity of the obligation to resist it. defendants made any showing whatever which would establish a claim to mitigation. These defendants are not German peasants or artisans drafted into the Wehrmacht. They are not uneducated juveniles. They are lawyers, teachers, artists, and a former clergyman. They are, in short, men of education, who were in full possession of their faculties and who fully understood the grave and sinister significance of the program they embarked upon. They were part of the hard core of the SS. They did not give mere lip service to Himmler's atrocious racial doctrines; they were chosen for this terrible assignment because they were thought to be men of sufficient ruthlessness to carry them out. They are handpicked fanatics; Every one of them was an officer of the SS, and among those indicted here are six SS Generals, five Colonels, six Lieutenant Colonels, four Majors, and only three junior officers. They are not unhappy victims, unwillingly pushed into crime by the tyranny of the Third Reich; these men, above all others, themselves, spread the Nazi doctrine with fire and sword. of the crime which is charged here. We are not concerned with the conduct of soldiers in the heat and excitement of battle. These crimes were not committed as a result of snap judgments in serious emergencies. These crimes were committed in execution of deliberate plans laid months earlier. And the crime itself is of staggering enormity -- the annihilation of entire racial and national groups -- such as Jews and gypsies -and all leading government and party officials. Questions of guilt or innocence of the victims played absolutely no part; this was massacre for its own sake and the intended victims numbered in the millions. This case therefore, falls well within the conclusion reached by the IMT in passing judgment on Keitel and Jodl. Keitel and Jodl too, had advanced the same argument; in disposing of it, the IMT said, in the case of Keitel:

"There is nothing in mitigation. Superior orders, even justification."

and, in the case of Jodl2, the IMT said:

"His defense, in brief, is the doctrine of "superior or ders", prohibited by Article 8 of the Charter as a de fense.

There is nothing in mitigation. Participation his excuse for commission of these crimes."

the sake of formal completeness, that this defense has no application under Count Three of the indictment, which charges all the defendants with membership in organizations (the SS, the SD, and the Gestapo) declared criminal by the IMT. Under well established principles, the defendants must be convicted under Count Three on the basis of a showing that they were in fact members of any of these organizations after September 1939, and that they knew that the organizations were being utilized for the commission of acts declared criminal by the London Agreement and Charter. The defendants were all officers in the SS -- most of them high ranking -- and all of them joined the SS years before the time, during the latter part of the war, when compulsory recruiting for the Waffen SS began. The close association of all of the defendants with one of the most horrible crimes of the SS upon which great stress was laid by the IMT in rendering the declaration of criminality, needs no further emphasis here. few of the defendants, and most notably by the defendant Ohlendorf, that the massacres of the Einsatzgruppen were, under the circumstances, defensible and necessary. I have used, the expression "point of view" advisedly, 1. Vol I, Trial of the Major War Criminals, p. 391 2. Vol. I, Trial of the Major War Criminals. p. 325 for this argument is not, properly speaking, a defense against the charges stated in the indictment; rather it is an attack upon the binding character of the laws of war and international law.

Its logical conclusion is that the laws of war are not laws at all, and are not judicially enforcible. The argument runs about as follows:

(a) It was not unlawful for the Third Reich to attack Russia Government;(b) The Germans expected that, in repelling the attack, the Russians would not comply with the laws of war;(c) Therefore, it was lawful for the Germans to plan to vio ever extent might be necessary in order to achieve victory;(d) Among the Russians, those groups who could be expected sies, and political and party officials;(e) Therefore, it was lawful for the Germans to plan to ex their own military and political security;(f) Furthermore, in modern total warfare the laws of war are not and can not be observed;(g) The heavy bombing raids carried out by the allies during (h) Finally, therefore, the defendants can not be held criminThis, I believe, is an accurate statement of the arguments which the defendant Ohlendorf put forth during his testimony.

And, after all the incredible gabbling we have heard about cultural pursuits and scientific research, it is a relief to be given a direct and stark rejoinder of this kind.

This is exactly what a fanatical pseudo-intellectual SS man might well believe. Thus, when Ohlendorf was asked on the witness stand to explain why the civilized world regarded the Einsatzgruppen massacres with abhorence, he replied:1 I quote from the test:

must shoot individual persons. I believe that the time will Ohlendorf's theses is, of course, equally relevant to the other cases which are being or have been tried at Nurnberg and, indeed to all war crimes trials everywhere.

And Ohlendorf is not the sole exponent of the thesis that Allied bombing constitutes a complete and satisfactory defense to all the crimes charged in these indictments. Thus, counsel for the defendant Burkart in the Flick case, by way of defending his client against the charge of participation in the slave labor program, asked2 in his closing argument:

their wives and children, through air attacks? 1. Tr. p. 520 2. Final plea for Burkart, p. 176, in United States v. Flick, Case No. 5 And counsel for the defendant List in Case No. 7, dealing with the charge that his client had executed thousands of hostages in violation of the laws of war, observed:

Nor can there be any suggestion that the major criminal ventures of the Third Reich -- the slave labor program, the extermination of the Jews, or any other crime of similar magnitude--were planned or committed in retaliation for Allied bombing. All of these programs were well under way and on the high road to consummation long before Allied bombing had had any appreciable effect on life in Germany.

But there are still more fundamental considerations. We may overlook for purposes of argument the question of who started all this bombing, because it is clear that in this field there is by now no question of unilateral repudiation of the laws of war. But, just as the laws of war develop by common observance, so they are not changed merely because one country breaches them, no matter how savagely and consistently. No parallel exists in modern warfare to the Einsatzgruppen and their activities. The defendant Ohlendorf justifies them on the ground that it could be expected that the Jews and party and government officials would oppose the German attack with special vigor. Even the dullest mind can imagine what would have happened in Germany had similar principles been applied during the Allied advance and occupation. that Jews were especially hostile to the Wehrmacht involves a perversion of fact and a reversal of logic so extraordinary that it would be amusing were it not so seriously advanced. After the Nazis had reviled and degraded and threatened the Jews for twenty years, it certainly might have been expected that the Russian Jews would have feared the coming of the Germans. And so now this very circumstance is put forth as a justification for slaughtering them to the last man, woman and child. We could ask for no more exact a parallel to the burglar who shoots the houseowner in self defense.

On this whole question we wish to make one final observation. The Einsatz massacres of Jews have been defended here as if it were sincerely believed that the killing of Jews was a military necessity in order to achieve military victory over the Russian Army.

But in point of fact this argument is not sincerely made. Whatever anyone may think about atom bombs or ordinary bombs, they have not been dropping here in Germany since the capitulation. But will any defendant dare to suggest to us that the execution of the Jews in Russia would have stopped if Russian military resistance had collapsed? On the contrary, the evidence is compelling that a German victory would have enormously widened the scope of operations of the Einsatzgruppen and the holocaust would have been even more staggering. Ohlendorf's own testimony makes this clear beyond a doubt. When questioned as to the necessity for the killing of Jewish children by the Einsatzgruppen he replied:1 "I believe that it is very simple to explain if one danger no smaller than that of the parents."

In short, the crimes of the Einsatzgruppen were not, fundamentally, military crimes at all. They were not committed in order to make military victory possible. On the contrary, military victory was sought in order to put the victors in a position where these crimes could be committed. These crimes were a war objective, not a military means. only because they deal with questions which are fundamental to the integrity of this proceeding, but also because they are fundamental to the very existence of the laws of war and international penal law. Not only is this 1. Mimeographed transcript p. 662 Tribunal dedicated to the enforcement of international law; it owes its very existence to international law and agreements.

Though constituted by the United States, its jurisdiction is established and defined by international agreements and declarations. One of the things for which we fought was to put an end to international anarchy, and the need for establishing international law on a practical and enforcible footing has never been clearer than it is today. ing with us on questions of international law, and what they did was not only a crime against humanity under international penal law; it was a heinous crime under all civilized legal systems. It is for this Tribunal, not for the prosecution, to determine what punishment the deep guilt of these defendants merits. But it is within the legitimate prerogatives of the prosecution to state the nature of the crime. The crime involved in this case is murder -- deliberate, premeditated murder; murder on a gigantic scale; murder committed for the worst of all possible motives. Some of these defendants still believe that what they did was not murder because the victims were Jews. No system of domestic or international penal law could possibly survive under which the determination of guilt for murder is governed by the political or religious creed or racial origin of the victim. It is vitally important to the peace of the world that no such doctrine gain currency among nations. We earnestly suggest to the court that true judicial, wisdom in this case counsels firmness rather than leniency to those adjudged guilty of this terrible crime against humanity.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Hoffmann:

DR. HOFFMANN(Attorney for the Defendant Nosske): I have a request, Your Honor, that the defense will be permitted a brief recess in order to determine how and who will reply to the prosecution's statement.

THE PRESIDENT: Just a moment please. We could combine the time required for defense counsel deliberations with the regular morning recess.

In that way both ends will be served. The Tribunal will therefore be in recess until eleven o'clock this morning.

(A recess was taken.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor, the defense, apart from my colleagues Dr. Hoffmann and Dr. Gawlik, are of the opinion that General Taylor's speech did not bring anything new. With the exception of Dr. Gawlik and Dr. Hoffmann, the defense waives the right of an oral reply but reserves the right to reply to the Prosecution's closing briefs.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Dr. Aschenauer, I thought that defense counsel had already submitted closing trial briefs. You don't mean that you are going to submit still another trial brief, do you?

DR. ASCHENAUER: Your Honor, a number of colleagues have not yet received the closing brief of the prosecution. General Taylor has emphasized the fact that there are a number which are yet to be submitted to the defense. Therefore, I think it would be a good thing if the Prosecution was told, how much time they will be given to submit these closing briefs, and that the colleagues concerned who have not yet received these closing briefs should also have a deadline up to when they can reply to these closing briefs.

THE PRESIDENT: Ordinarily the function of today should terminate definitively all proceedings in this case, but we will allow still a short further time in connection with these trial briefs, but we will now specify that one week from today will be the absolute deadline on the receipt of any type of document or evidence from either side. What ever arrangements must be made with regard to the mechanics of producing these trial briefs will need to be taken care of immediately, and we urgently request counsel on both sides to cooperate so that the Tribunal will have whatever is outstanding no later than within the week from today. briefs, the Prosecution trial briefs will have to be submitted first and we assume that prosecution will have those briefs ready, if, in fact, they are not all ready now.

DR. ASCHENAUER: Thank you.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, Now we understand that Dr. Gawlik and Dr. Hoffmann would like to make some comment on the presentation of the prosecution this morning.

DR. HOFFMANN: ATTORNEY Hoffmann for the defendant Nosske. fendants who have declared from the very beginning that they objected to the Fuehrer Order and did not carry it out.

General Taylor in his speech put all these defendants in one group, and he stated that, if these defendants were punished under Count I, for carrying out the Fuehrer Order, then they had to be punished under Count II of the indictment because of their activity in the Security Police in Russia, and their shooting of partisans and hostages. conducted this trial as one in which the Fuehrer Order was the main count. Concerning the question whether the shooting hostages and partisans or was not a legal act was not mentioned by the prosecution in this trial. I remind Your Honors that this particular point, the question of the shooting of hostages and partisans was one of the cardinal points in the generals' trial, which has been concluded just now, and where this question was discussed for six or seven months. If the prosecution puts these points into the foreground now concerning a few defendants, then in my opinion a number of details are not mentioned, and especailly those points which are regarded as illegal by the prosecution. These cases were not examined and especially, and that is the main thing, they did not point out to the defense that these facts had become the main points against some of the defendants. not been examined sufficiently by the prosecution and not enought documents have been submitted concerning this subject as to now accuse them because of their police activities.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Dr. Hoffmann, war crimes are part of the case. You admit that, don't you?

DR. HOFFMANN: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Now the prosecution presented many documents and in those documents references are made to various types of executions. Many of the defendants explain that executions in which they participated were in accordance with the laws of war, and where that has been established and proved, then natureally the charge of the prosecution of the particular instance cannot be sustained. If an execution is proved to have taken place in accordance with the laws of war, then there is no crime. So we fail to see, where the prosecution summation advanced anything, which you did not have the opportunity to reply to in the presentation of the defense, and if it is your conclusion that the prosecution has not proved these particular crimes, well then, naturally you haven't in any way been offended.

DR. HOFFMANN: Your Honor, then in agreement with this point of view of Your Honor, I would like you to rule that in all the individual cases where it was not explicitly clear whether there was a violation of the laws of war or not, the defense as far as I myself am concerned, is of the opinion that the Prosecution did not prove that, apart from the Fuehrer Order, any laws of war have been violated.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, the Tribunal certainly is not going to make any ruling of that character. The indictment has been filed, the prosecution has presented its case and the defense has presented its case completely. The issues are now before the Tribunal for eventual and definitive decision. Closing arguments are helpful and interesting but are not evidence.

DR. GAWLIK: Dr. Gawlik for the defendants Naumann and Seibert. however, did not add that two judges of the Supreme Court, the Judges Murphy and Ruthledge, objected to this decision. They objected to this decision with very strong words, I am not in the position to quote verbatim at the moment, but there is one sentence which goes as follows:

"Wherever the American flag is waving the principles of American law must be adhered to" and these principles of Americal law in this particular case, the Yamashita case, it was said, had not been adhered to, and these two judges advised number of reasons, I think, as far as I remember there were five or six reasons, why these two judges of the Supreme Court, Murphy and Ruthledge, objected. fendants. He gave as an example the cook in the kitchen of a boat. Far be it from me to compare these defendants to cooks, but I want to take up his paralled, in order to deal with the basis of the legal thoughts concerned her. The chief prosecutor did not add that according to a decision of the Supreme Count this cook cannot be punished if he acted in execution of the orders of the chief. In this decision it is mentioned explicitly that on a boat it is only the captain who has the power of command and that his crew has to comply even with illegal orders. When taking up this particular example of the boat, then in this case, in my client's ease, it is Hitler who is the captain. Deputy captain is Himmler and the vice-deputy captain is Heydrich, and those people were the only ones responsible, and not the defendants who are my clients. courts. I am very much surprised that the prosecution, in order to prove that higher order does not exclude punishment, of all things cited the opinion of a German law court. I conclude from this and any decisions made by an American or British law courts before the Second World War are not mentioned and can not be mentioned. The prosecution always held the opinion that in this procedure the German legal principles are to be disregarded because, according to these laws the defendants could not be punished, because one of the German laws which was valid at that times was the Fuehrer Order which, and I am now referring to the statements of Professor Jareis, is a law which was then in force.

Either you apply German law or international law, but you cannot apply international law once and then again German law just as the case may be. IV the defendant cannot refer to an order by his government or his superiors. I draw the attention of the High Tribunal to the face that the chief of state is not mentioned here. In this decree it is only government or superior Government and chief of state are entirely different matters and different terms according to international law. Therefore, if we invert this decision then it follows that a subordinate can refer to an order of the chief of state.

which mitigating circumstances would be justified. I am not in agreement with these three prerequisites but I want to draw your attention to one of them. The chief prosecutor spoke about the circumstances or positions, which might have put the defendants in the position to resists, but the chief prosecutor could not give an answer and could not made any statements as to whether the defendants I am representing here actually were able to resist and what they could have done in their positions. Tribunal was to put an end to international anarchy. I agree with this statement of the chief prosecutor as far as anarchy should be done away with, but anarchy cannot be eliminated by building up a huge building, but if you want to do away with anarchy you have to start with the root, and the root for this procedure is the superior order which excludes the punishability.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Gawlik, what you have presented is entirely in the nature of argument. You have already spoken to the issues, and the prosecution has presented its summation. Now you have replied to the prosecution's summation with argument and not with anything dis None the less, we can't help but call attention to your statement about the Yamashita case.

Has it ever come to your attention that in a European court that there has been less than unanimity in a court deciding upon a certain issue? Has a German court or a French court or a British court or any other court in Europe ever endered a decision in which all the judges did not agree? Is it possible to have a decision without unanimity, is that Possible?

DR. GAWLIK: No, not at all, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, perhaps the question wasn't put very clearly. The majority of a court rules, that is true, is it not?

DR. GAWLIK: Yes

THE PRESIDENT: That is true in Europe?

DR. GAWLIK: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: It is true all over the world?

DR. GAWLIK: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Why should it be any less true in the Yamashita case? You were quoting from the minority, not the majority opinion.

DR. GAWLIK: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: And you seem to take great objection and you felt it rather sensitively that perhaps the defendants were referred to as cooks. I think you will agree with me that a cook is a very important individual?

DR. GAWLIK: I agree.

THE PRESIDENT: The human race could not exist without cooks, could we?

DR. GAWLIK: I quite agree, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, Now you say that only the captain of a ship is responsible; Hitler was the captain of the ship?

DR. GAWLIK: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, if Hitler was the captain, what were Himmler and Heydrich, cooks?

DR. GAWLIK: Not at all, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: What were they?

DR. GAWLIK: I stated, this clearly, they were the deputy captains, if you want to choose this comparison.

THE PRESIDENT: Would you say going right down the line that the defendants were deputy captains? Were are you going to stop with the deputy captains? Where are you going to stop with the deputy captains? How about Goering? Was he a deputy captain?

DR. GAWLIK: One could call him that, yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Ribbentrop, was he a deputy captain?

DR. GAWLIK: Well, Ribbentrop has nothing to do with this particular case, Your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: Neither has Himmler nor Heydrich. Do Himmler and Heydrich have anything to do with this case?

DR. GAWLIK: Certainly, yes, very much.

THE PRESIDENT: Does Yamashita have anything to do with this case?

DR. GAWLIK: No, it has nothing to do with this case.

THE PRESIDENT: You brought it in though, didn't you?

DR. GAWLIK: I only cited this case to the Tribunal in order to point out that there a disagreeing opinion. I consider it my duty as a defense counsel to point out that the principles of international law which are laid down in the decision of the Yamashita case are dubious, especially as two judges, two well known judges, the Judges Murphy and Ruthledge, were of another opinion.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, Dr. Gawlik, we understand your point of view.

DR. GAWLIK: I regarded this as my duty, Your Honor, to remind the Tribunal of the different opinion of two judges in the Yamashita case.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well, your remarks will be a part of the record.

Does any other defense counsel intend to comment at this time?

(No response).

THE PRESIDENT: The procedure calls for final statements from the individual defendants. We are informed by the translation section that all the statements which were presented have not yet been translated, but we have every reason to believe that they will be translated before the court reconvenes this afternoon so that, therefore, in order to avoid any pause in the proceedings once we get started with the defendants final statements, the Tribunal will now recess until 1:45.

( A recess was taken until 1345 hours.)

(The hearing reconvened at 1345 hours, 13 February 1948)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will now hear the final statements of the individual defendants. The page will operate the movable microphone so that each defendant will have an opportunity to speak his statement to the Tribunal. We will begin with the defendant Ohlendorf.

THE DEFENDANT OHLENDORF: May it please the Tribunal, all serious literature published in the last two years on the problems of National Socialism, and particularly, religious literature, is agreed that National Socialism is not the cause, but the effect of a spiritual crisis. That crisis which unfolded itself in the last centuries, and particularly, in the last decardes, is twinfold: it is a religious and a spiritual one, and it is a political and social one. Catholic and Protestant literature, both maintain that at least since the application of Gallican freedoms, Christian religion as the final aim of humanity was increasingly eliminated from the spheres of the state which form the core of historical development. The end of the Christian idea as a binding goal for humanity in its social systems and of the individual turning to the beyond, to life in God, had a double effect.

1. Man lacked absolute and uniform values in his life. In his mind and impulses he no longer found a uniform and firm guiding point which could have supplied him with the motives for his actions. Religious values and laws took an ever smaller space in his emotions, thinking, and acting. The Christian values, if they remained at all important, actually could not prevent man from being split into a "Sunday" and "week-day" individual. Week-day supplied him with different motives to an even temporary meditation on God's will. Life this side of the grave had not only acquired a significance of its own, but indeed ruled him independently with its concepts of autonomy, wealth, social position, and so forth.

2. Society, organized into separate states, found in this development no uniform values either which might have been the constant objective of society or the state. As individuals and majority groups were in a position to make their separate aims the objects of society and politics, the inviolate metaphysical relatedness of politics was lost, and in consequence such social and political order as existed at a given time had to be disputed by the differing concepts of other individuals and other groups. The endeavors to preserve the status quo within the state and the nations was replaced by the will to eliminate the status quo by means of war or revolution. found this spiritual, religious, political, and social decay having a deep effect. There were no values for them which were not immediately attacked and opposed by different groups. Thirty or more parties fought for power in the state. They represented a number of opposing interests. This generation was not given the opportunity of living as humans and nothing else, nor was that idea taught to them as an uncontested concept. Socially their future was without hope. It is understandable that under those conditions this generation did not regard wealth as their aim, for material wealth had become a questionable asset after inflation, financial crisis, and years of economic stress, during which century-old properties, dissolved into nothing. They were longing for spiritual support, for a goal behind the social order into which they were born, a goal which promised them true human dignity, firm human objectives, and a spiritual and religious center for their developing into human beings. This generation had become too realistic in their suffering to believe that by fixing their eyes at the beyond they would find the moral and social basis for their existence as human beings at this period in history, They found denifite daily conditions socially and they were far too clear-cut for anyone to underrate their significance for human existence. Indeed the split into a "Sunday" and "week-day" man appeared as one of the deeper causes for spiritual and material suffering.

Thus, it becomes understandable that this generation searched for new religious values. the constitution and condition of the society, national, and state in which he lived for this generation not to look for ways and means to replace the changing rule of group interests by an order which was based on the conception of totality in relation to every single individual irrespective of his social statutes. We regarded National Socialism in that light and expected it to furnish the basis of a new order. It was not in the spirit of frivolity that we spoke of "The Thousand Years Reich" because we knew that the great development of humanity takes centuries, nay, thousands of years, until it matures and gives rise to yet newer developments. Our minds were not impatient, but we looked at the history of mankind, including their religious history, and that of the ups and downs of states and nations in order to find the guiding ideas in the growing and declining of the peoples in order to find the indications which would make it possible for us to fulfill justly the requirements of our time for the experiences and sufferings of history. From our search in history, we acquired the certainty that always it is the great religious aims, the great moral and ethical issues which flank the actual historical events. repeatedly pointed to the great religious and moral law contained in the Ten Commandments of Moses. Nobody will deny their binding character and no one can escape the sacred earnest of the Commandments, but it would amount to misjudging reality if one would, in the Books of Moses, ignore the descriptions of real history which in all its frightfulness is said to have been ordered by the same God who transmitted the Ten Commandments through Moses. It is not an empty religious phrase to say that to God a thousand years are but a moment. Anyone familiar with history will note that it is the outward customs and means that change in the course of the centuries, but that in 1948 no ideas are conceived or discussed which were not the living contents of Indian religious and philosophical systems, the Persian and Egyptian mysteries, Greek philosophy, the political systems and battles of the Greek city-states, of neo-platonic philosophy, of the large emotions of early Christians, the Roman concepts of law, and the state, of the great impulses of the Catholic Church and of Protestantism.

Middle Ages in the belief that in its wars the so-called modern age had become more humane that the Middle Ages, or the distant times, of what is known as barbarism. create martyrs for its ideals, but, independent of these aims and forces, every age has its human history, where individuals and nations engaged in contest for their existence, for great or small aims, for individual or collective objectives, the outward shape of which in its degree of frightfulness essentially depended on inner and outer suffering, and the degree of sincerity in these contests. As subject and object of history man stands in the middle of the development formed by sincere or insincere impulses. Man will take one or the other side or will be driven on by one or the other motive. In meditating on the character of man, he comes perhaps closest to the concept of man who is animated by religious ethic, and moral impulses which he tries to understand in himself in order then to apply them to living history. But as this aim and its practical fulfillment will never coincide, there always will be a tragic tension in the individual life between the religious and moral impulses and their application to real life, not only because individual man is limited in his power, but also because he lives in a worls of powerful groups and social conditions which can wholly ignore his intentions and dispose over him.

That tension, extends and becomes cruder in the history of the nations, both in the living body of the nations themselves, as well as in the relations between the nations. And yet all religions, especially the Christian religion teach that God becomes manifest in history. Experiences in the last years have often shaken that conception, and yet no one with a spark of religion in himself can escape that knowledge.

in God and historic reality as the outward manifestation of human ability and inability, human wisdom and human error, has grown into a general crisis in the human existence as such, since the elements of creations have shown themselves to man, and since human beings were not bound together by common ideals, Bolschevism appeared as the idol, equipped not only with power and force, but even with martyrs. Socialism, the spiritual, religious, political, and social crisis still persists. A link between East and West has been eliminated and this perhaps has made the crisis yet more apparent. In analysing our present time we will always find that ultimate values are still lacking from the feeling, thinking, and acting of human beings and nations. The meta-physical standards are lacking. We must never forget that the basic laws of Christianity in its relatedness to God and individualism with man as its center and its outward expression in the constitutions of states, are diametrically and irreconsilably opposed to one another. To Christianity this will always be true of any social order or political constitution which has made man the sole measure for its moties, the objects of its policies. If the ideas and concepts of democracy, the ideas of human dignity and liberty are to be made the sole yard-stick for the measuring of the recent period in history, it must not be forgotten that the idea of democracy is no substitute for the metaphysical obligation of the Christian or any other religious idea. The democratic idea is a formal one. It lacks all certitude which would comprehend the totality of human life; it assigns duties and privileges to people and social organizations; it grants individual liberties, but it does not give the reason why. Nor is this intended because this would contradict the objectives of democracy. To equip that idea with judicial authority by bestowing on its representatives a legitimacy from a binding religious and moral principle amounts to an entirely unjustified assumption that an idea or a law, which does not exist, is generally binding. As all metaphysical motivation is lacking, this usurpation will always be regarded as an effort by one group to maintain the status quo which will not serve to lessen the tension between the nations.

Nothing can grow from this which would substitute force by an idea binding for all and from which there could come comprehensive motives for a human conception of law and for the shaping of a common history of the nations. period simply because a fight has taken place for moral and ethical principles and, through certain historic conditions, for the survival of nations, even if appearances seem different at a superficial glance. I regard myself as one of those who have become aware of the contrast of those two forces in history. I have myself sensed that tension and endeavored to find a solution. I have said time and again that I was tortured by the fear of the punishment which those in Germany who were responsible for the historic development seemed to invite by their words and deeds. Their frank ignoring of human lives, and of the basic ideas of their own religious and moral conceptions of the people made this fear grow in me, but today my fear of future punishment invited by presentday events is greater still.

I have been now in the Palace of Justice in Nurnberg for 2 1/2 years. What I have seen here of life as a spiritual force in these 2 1/2 years in Nurnberg has increased my fear. Human beings who under normal conditions were decent citizens of their country were deprived of their basis and conception of law, custom, and morals by the power of the victors. The fact that they were deprived of their conceptions which in the place of the lost religious values had given to the majority of human beings moral and ethical support, and the fact that the life which they led justified by those conceptions was now called criminal, made them give up their human dignity, which they should never have done. While they waited for the verdict which was really announced beforehand, when the victorious powers had condemned their basic conception of life, the march of history did not stop, which in its concequences for the peoples concerned put the powers on the judges bench in the wrong before their own verdicts.

over-simplified and over-generalized formulas of the post-war period and contemplate the events of this period from the point of view of the two basic forces which have always decided the flow of events. Not one nation alone is guilty, but ideas and the weight of concrete conditions among the nations fighting for their survival and future find human representatives who are capable of unloosening the pent up tension. The concrete situation facing the nations after this war shows that the tension which still persists and grows daily goes deep back into the past and far beyond the German people and its intentions. take into consideration that these defendants here were thrown into a historic development which they did not cause and which went on independant of their will. None of them has himself selected his place in that development as a result of which he now sits in this dock. They were the target of impulses which made them act as they did independently of their own aim in life. They entered on their task convinced that they were backed by a genuine and justified moral force. They felt that their work was necessary even if it opposed their own inner tendencies and interest, because the existence of their people was in deadly peril. They were the same good average citizens as you find them by the million in all countries. They never thought of criminal activities or criminal aims. They felt that they had been put into an inevitable, awful, and gigantic war which was to decide not only on the survival of their nation, their families and themselves, but where they were also the shield against a unique enemy also for other nations. They were in no position to judge the necessity and methods of this war. They were not responsible for this. They could not be responsible for this. Any other attitude would have been in contradiction to the customs of the states in force for centuries, and the existing responsibility of the highest leaders of the nations. They had to accept the methods and the orders in this war as did all soldiers in all countries, and those who looked at history and who from the things history taught them concluded that the future would be the result of inexorable moral laws ever faced by the tension between the two basic forces in history; in their longing for the realization of ethic and moral ideas and the power of actual history with its overwhelming strength.

They also felt the natural human urge for peace and a normal life with their fellow beings. But the passion of their moral existence included the metaphysical stipulation that the existence of their people must be preserved.

I never lost faith that God is manifest in history; even though we may not understand his ways, no situation will deprive me of my faith that life and death in this world has a reason and must be regarded affirmatively. Never in one moment of my life have I failed to offset the overwhelming forces of practical history with religious, moral, and ethical impulses, whenever life demanded something of me. I always regarded history as the realization of ideas for which human beings were both subject and object and which yet seemed to point to something beyond them. I am of the opinion that this Tribunal will use the historic facts which have become known in the last two years on the background of the past period, facts which not only threaten the existence of the German people, but are a menace to the whole world, in order to truly understand the realities of history in their broad ideological and material implications. The fact that the victorious powers declared the German people guilty and the statement that its legal moral and ethical basis of the past had been unlawful, immoral, and unethical have confused and uprooted the German people as well as the individuals who were heard here in Nurnberg as the representatives of that people. Thus, this legal, moral, and ethical suffering of the German people became greater than the material one which threatens its physical existence. May the verdict of this court take into account the reality of historic conditions and developments and give the Germans, individually and collectively the opportunity of true selfrealization. lest they be kept in the grip of despair because their existence is held to take place outside historic reality and their future fate is based, not on the firmness of law, but on power and force.

without expressing my gratitude for the very generous way in which you have dealt with the problems which we have regarded as important to these proceedings.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Jost will now make his statement.

DEFENDANT HEINZ JOST: Your Honor, having grown up in the years of need of the German people, I decided in 1928 to enter the NSDAP, because I believed that I found in this Party the movement which alone was suited to be able to prohibit the fall of Germany, and was in the position to be able to offer resistance to the ever increasing 1/2ressire pf Bolshevism within Germany, and also abroad. I believed that I would best be able to fulfill my duty toward my people and my Fatherland by taking this path. This point of view also caused me to enter the SD in 1934, an organization which I considered a just and necessary arrangement, an instrument capable of representing particularly in an authoritarian state a constructive rehabilization agency connected with necessary criticism. considerations which I have submitted at length. satzgruppe A, and Chief of the Security Police and SD Eastland in late March of 1942. with this assignment, and in connection with known orders then at hand, and other orders which were given to me later by my superior, I was charged with a singular responsibility, a responsibility which fortunately only few men have had to bear in the long course of history. The execution of the orders given me meant the death of 10,000 people. The knowledge and acqaintance with the fate of these victims, and, in addition, about the inevitable fateful result of this order for the German people brought me to a state of conflict regarding my duties which can not be described today with mere words. I decided in the course of this conflict to undertake everything in my power to render a further execution of these orders impossible, and to commit myself to the revocation of the orders. I myself gave no order, and I did not pass on the order which I received from Heydrich, and I did not carry out the instruction from the Reichs kommissar to render Eastland free of Jews.

I took this position because I had to take it. I did not act in this way in order to derive thanks from some person; neither did any opportunistic considerations influence me. And, moreover, I certainly did not act in this way in order to have an alibi for a prosecutor one day, because in the Summer of 1942 such thoughts would have been absurd. It was possible for me to prevent a further execution of this order for five months so that all Jews who lived in this area at the beginning of my activity there were still living at the end of my activity there. Three-hundred deaths in an area larger than Germany, and in a span of five months are proved by the Prosecution, and these are exclusively concerned with partisans, or such people who had forfeited their lives because of offenses against the laws of war. If I expressed in an appeal that Jews, too, stood under the protection of the laws with their life and property, that was the expression of my conviction that even the Jewish people have their right as a portion of the Godly creation in exactly the way that the German people, too, have this right to live. of a certain Roman Loos, and this statement is supposed to be a standard for the activity of a commander when confronted with orders like the Fuehrer Order. I can only say that in my position I fulfilled all these conditions. I expressed to all my superiors my opinion and my point of view. I did not leave my subordinated in any doubt about my ideas. If the Prosecution introduced documents of this nature, then they would have to be permitted to work favorably for the defendants who acted in accordance with the conditions therein contained. I personally was completely aware of the results which could follow from my actions. It was in the hands of my superiors to act in accordance with them, and finally they did so. Mr. Wartenberg stated in the course of an excited interrogation in May 1947, "We know that you acted very decently in Riga.

We know, too, that you have done everything humanly possible in opposition". This statement admits the compelling conclusion that they were aware of this material which mitigating for me. But they did not submit it. believe as a German and as a man that I acted justly. I can --- my actions to myself and to any Tribunal in the world with a pure conscience.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Naumann will now make his statement.

DEFENDANT ERICH NAUMANN: Ill conditions within the German people, patriotism and conscientiousness were the reasons which, in 1939, caused me to join the NSDAP. Inspired by the very same patriotism, and the same conscientiousness, I chose the opportunity from 1928 to take part in the brief courses which were held in those days by the then Reichswehr, the predecessor of the later German Army, and, part from exercising my profession, to train myself as a soldier in order to be able to defend my country, should the necessity arise. Thus I received my basic training and visited the NCO officers' courses. to let me join the Army until I achieved my aim, and was able to join the Army in April of 1940. However, this condition did not last for long. As early as December of the same year, I was to return to my former office. Owing to my personal acquaintance with General Juettner of the Waffen-SS, who held then the corresponding rank of Chief of General Staff in the Waffen-SS, I managed to remain with the Army. But through a decree of Himmler I was recalled to my office in March 1941. At the end of November 1941 I took over Einsatzgruppe B by personal order of Heydrich, and thus became acqainted with the Fuehrer Order, which is being dealt with in this trial. Apart from this instinctive attitude against this order, there was the fact that this order had been given by the Supreme Commander, and the Chief of State during the war.

Apart from the wish not to have to comply with this order, there were the considerations that the oath rendered to the Chief of State left no possibility to evade it, and the realization that it was a legal order, as it was given by the Chief of State. In this inner conflict of emotions, in this enormous collision between duty and conscience, I conducted myself as has been described by my counsel in his plea. his assistants for his labors he underwent in my behalf. Psychologically, I rejected this order. On the witness stand I have attempted to give as true a picture as possible of this inner conflict. The testimony of my comrades Steimle and Ott equally show how strong and how serious our objections were against this order. Steimle's and Ott's testimony supported my inner attitude, but we clearly recognized that we had neither the possibility nor the power to take any steps against the order. The Fuehrer Order was also subject of discussions with my military superiors in Russia, the Commanderin-Chief of Army Group Center, Field Marshal von Kluge, and the Commander of the Rear Army Territory, General von Schenkendorf. Also Field Marshal von Kluge, who exercized the entire executive power in Central Russia, and who was the only man in this area who had immediate access to the Fuehrer, stated, that there was no possibility to evade the Fuehrer Order. On many occasions I discussed this with General von Schenkendorf and the result was the same. I would like to say here that friendly relationship developed between von Schenkendorf and myself in spite of the high position and high rank, and his ago; von Schenkendorf was then 68 years old.

he became my fatherly friend. According to information that I had access to I believed that Germany had anticipated the immediate impending attack on the part of the Soviet Union. I was furthermore convinced that Bolshevism was a tremendous danger for Germany and Europe, and that all forces must be mobilized to avert this danger. How right this attitude was has been proved not only by the subsequent period. The causes which led to the cooling off of the Allied relationship between U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. prove, I believe, the accuracy of my original point of view.

There I was, a soldier and officer in the East. It was in accordance with my inclination as a soldier, that I regarded my assignment as a purely military one and that I complied with it accordingly. The situation in the Army sector, and the very imminent partisan danger provided the opportunity for this. Therefore, I mobilized the Forces of Einsatzgruppe-B to a large degree for Partisans' reconnaissance and combat, which was made a reason by my superiors later on to reprimand me. bined a battalion of Russians who voluntarily fought on the German side, and had put themselves at our disposal with the Police Company of the Einsatzgruppe-B, a unit of many of the Waffen-SS who were part of Einsatzgruppe-B, and a number of voluntary Ukrainians into one combat unit, and reported voluntarily for combat against partisans as commander of this newly formed unit. This was approved by my superiors. In the course of this combat, I was decorated with the Iron Cross Third Class for bravery before the enemy. I merely mention this fact because the Prosecution in their trial brief, have mentioned this decoration as a reproach. I would like to tell the Prosecution here that I am still proud of this decoration which I have earned for bravery before the enemy.

a unit commander during the whole period of war, because, first, the battalion of Russians, and, later, the mixed battalion were withdrawn from the territory of the Army Unit, and thus I had to dedicate myself entirely to the leadership of Einsatzgruppe-B. I was a German soldier and officer in the truest sense of the word. Whenever I had to order, or to act anywhere, and anyhow on my own initiative, I have always acted in a humane manner. If I was confronted with an order by the Supreme Commander, or the Chief of State, I saw just because I was an obedient soldier no possibility to disobey this order, even though my inner attitude resisted it. When I was in Russia, it so happened that I took over Einsatzgruppe-B only five months after the beginning of the war, and, therefore, I did not have to comply with the Fuehrer Order, because the Fuehrer Order had been given to the Chiefs of the Einsatzgruppen and the Commando Leaders at the very beginning. To reject the order I had neither the power nor the possibility. The fact that obedience is the supreme duty of a soldier is shown in the well known speech of the British Field Marshall Montgomery of 1946, in which he says:

"No matter how intelligent the soldier is, the Army would leave the nation in a lurch if she (that is the Army) was not used to obey orders immediately.

It is ing which the Army, i.e., the nation, gives him."

soldier receives and executes severe and severest orders. How could it be possible otherwise that my home town of Dresden, which housed no factories nor any installations of war importance within her boundaries, should be destroyed within 36 hours, and, thus more than two-hundredthousand defenseless human beings, mostly old people, women and children were killed, buried, or cruelty wounded. How would it otherwise have been possible that the old city of my last garrison, old Nuernberg, had been turned into a rubble heap.

How would it have been possible that the first atom-bombs were thrown on Japan, and thousands and thousands of defenseless people had been killed, that through the very consequences of the atom-bomb even the unborn generation will have to suffer? superiors, even if it was not in accordance with their conscience, when they had received the orders, with the reason that they were necessary in order to reach the war aim. my inner attitude have given me the confidence so that I was able to answer the question of the President of this Tribunal which he put to me on 15 September 1947, with a clear conscience and deep conviction by "NOT GUILTY".

THE PRESIDENT: Defendant Naumann, you made reference to a military decoration. The Tribunal will indicate to you that you do not need to make any apologies for a decoration received as a soldier in honorable combat. Any such decoration is respected by all mankind. The Defendant Schulz will now make his statement.

DEFENDANT ERWIN SCHULZ: May it please the Tribunal. To the charges made against me in this trial I have expressed myself on the witness stand. That which had to be said by way of summary was put forth by my defense attorney Dr. Durchholz in his final plea. I have nothing to add to these statements because they corresponded with the truth. Thus, and in no other way, the events unfolded before me. charges of the Prosecution; my statements are impeached. On the day of capitulation I made myself available without qualification for myself, and for the thing which I have to represent not in order to lie but to serve the truth.

test the truthfulness of my statements because of my readiness in all ways which certainly has not occurred frequently in connection with investigating authorities. If the many men were interrogated, whose names Mr. Wartenberg read to me from a long list, then the result of the questioning can have been nothing other than that which I said myself, excluding the events, naturally, which took place within me. according to which 12,000 people have been shot under my responsible leadership of Einsatzkommando V. Each member of Einsatzkommando V who was there during my time can truthfully say nothing other than that such a charge is devoid of any basis. men have always been holy for me. Just as I am concerned to maintain the purity of my own honor, I consider also the honor of my fellowman, no matter who it was. And it was also not otherwise in Russia. At no time did I deviate capriciously or without feeling on the subject of the fate of human beings. witness - that never in my life at any place or at any time have I maltreated or tortured a human being. Neither have I ever participated in an order to this end, nor have I tolerated such an act silently. Had I discovered such an inhumane act within my area, I should have committed myself against it with all means at my disposal. That this is the case is proved also by the affidavits which have been submitted, which for the most part were made available most voluntarily by former political opponents. a conclusion which is not in harmony with my conception, I wish to try to attain understanding here, too. But that should not after the fact that I can answer to my conscience for that which I have done and permitted. This accounting to my conscience is, however, all that I should like to do myself.

wards humanity, because I carried within me personally the conviction that the respect of my Fatherland is dependent upon that respect which it deserved from its environment. I acted in my position on this promise. fidently await the decision of the Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Six will now make his statement.

DEFENDANT FRANZ SIX: Your Honor, I was always a scholar but never a policeman. My life was honorable, whether at the desk of the university, or at the desk of an office, which I served understandingly, and not militarily. The four weeks of my assignment in the East did not constitute an exception to this. And I do not have to reproach myself in anything as a man and as a soldier than as today. Thus my first word in this trial can remain my last word, NOT GUILTY.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Blobel will now make his statement.

DEFENDANT PAUL BLOBEL: May it please the Tribunal, Contrary to the assertion of the Prosecution that I did not serve at the front and that my activity did not take place in the confusion of the front line, I would like to say once more in conclusion: My assignment was exclusively in the combat area and not in the rear area. In addition this assignment was the result of an order by the RsHA, which legally is to be considered equivalent to a war draft. Like every soldier I was subject to the harsh war laws. I too became enmeshed, by the assignment in the East, in conflict between law and morality, obedience and refusal to obey orders, harsh necessity of war, and personal feelings, a conflict which can hardly be retold today, and which can hardly be explained to the outsider. mass executions of Jews, Communists, and other enemies, since I personally lacked every prerequisite to bear the responsibility for such a decision.

bach as a final order. I expected certain executive orders. There were issued to me when I was subordinated to Sixth Army Headquarters.

Executions were not ordered by me personally. The executions which were carried out, at which I was present, were decided upon and ordered by the Commanding General of the Sixth Army, Fieldmarshall von Reichenau according to documentary statements. to my knowledge all events with which any man of Sonderkommando IV-A had to furnish a small group of men, as per order, is responsible for by far the greater part of this number. Whether any of these men took part in this execution is something of which I am not personally aware, since I did not actively participate in this operation. due to infectious diseases. Only relatively late did this condition lead to my being relieved, after the superior authorities finally had knowledge of the medical opinion about my reduced military fitness. operations connected with it, as can be seen from the hospital papers which have been submitted. orders given to me by von Reichenau, I did not commit war crimes and crimes against humanity, as the Prosecution states. I can face my wife and my children with a clear conscience, and I can look into their eyes. I am NOT GUILTY before God and my conscience.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Blume will make his statement.

THE DEFENDANT BLUME: May it please the Tribunal, my defense counsel in his final plea and myself when in the witness stand commented already on the actual questions of this trial and its legal problems. Therefore I only want to add a few words with regard to my personality. university acquainted me with the values of western culture. At the same time Germany was a sacred concept for me. After the conclusion of my studies and at the beginning of my professional career in 1933 it was the aim of my life to become an official in the internal state administration. But fate sent me to the branch of the political police. In all those years from 1933 until 1945 I saw nothing else in all the developments in Germany than the great effort to eliminate the moral threat through Bolshevism against our Western cultural values. According to my conviction of that time, this purpose was served by Adolf Hitler's policies, even when he in the middle of 1941 led Germany into the war against the Soviet Union. the inner values of man, and on the belief in ideals. I always tried to realize these ideals in my personal conduct of life as well as in my profession. This required in particular a correct and clean attitude as an official and the endeavor to serve justice and law in my professional activity. In those cases where my character could not agree with certain orders received in my activity, I tried up to the last limit to dominate with my own humane attitude. I therefore believe that during my entire professional activity, I helped incomparably more people without their knowing it, than I interfered in human destinies and made them suffer in the execution of the authority of the state.

All in all I feel myself free from any legal guilt. I therefore expect your judgment, Your Honors, with perfect calm and confidence.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Sandberger will make his statement.

THE DEFENDANT SANDBERGER: I do not want to make any statement.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Seibert will make his statement.

THE DEFENDANT SEIBERT: May it please the Tribunal, I do not wish to add to the statements of my defense counsel about the actions indicted here in this trial in Russia, because I am of the opinion that that which had to be said about it has already been said. I had requested my defense counsel not to make any lengthy statements about my character and my life otherwise. Above all the reason was that the Tribunal already knew my life even in brief outline because of my testimony on the witness stand, and that my activity in the SD, especially outside of Russia, always took place in the economic department. The documents of the prosecution prove this. SD I feel myself free, so free of every guilt according to the best of my knowledge, that I dare to claim that it is no coincidence that the prosecution did not succeed during the time of my detention, which is more than two and three -quarters years, to mention even one human being who has been harmed through my activity. that not only here but already in '45 and '46 I was interrogated about my activity longer than seven months in the headquarters of the British Secret Service in Nenndorf. After the completion of these interrogations in February 1946 I was charged with nothing but I was committed then to an internment camp for automatic arrest. I feel free of every guilt.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Steimle wall make this statement.

THE DEFENDANT STEIMLE: May it please the Tribunal, may I precide my final words with the story of an event which I experienced at the end of September or beginning of October '41 in Welich, the headquarters of my kommando, and which I related to Mr. Wartenberg during the interrogation?

by a partisan attack. The competent military field commander handed over to me a number of farmers from collective farms from a village which was located near the site of the attack. He asked me to have these Russians shot as hostages by my kommando. For this purpose I ordered an interrogation of the prisoners concerned. The invesgitation showed that these men could not be connected with the partisan attack. I therefore ordered their immediate release. received the indictment for participation in systematid genicide. As far as my situation is concerned, it seems to me to be especially symptomatic in this trial too, insofar as the interrogator at the time greeted my truthful story with sarcastic laughter and did not believe me. Whatever the Prosecution may bring up, the inner certainty of having the truth on my side induces me once more to present the following concerning the charges made against me:

1. At no time during my command, either in Kommando 7 a or in Kommando 4 a, did I give orders to carry out the Fuehrer Order, just as little as this Fuehrer Order was carried out in my two kommandos, to the best of my knowledge.

2. Numerous crimes against the security of the German troops which were punishable according to announcements, especially the appearance of partisans, gave my kommandos cause, by order of the competent army, to take action against the bearers of this resistance movement and also to carry out death sentences in the process.

3. These convictions resulted on the basis of detailed interrogations which proved the individual guilt of the individual defendants.

4. At no time did my kommandos carry out any collective measures during my command.

5. The Communist functionaries who are reported as having been shot were convicted as active leaders of the resistance movement.

The documents submitted by the Prosecution cannot brand me a criminal nor a war criminal. No witness who experienced my activity has supported this claim of the prosecution, even though the prosecution interrogated officers and men of my kommando in detail. into contact with the National Socialist movement once upon a time. I wanted to serve Germany, to help German people. The end of the war finds my generation facing an immense abyss. Where we dreamed of future well-being and peace, we found ruins and distress in their stead. No history-conscious man will claim that such an event is thinkable without human weakness and guilt. Likewise, every historically-minded man knows that it is impossible, after such an event, to distribute the guilt individually or even to charge all to one people alone. As a former SS officer and National Socialist I am prepared to take my guilt upon myself. It does not lie in a punishable act which I might have perhaps committed in Russia. If I am to express this sense of guilt only in an approximate manner I will say this: Hundreds of thousands have, together with me, placed their faith and idealism into the hands of a few people with too great a confidence and have thereby laid the foundation of one of the causes of our unfortunate time. Thus alone did I and many others become unmeshed in the guilt of our time. Surely their guilt is not a criminal one, but a political one. As an upright man I will answer for it.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will take its afternoon recess and reconvene in fifteen minutes.

(A recess was taken.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: In view of the fact that the microphone is not protable to the back row of the defendants' dock, each defendant, as his name is called, will please come to the center of the defendants' box and speak into the microphone standing there at that point.

ERNST BIBERSTEIN: Your Honors, I have nothing to add to the deliberation of my defense counsel. As to all charges of the Prosecution I do not feel guilty before God and my conscience.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Braune will come to the microphone.

WERNER BRAUNE: Mr. President, Your Honors: I have nothing to add to the final plea of my defense counsel.

THE PRESIDENT: Very well. The defendant Walter Haensch.

WALTER HAENSCH: Your Honors, when this trial started I pleaded not guilty. With this idea I begin my final words. At no time did I have any connections with war crimes or crimes against humanity, and equally am I unable to see anything criminal in my membership in the SD and, therefore, also in the SS. that I am here today. Documents have been found, which appear to speak against me. However, a benevolent fate made it possible to prove to Your Honors that I actually had nothing to do with the events reported in the documents. I underline here to its full extent what my defense counsel has said about this. I returned from there. I myself never did commit anything criminal, nor did I see others do so, nor did I ever hear of it. Also, nobody ever suspected me of committing a criminal act. What actually happened during this war in this respect - especially the treatment of the Jews on account of their race - I have learned, and of this I assure you again, only after the collapse of Germany, and the full details I heard only in this trial.

I did not know the so-called Fuehrer Order. One could, therefore, not ask me now to feel guilty about this which is something which does not correspond to the fact. I, therefore, do not want to deal with it at this point, but only want to say one thing - had such an order been given I myself would have left nothing unturned in order to fight against it, just in the same way as otherwise I always interfered against injustice and corruption without consideration of my person. met during this trial, to check on my assertions and ask whomever they wanted to about my person and activities because I did and have nothing to hide and, therefore, have nothing to fear. It was clear to me that only truth could wash the suspicion off me, which the false statements in the documents had cast on me. Therefore, I avoided everything which could have shaken the proof put forward in my defense in the remotest way, and I know that all those who have helped me in providing for my evidence or who testified for me, did the same. For this reason I even restricted to a minimum my personal correspondence with my family. This was in no way easy for me, worried as I was about my wife and my aged mother, both of them being almost without means of subsistance at the present time. point out that I only joined this organization in the belief to serve my people best in this way. This was my conviction when I swore fidelity to the Head of the State. This oath was no obligation to blind obedience as far as I was concerned, but left sufficient amplitude to my own responsibility. I related which events induced me to join the National Socialist Movement. It was the situation created in Germany by Bolshevism at that time. Everything I saw with my own eyes showed the development which could only end in chaotic destruction. To stem this danger I considered my duty, not only as a German, but also as a member of the entire civilized world.

I do not think that I made a mistake in the recognition of this danger. It is still my conviction to this very day. made me join the SD and the SS. I have nothing to add to this point. intention. My intention, however, was and is clean. Nobody can disturb the peace of my conscience. However, there is another thing, which ought to be defended. This is honor. It is exposed to outside attacks. Please do understand that I suffered a great deal and still suffer under the accusations of the Prosecution, because they charged me with a guilt, of which I feel myself free. As a man who at one time was privileged to serve justice I trust that you, Your Honors, will dispense justice to me, and will find me not guilty as my defense counsel has applied.

THE PRESIDENT: Dr. Nosske.

GUSTAV NOSSKE: Your Honors, I have declared since the very beginning that I was determined not to obey the Fuehrer Order. And indeed I did not carry it out. as during war time it is imperative in enemy country. On the other hand, the knowledge of this order prompted me to try with all means to sever my connection with the Gestapo. I have made many attempts in this direction, however, I failed. Only as late as 1944 I succeeded to leave the Gestapo. I refused to obey an order, which I could not evade, but should have carried out. The consequence of my leaving the Gestapo was that I was sent to the front as a soldier, and this could be considered as extreme leniency towards me. Just as well I could have been court-martialled and executed for disobedience. I did not have an easy time as a soldier but was assigned to those placed where fighting was hottest, which is proved by my combat wound. I ask you, Your Honors, to consider all these circumstances, and put my life in your hands.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Adolf Ott.

ADOLF OTT: Mr. President, Your Honors: Since 1945 singular and most secret conferences and decrees have come to our knowledge which we hever had access to before. I must confess that under the influence of these documents numerous conclusions seem at hand which, however, were never drawn by me as I have never had knowledge of the internal connections. Thus, the Fuehrer Order looks quite different if we look at it today as it did then in Russia where I did not have any idea of the happenings in the concentration camps and similar matters. In Russia I, as a soldier, was confronted with the task to do my utmost towards securing the army territory for the fighting units. I carried out this task as well and as conscientiously as I was able to do. I saw no unjust war, I had no ideas of liquidations, but the decisive matter for me was my duty as a German and a soldier within the struggle for life of my own people. I only came in contact with the Jewish population of the sector of our assignment so far as individual Jews were members of the partisan groups which we fought against. I never searched for Jews in order to have them shot. In accordance with this I used Sonderkommando 7 b only as a unit for fighting partisans and for the prevention of acts of sabotage but never for liquidation operations. Even partisan counter-intelligence tasks I have tried to comply with using aslenient means as possible. Therefore, from my own initiative and under great difficulties I set up an internment camp in the vicinity of Orel to which I had people brought whose offenses would have sufficed to have them shot according to the general laws of warfare then in force. But I thought I would be able to secure their lives and merely punished them with 6, 9 or 12 months confinement. By doing this I saved the lives of about 200 people.

I have never hunted for external honors. All my actions have been guided by reason and humane compassion. My assignment in Russia did not result in promotion; I received no decorations, no priority in subsequent employment.

I did not apply for my assignment in Russia appointed to the same post I had held before. assignment, especially my activity in Lorraine was not regarded as one enforcing and supporting a terror rule by the population. It is most clearly shown in the letter of the French mayor, who, on his own initiative, says that I would be welcomed by the population of this particular French area at any time.

My conduct in Russia was not different. Whenever and wherever I saw injustice done or unnecessary severity exercised I openly applied to the responsible agencies as Gauleitung, Regierungspraesidium, and Labor Exchange, or State Police in order not only to bring about exceptional treatment by deviating the normal channels but also to cause the suspension of any and all unjust measures; concerning this, evidence has been brought.

Apart from this, any agency of my former domiciles can be asked concerning my behavior and conduct, be it my hometown Lindau, be it Norway, Saarbruecken or Lorraine. Therefore I faced interrogacontained in the common indictment. Yesterday the Chief Prosecutor, Mr. Ferencz, has stated that he will not submit a Closing Brief against me. I have only one special request to make to the honorable judges that they may arrive at their decisions only according to the defendant's own personal conduct and their motives, and not according to points of collective guilt. It is just because I was an old member of the Party that I know that we never as much as thought of elimination as a solution of the racial question. This kind of solution was invented in the heads of a few leaders under the impression of war. And it was only carried out by few of them, based on order which have nothing to do with the Fuehrer Order which is the subject of this trial.

Even at the time when I was inspired by the idea of a new European Order under German leadership I never for a moment thought of violent methods, which would be considered a terror regime against other nations.

The war has caused many hardships. It also treated me with severity by taking my wife from me. She was shot down in the street of a locality which was not defended when the enemy marched in by an antitank gun through a well aimed shot, as she was just coming out of a shelter. In spite of this sorrow no bitter feeling has remained with me but only the wish that peoples may, in future, be saved from the horrors of war.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant Ott has made a statement with regard to trial brief. Does the prosecution intend to file a trial brief in his case?

MR. HOCHWALD: If the Tribunal please, the Tribunal is aware of the fact that Einsatzgruppe B was handled entirely by Mr. Ferenoz, however, I do think this is a mistake from the part of the defendant.

As far as I know, trial briefs in all cases of all individual defendants are being filed and will be filed by the prosecution.

THE PRESIDENT: We wouldn't want any defendant or defense counsel to be of the impression that a trial brief is not being filed if one is to be filed. We will repeat what we said before. The trial briefs will be accepted up to and including next Friday, February 20, but will not be accepted after that, and we recommend that both defense counsel and prosecution counsel get together, where briefs have not yet been filed, to see to it that with all expeditiousness possible that they now be submitted to the Tribunal.

MR. HOCHWALD: Very well, your Honor.

THE PRESIDENT: In their order, the next defendant would be Eduard Strauch. He is not here, we presume, for physical reasons. We would like to inform his counsel, Dr. Gick, that Eduard Strauch has the right to make his final statement in court and we do not know whether you purposely, Dr. Gick, did not have him brought in or whether it was just assumed that he would not be brought in, and perhaps he is actually in good physical condition to make his statement or it may be that Strauch doesn't care to make a final statement. We would appreciate it, Dr. Gick, if you would inform him that he is entitled to make this final statement unless he has already indicated to you that he waives that right. If he wishes to make the statement in open court and you inform the Tribunal, the Tribunal will sit to hear his statement. It may be that he will be satisfied to make merely a written statement in the nature of a final statement and that will be 13 Feb 1948_A_MSD_22_2_Spears (Hildesheimer) accepted by the Tribunal.

We will leave it entirely in your hands, Dr. Gick.

DR. GICK: Your Honor, I saw the defendant Strauch yesterday in the hospital and I found him in a state of health which was wprse than ever before. He gave completely confused answers and he spoke nonsense. I was not in a position to make it clear to him that he, if necessary, could say a few final words, but I was not in a position to make it clear to him what that meant. I believe that Strauch in his present state is not responsible for his actions. If the Tribunal will permit me to do so, I shall sumbit another medical certificate concerning the present condition of the defendant Strauch at a date to be fixed by the Tribunal.

MR. GLANCY: If it please the Tribunal, it is the prosecution's opinion that the defense counsel for the defendant Strauch is precluded from testifying as an expert in mental diseases. The Tribunal is well aware of his present condition and has been so advised by experts.

THE PRESIDENT: Defense counsel has on previous occasions made comments similar to those which he has just now made and the facts established the contrary. The defendant was brought into court and did testify in a normal manner after two or three attempts and after examination had been made by competent physicians. So that the present statement of the defense counsel may not be accepted as evidence of the defendant's condition.

DR. GICK: May I say a few brief words, Your Honor? It is not my intention to give an expert opinion here. I am not in a position to do so, but it was merely my intention to tell the Tribunal how I found the defendant, and what impression I gained.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes. Well, the Tribunal will ask you, Dr. Gick, to inform the defendant Strauch that he is entitled to make a final statement just like every other defendant is making. He may make 13 Feb 1948_A_MSD_22_3_Spears(Hildesheimer) it in writing.

Very well. The defendant Klingelhoefer will please advance to the microphone.

Mr. President, Your Honors. early youth through the fact that I was born outside of Germany. Besides my love for the German people and the inner obligation to dedicate my energy and my efforts to the good of the people, there always was the respect and the understanding for other peoples and nations. East made me join the NSDAP at a time when the political, social and economic conditions in Germany threatened to develop towards a chaos, which was bound to open the doors of Germany to Bolshevism. I also realized the fact that for Bolshevism Germany represented the key for the polticial conquest of Europe. From this point of view I considered the war in the East and therefore hoped for Germany's victory, being convinced that this victory in the East would also mean the final exclusion of the Bolshevist danger in the East. Einsatz as an interpreter, because of my knowledge of languages. This assignment was based on a military order, which could not be objected to. My task in this assignment was restricted to intelligence duties and those duties resulting from my knowledge of the language and the country. In consideration of my subordinate position within the SD in Germany I never could be given the independent job of being the leader of a commando. My activity was therefore limited to the execution of orders and directives given to me, without ever being able to issue orders on my own initiative. declared that I personally objected to this radical order and tried to evade it. I also succeeded in doing so. I again declare expressly that at no time whatsoever, was I in a position to have to carry out or pass on the Fuehrer order in its radical and absolute form. I 13 Feb 1948_A_MSD_22_4_Spears (Hildesheimer) therefore never sent any persons to death on the basis of this Fuehrer order.

of particular circumstances and under particular pressure I had to carry out on direct orders, and where my knowledge of the language played a decisive part, I never had anything to do with the executive tasks. This was entirely beyond the scope of my duties. the cases, where I had seen shootings or participated in them. At no time did I ever have the intention to deviate from the truth or to withhold something; in the witnesstand as well as in all the interrogations and affidavits I always tried to speak the truth. I did not do anything which for any reasons -- be it for fear of punishment or because of the knowledge of having done wrong -- I had to withhold. Everything I did and however reacted to the tasks assigned to me and orders I received, was directed by the awareness of my duty as a soldier as well as a soldier as well as by the intention to do only those things which according to my own and full conviction had to be done to maintain and guarantee the order and security in the rear of the fighting army. of the Tribunal at the beginning of the trial, I pleaded "not guilty", and with a clear conscience I can repeat this declaration at the end of the trial.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant, Fendler, will please come to the microphone.

On his final plea, my defense counsel Dr. Fritz stated our opinion on all points which might be of importance for the Tribunal in judging my case; he has arrived at the conclusion that the case-inchief has undoubtedly turned out favorably for me. Therefore, I shall 13 Feb 1948_A_MSD_22_5_Spears (Juelich) tell your Honors about my personal opinion concerning the indictment filed against me.

chief of Einsatzkommando 4B is just as incorrect as all conclusions drawn from that assertion. It is also unjustified for other reasons to make me responsible for the happenings in Einsatzkommando 4B which were discussed in the course of this trial. The truth is, and I solemnly confirm this, that my entire activity in the SD, both before, during and after my assignment in the East, consisted exculsively of intelligence work. At all times, including my assignment in the East, I only did what any state demands of its officials and officers entrusted with such jobs. I never had cause to fear that I was doing anything not permissable or even morally doubtful. Therefore I cannot hold a different opinion of my work during those years. sibility for actions which I neither ordered nor carried out, in which I did not participate in any way whatsoever, and which I was even unable to prevent.

I can only repeat what I said at the beginning of this trial: I am not builty!

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant, Von Radetzky.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant von Radetzky.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant Ruehl.

THE DEFENDANT RUEHL: Your Honors, my career, my position, and tasks, my activity, and my attitude from 1933 to 1945 have been discussed at such length during the case-in-chief that it does not seem necessary to me to go into details about this again at this point. I would only like to say the following: SA and two years later I joined the SS with youthful faith in the truth and purity of the ideals and aims which were made known at the time. In this good faith I finally complied with the draft to the then completely unknown State Police in 1933 and worked there until 1940 on counter-espionage, having nothing to do with everyday political differences. began to undermine this faith, apart from the outer duress, I felt myself obligated to stay at that post to which I had been ordered in the decisive battles of my people of my native country.

answer for before my conscience is proved most clearly by my behavior in Augsburg. In opposition to binding orders from the highest authorities, I stood up for those people whom the prosecutions believes it was my aim to persecute. prosecution wants to ascribe motives to me in my action concerning the retransfer of those Jews in Mogilew-Podolsk, which did not even occur to me, in view of my basic attitude, which has now been proven. The important part which I played there as an intermediary of an order, was only based on the idea to avoid terrible misery and to enable those people to return to their native land. to give orders in this case, to which I was not entitled, I do not consider incriminating. On the contrary I hold the opinion that I would justly be in the defendant's dock now, if I had refused to assist at the time and had let those people perish in misery by referring to my incompetency. opinion that my conscience has not deceived me.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant Schubert.

THE DEFENDANT SCHUBERT: Your Honors, being one of those tens of thousands of officers holding the same rank as I and holding the same position as adjutant, fate has placed me among those 220 German men who have to answer for themselves to the highest American Military Tribunals as the ones whol held the most responsibility. As long as I live I shall never understand that decision. Yet I shall never complain about my fate. I need have no fear for myself as to the verdict of this Tribunal.

manner, I feel eager to state my opinion at this point concerning the charge of the prosecution that every defendant was filled with boundless contempt for human life, because of National Socialist ideology in which he believed. age, a member of a generation born during the First World War and the majority of them probably witnessed the second one in the front lines. Everywhere we were in the center of events without having ourselves held any responsibility worth mentioning. event in the judgment of persons who were responsible for past happenings. I became a National Socialist and even more so an S.D. member, not because of contempt for human life, but because I always strongly approved of life in a community of human beings. The severe stroke of fate in my young life did not change this either, when, before my Eastern assignment I lost my wife and child as a result of Allied operations during the war. The love for my people always made my duty towards my Fatherland a perfectly natural sentiment. While searching for a real life in a genuine community of people, we found our way to National Socialism. From 1934 to 1945, in the SD, I considered it my noblest duty to serve my people. crossroads of events of decisive importance to the world, not only as far as time is concerned, but also because of the place, in a territory between two worlds. We did not set out to kill, but we set out to defend Western civilization. sphere of the events contained in the indictment, but I was all the closer to the men in those units, who the prosecution asserts were filled with boundless contempt for human life.

assignment. I know the mentality of these men, their surroundings, their troubles, and worries. I saw them when carrying out the hard task they had been given and I saw their struggle between duty and conscience when they were concerned with having to carry out the Fuehrer Order discussed here. I know that there was no one in those units that could have carried out the tasks assigned to him only because he did not respect the sacredness of human life. I know that these men decided to do their duty to a great extent because they realized that the defense against Bolshevism was a question of "to be or not to be" for their people, their wives, and their children. I do not believe that anyone has the right to charge these men with contempt for human life without having been in the same position himself at some time, since these men, as soldiers could only choose between obedience and the dishonorable death of a mutineer. tasks which were given to us in the Einsatz, but I wish that the ones who accuse us today would have once had the opportunity to witness the joy of liberation of the ethnic groups oppressed until that time by Bolshevism and to see the Einsatzgruppen looking after the cultural interests of such ethnic groups and other peaceful tasks. incriminating material my own statements in the preliminary proceedings in the form of affidavits. I did not at any time keep anything secret about my activity from the first day of my captivity, since I was and still am of the opinion that I can be justly judged only if I give a clear picture of myself to the persons who are to pass judgment on me.

I did not give any cause to the prosecution to make any further charges against me beyond my truthful and exhaustive statements. happenings of that time from the perspective of the present time, with the knowledge of connections gained in the meantime, but to imagine themselves in the area and in the situation into which we were placed at that time. Then it will become clear to the Tribunal that we did our duty not in contempt of human life, but in constant struggle between duty and personal feelings. Then I have the hope that the Tribunal will arrive at a just verdict.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant Graf.

THE DEFENDANT GRAF: Mr. President, Your Honors, it was not my wish that led me to the SD in 1940. It was fate that I was ordered to the East. In exactly the same way it was fate that I am the only one of approximately 5,000 noncommissioned officers and men in the Einsatzgruppen who came to this defendant's dock. not involve me in the things which have been the object of the indictment here. I have confidence that a similarly benevolent destiny will restore my honor and my freedom to me, thanks to the objective and righteous judges.

THE PRESIDENT: With the termination of the trial proceedings, the Tribunal wishes to express its appreciation to both counsel for the prosecution and for the defense for their courteous cooperation with the Tribunal at all times. We wish particularly to congratulate counsel for the defense for their indefatigable efforts in behalf of their clients.

Entrused with a difficult task, they measured up to the finest traditions of the bar, and they have earned the commendation of the Tribunal. judgment is to be rendered, date of which has not yet been set. However, all counsel will be notified in due time as to the date of the judgment, when it is decided upon by the Tribunal. upon order of the Tribunal.

(The Tribunal adjourned without day.)

THE MARSHAL: The Honorables, the Judges of Military Tribunal II.

Military Tribunal II is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA OTTO OHLENDORF, HEINZ JOST, ERICH NAUMAN,: OTTO RASCH, Cancelled, ERWIN SCHULZ, FRANZ SIX, PAUL: BLOBEL, WALTER BLUME, MARTIN SANDBERG,: OPINION AND JUDGMENT WILLY SEIBERT, EUGEN STEIMLE, ERNST BIBER-: STEIN, WERNER BRAUNE, WALTER HAENSCH, : GUSTAV NOSSKE, ADOLF OTT, EDUARD STRAUCH,: WOLDEMAR KLINGELHOEFER, LOTHAR FENDLER, : Case No. 9 WALDEMAR VON RADETZKY, FELIX RUEHL, HEINZ: SCHUBERT, and MATHIAS GRAF, Defendants : charged the twenty-four defendants enumerated therein with crimes against humanity, war crimes and membership in criminal organizations. The twenty-four defendants were made up of six SS-Generals, five SS-Colonels, six SS-Lieutenant Colonels, four SS-Majors and three SS-junior officers. Since the filing of the indictment the number of the defendants has been reduced to twenty-two. Defendant SS-Major Emil Haussman committed suicide on July 31, 1947, and defendant SS-Brigadier General Otto Rasch was severed from the case on February 5, 1948 because of his inability to testify. Although it is assumed that Rasch's disease (paralysis agitans or Parkinsonism) will become progressively worse, his severance from these proceedings is not to be regarded as any adjudication on the question of guilt or innocence. Indictment are identical in character, but the indictment draws the distinction between acts constituting offenses against civilian populations including German nationals and nationals of other countries, and the same acts committed as violations of the laws and customs of war involving murder and ill-treatment of prisoners of war and civilian populations of countries under the occupation of Germany. Count III charges the defendants with membership in the SS, SD and Gestapo, organizations declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal and Paragraph I(d) of Article II of Control Council Law No. 10.

commission of atrocities, persecutions, exterminations, imprisonment and other inhumane acts, the principal charge in this case is murder. However, as unequivocal as this charge is, questions have, arisen which must be definitely resolved so that this decision may add its voice in the present solemn re-affirmation and sound development of international precepts binding upon nations and individuals alike, to the end that never again will humanity witness the sad and miserable spectacle it has beheld and suffered during these last years. with which the Tribunal must deal in this Opinion are so beyond the experience of normal man and the range of man-made phenomena that only the most complete judicial inquiry, and the most exhaustive trial, could verify and confirm them. Although the principle accusation is murder and, unhappily, man has been killing man ever since the days of Cain, the charge of purposeful homicide in this case reaches such fantastic proportions and surpasses such credible limits that believability must be bolstered with assurance a hundred times repeated. slaughtered his brother. He has always had an excuse, criminal and ungodly though it may have been. He has killed to take his brother's property, his wife, his throne, his position; he has slain out of jealousy, revenge, passion, lust, cannibalism. He has murdered as a monarch, a slaveowner, a madman, a robber. But it was left to the twentieth century, to proclaim and to produce so extraordinary a killing that even a new word had to be created to define it.

biggest murder trial in history. Certainly never before have twenty-three men been brought into court to answer to the charge of destroying over one million of their fellow-human beings. There have been other trials imputing to administrators and officials responsibility for mass murder, but in this case the defendants are not simply accused of planning or or directing wholsesale killings through channels. They are not charged with sitting in an office hundreds and thousands of miles away from the slaughter. It is asserted with particularity that these men were in the field actively superintending, controlling, directing, and taking an active part in the bloody harvest. here participation in a crime of such unprecedented brutality and of such inconceivable savagery that the mind rebels against its own thought image and the imagination staggers in the contemplation of a human degradation beyond the power of language to adequately portray. The crime did not exclude the immolation of women and children, heretofor regarded the special object of solicitude even on the part of an implacable and primitive foe. of October 1, 1946 declared that the Einsatzgruppen and the Security Police, to which the defendants belonged, were responsible for the murder of two million defenseless human beings, and the evidence presented in this case has in no way shaken this finding. No human mind can grasp the enormity of two million deaths because life, the supreme essence of consciousness and being, does not lend itself to material or even spiritual appraisement.

It is so beyond finite comprehension that only its destruction offers an infinitesimal suggestion of its worth. The loss of any one person can only begin to be measured in the realization of his survivors that he is gone forever. The extermination, therefore, of two million human beings cannot be felt. Two million is but a figure. The number of deaths resulting from the activities with which these defendants have been connected and which the Prosecution has set at one million, is but an abstract number. One cannot grasp the full cumulative terror of murder one million times repeated. into units capable of mental assimilation that one can understand the monstrousness of the things we are in this trial contemplating. One must visualize not one million people but only ten persons -- men, women, and children, perhaps all of one family -- falling before the executioner's guns. If one million is divided by ten, this scene must happen one hundred thousand times, and as one visualizes the repetitious horror, one begins to understand the meaning of the Prosecution's words: "It is with sorrow and with hope that we here disclose the deliberate slaughter of more than a million innocent and defenseless men, women and children." realization that such things could happen in an age supposedly civilized and mankind may also well cherish the hope that civilization will actually redeem itself, so that, by reflection, cleansing and a real sanctification of the holiness of life, that nothing even faintly resembling such a thing may happen again.

information and guidance of the legal profession, but the Nuremberg judgments are of interest to a much larger segment of the earth's population. It would not be too much to say that the entire world itself is concerned with the adjudications being handed down in Nuremberg. Thus it is not enough in these pronouncements to cite specific laws, sections and paragraphs. The decisions must be understood in the light of the circumstances which brought them about. What is the exact nature of the facts on which the judgments are based? A Tribunal may not avert its head from the ghastly deeds whose legal import it is called upon to adjudicate. What type of reasoning or lack of reasoning was it that brought about the events which are to be here related? What type of morality or lack of it was it that for years bathed the world in blood and tears? Why is is that Germany, whose rulers thought to make it the wealthiest and the most powerful nation of all time, an empire which would overshadow the Rome of Caesar -why is it that this Germany is now a shattered shell? Why is it that Europe, the cradle of modern civilization, is devastated and the whole world is out of joint? Einsatzgruppen trial in particular makes no little contribution to that enlightenment. crossed the Polish frontier and smashed into Russia, there moved with and behind them a unique organization known as the Einsatzgruppen. As an instrument of terror in the museum of horror, it would be difficult to find an entry to surpass the Einsatzgruppen in its blood-freezing potentialities. No writer of murder fiction, no dramatist steeped in macabre lore, can ever expect to conjure up from his imagination a plot which will shock sensibilities as much as will the stark drama of these sinister bands.

RSHA (Reich Security Main Office), the OKW (Armed Forces High Command), and the OKH (Army High Command). The agreement specified that a representative of the Chief of the Security Police and Security Service would be assigned to the respective army groups or armies, and that this official would have at his disposal mobile units in the form of an Einsatzgruppe, sub-divided into Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos. The Kommandos in turn were divided into smaller groups known als Teilkommandos. Only for the purpose of comparison as to size and organization, an Einsatzgruppe could roughly be compared to an Infantry Battalion, an Einsatz- or Sonderkommando to an Infantry Company and a Teilkommando to a Platoon. (lettered A to D) were formed, equipped and fully ready to march before the attack on Russia began. Einsatzgruppe A was led by Stahlecker and later the defendant Jost, operated from central Latvia, Luthuania and Esthonia towards the East. Einsatzgruppe B, whose chief was Nebe, succeeded by the defendant Naumann, operated in the direction of Moskow in the area adjoining Einsatzgruppe A to the South. Einsatzgruppe C, led by Rasch and later Thomas, operated in the Ukraine, except for the part occupied by Einsatzgruppe D, which last organization, first under the defendant Ohlendorf and then Bierkamp, controlled the Ukraine south of a certain line, which area also included the Crimean peninsula. Later, Einsatzgruppe D took over the Caucasus area.

800 to 1,200 men, were formed under the leadership of Reinhardt Heydrich, Chief of the Security Police and SD. The officers were generally drawn from the Gestapo, SD, SS, and the Criminal Police. The men were recruited from the WaffenSS, the Gestapo, the Order Police and locally recruited police. In the field, the Einsatzgruppen were authorized to ask for personnel assistance from the Wehrmacht which, upon request, invariably supplied the needed men. Saxony, in May 1941, the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommando leaders were instructed by Heydrich, Chief of Security Police and SD, and Streckenbach, Chief of Personnel of RSHA, as to their mission, and they were introduced to the notorious Fuehrer-Order around which this extraordinary case has risen. Under the guise of insuring the political security of the conquered territories, both in the occupational and rear areas of the Wehrmacht, the Einsatzgruppen were to liquidate ruthlessly all opposition to National Socialism -- not only the opposition of the present, but that of the past and future as well. Whole categories of people were to be killed without truce, without investigation, without pity, tears or remorse. Women were to be slain with the men, and the children also were to be executed because, otherwise, they would grow up to oppose National Socialism and might even nurture a desire to avenge themselves on the slayers of their parents. Later, in Berlin, Heydrich re-emphasized this point to some of the Einsatz leaders.

One of the principal categories was "Jews". No precise definition was furnished the Einsatz leaders as to those who fell within this fatal designation.

Thus, when one of the Einsatzgruppen reached the Crimea, its leaders did not know what standards to apply in determining whether the Krimtschaks they found there should be killed or not. Very little was known of these people, except that they mad migrated into the Crimea from a southern Mediterranean country, and it was noted they spoke the Turkish language. It was rumored,however, that somewhere along the arterial line which ran back into the dim past some Jewish blood had entered the strain of these strange Krimtschaks. If this were so, should they be regarded as Jews and should they be shot? An inquiry went off to Berlin. In due time the reply came back that the Krimtschaks were Jews and should be shot. They were shot. shoot Gypsies. No explanation was offered as to why these unoffending people, who through the centuries have contributed their share of music and song, were to be hunted down like wild game. Colorful in garb and habit, they have amused, diverted and baffled society with their wanderings, and occasionally annoyed with their indolence, but no one has condemned them as a mortal menace to organized society. That is, no one but National Socialism which, through Hitler, Himmler, and Heydrich ordered their liquidation. Accordingly, these simple, innocuous people were taken in trucks, perhaps in their own wagons, to the anti-tank ditches and there slaughtered with the Jews and the Krimtschaks.

The insane also were to be killed. Not because they were a threat to the Reich, nor because someone may have believed they were formidable rivals of the Nazi chieftains. No more excuse was offered for sentencing the insane than was advanced for condemning the Gypsies and the Krimtschaks.

However, there was an historical basis for the decrees against the insane. That is, a history going back two years. On September 1, 1939, Hitler had issued his Euthanasia decree which ordered the killing of all insane and incurably ill people. It was demonstrated in other trials that this decree was made a convenient excuse for killing off those who were racially undesirable to the Nazis, and who were unable to work. These victims were grouped together under the title of "useless eaters". Since all invaded territories were expected to become Reich territory, the same policies which controlled in Germany itself were apparently introduced and put into effect in the occupied lands. But a very extensive interpretation was given to even this heartless decree. Insane asylums were often emptied and the inmates liquidated because the invaders desired to use the asylum buildings.

is not something pieced together years after their crimson deeds were accomplished. The story was written as the events it narrates occurred, and it was authored by the doers of the deeds. It was written in the terse, exact language which military discipline requires, and which precision of reporting dictates. the planning of future operations demands cold factuality in reports, which requirement was rudimentary knowledge to all members of the German Armed Forces. Thus, every subkommando leader was instructed to inform his kommando leader of developments and activities in his field of operations, every kommando leader in turn accounted to the Einsatzgruppe leader, and the Einsatzgruppe leader by wireless and by mail reported to the RSHA in Berlin. These accounts were veiled in secrecy but they were not so covert that they did not come to the attention of the top ranking military and political officials of the regime. In fact, at the capital, they were compiled, classified, mimeographed and distributed to a selected list. These are the reports which have been submitted in evidence. these official accounts prepared by the Einsatzgruppen and Einsatzkommando leaders. The Tribunal will quote rather copiously from these reports because only by the very language of the actual performers can a shocked world believe that these things could come to pass in the twentieth century. A few brief excerpts at the outset will reveal graphically the business of the Einsatzgruppen. A report on Einsatzgruppe B, dated December 19, 1941, speaks of an action in Mogilew and points out:

"During the controls of the roads radiating from apprehended.

.... 127 persons were shot."

The report also declares:

"In agreement with the commander, the transient officials.

126 persons were found and shot."

"A special action was executed, during which 1,013 Jews and Jewesses were shot."

In Rudnja:

"835 Jews of both sexes were shot." reported that on October 23, 1941, 116 Jews were shot; on the following day 144 were shot. Poltawa, reported as of 23 November 1941:

"Altogether 1,538 Jews were shot." (NO-3405) Einsatzgruppe D operating near Simferopol communicated:

"During the period covered by the re port 2,010 people were shot."

(NO-3235) that in Rakow:

"1,500 Jews were shot." (3876-PS) A report on activities in Minsk in March 1942 reads:

"In the course of the greater action against Jews, 3,412 Jews were shot."

(NO-2662) that on October 13, 1941:

"Of the remaining 30,000 approximately 10,000 were shot."

(NO-2832) Einsatzkommando 2, stated that in Riga on 30 November 1941:

"10,000 Jews were shot." (NO-3405) shot so, within the narrow compass of expression allowed in a military report, some variety was added. A report originating in Latvia read:

"The Higher SS and Police leader in Riga, embarked on a shooting action (Erschiessungsaktion) transport from the Reich were disposed of."

(NO-3257) "Disposed of", the word "killed" was added in parentheses.

A report originating from the Crimea stated laconically:

"In the Crimea 1,000 Jews and Gypsies were executed."

(NO-2662) in Lithuania were placed in concentration camps for special treatment, and then the report explains:

"This work was now begun and thus about liquidated daily."

(NO-2937) A kommando, operating in Lachoisk, reported:

"A large-scale anti-Jewish action was carried out in the village of Lachoisk.

In the course support of a kommando of the SS Division 'Reich'.The village may now be described as 'free of Jews'. (No-3143) on one of its operations in October:

"In Mogilew the Jews tried also to sabotage in masses.

The Einsatzkommando No. 8, with 113 Jews."

(NO-3160) This same organization also reported:

"Two large-scale actions were carried out by the platoon in Krupka and Sholopanitsche;822 in the latter place."

(NO-3160) of October 4, 1941, reported:

"Altogether, 537 Jews (men, women, and adolescents) were apprehended and liquidated."

(NO-3404) monotonous, so the report-writers broke another bond of literary restraint and began describing the murder of Jews with varying verbiage. One particularly favored phrase announced that so many Jews were "rendered harmless". Still another declared that so many Jews had been "got rid of." One more pronounced that a given number of Jews had been "done away with". However, it really mattered little what phraseology was employed. Once the word "Jew" appeared in a report, it was known that this invariably meant that he had been killed. Thus, when one particularly original reportwriter wrote, "At present, the Jewish problem is being solved at Nikolajew and Cherson. About 5,000 Jews were processed at either place." it required no lucubration on the part of the RSHA officials in Berlin to comprehend that 5,000 Jews had been killed at Nikolajew and 5,000 had been killed at Cherson. (NO-3148)

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Speight will continue with the reading of the Judgment.

JUDGE SPEIGHT: Death was simple routine with these earthy organizations. In the Reich Security Main Office, Einsatzgruppen could well be synonymous with homicide. One report, after stating that certain towns were freed of Jews, ends up with the abundantly clear remark that "the remaining officials were appropriately treated." (NO-3137) groups had been "taken care of". (NO-3151) When an Einsatzkommando "took care" of anybody only one person could be of service to the person taken care of, and that was the grave digger. "Special treatment" was still one more contemptuous characterization of the solemn act of death when, of course, it applied to others.

Then some report-writers airily recorded that certain areas "had been purged of Jews." definitive. It in no way called up the grim things connected with shooting defenseless human beings in the back of the neck, and then burying them, sometimes partially alive, into shallow graves. This piece of rhetoric proclaimed that in certain areas "the Jewish question was solved." And when that wording was used one knew finally and completely that the Jews in that particular territory had been removed from the land of the living.

Einsatzgruppe C, reporting on more than 51,000 executions, declared:

"These were the motives for the executions carried out by the kommandos:

juveniles, - " and then came the all-inclusive phrase:

"Jews in general." (NO-3155) The summary cutting down of such groups as "drifting juveniles" and such vague generalizations as "undesirable elements" shows that there was no limit whatsoever to the sweep of the executioner's scythe.

And the reference to individual categories of Jews is only macabre window dressing because under the phrase "Jews in general", all Jews were killed regardless of antecedents. conscientious than the others. They refused to kill a Jew simply because he was a Jew. They demanded a reason before ordering out the firing squad. Thus, in White Ruthenia, a kommando leader reported: "There has been frequent evidence of Jewish women displaying a particularly disobedient attitude." The kommando leader's conscience now having been satisfied, he went on in his report:

"For this reason, 28 Jewesses had to be shot at Krugloje and 337 in Mogilew."

(NO-2656) and returned to their homes. The scrupulous kommando leader here reported the serious offense committed by the Jews in taking up living in their own domiciles. He accordingly executed all the male Jews in the town as well as three Jewesses. (NO-2656) Further:

"At Mogilew, too, the Jews tried to pre were liquidated."

(NO-2656) Operation Report No. 88, dated September 19, 1941, states that, on September 1 and 2, leaflets and pamphlets were distributed by Jews, but that "the perpetrators could not be found."

With this declaration that the guilty ones could not be located, the leader of the execution unit involved tranquilized his moral scruples and, accordingly, as his report facturally declares, he executed 1,303 Jews, among them 875 Jewesses over 12 years of age. (NO-3149) in Monastyrschtschina and Choslawitschi displayed an "impudent and provocative attitude". The kommando accordingly shot the existing Jewish Council and 20 other Jews.

(NO-3143) No. 124, dated October 25, 1941, had repeatedly shown hostile conduct and disobedience to "the German authorities". Thus, the current kommando went into Ostrowo and shot 169 Jews. (NO.3160) Report No. 124, dated October 25, 1941, "very reluctantly". Thus, 996 Jews end Jewesses were given "special treatment." (NO-3160) Report No. 108, dated October 9, 1941, advises that for the death of 21 German soldiers near Topola, 2,100 Jews and Gypsies were to be executed, thus a ratio of 100 to one.

There is no pretense in the report that any of the 2,100 slain were in the slightest way connected with the shooting of Germans. (NO-3156) An item in Operation Report No. 108, October 9, 1941, points out that "19 Jews who were under suspicion of having either been communists or of having committed arson" were executed.

(NO-3156) In Mogilew, the Jewish women were "extremely resistive" and not wearing the prescribed badge, so 28 of them were liquidated.

(NO-3156) Report No. 73, dated September 4, 1941, acquaints the world with the fact that 733 civilians were exterminated in Minsk, the reason being that they "were absolutely inferior elements with a predominant mixture of Asiatic blood."

The method of determining the inferiority of character and the predominance of Asiatic blood is not indicated. (NO-2844) Jews. Sometimes apparently the liquidation took place for the benefit of the Jews themselves. Thus, Einsatzgruppe B reported in December 1941:

"In Gorodok, the Ghetto had to be evacu 394 Jews were shot."

(NO-2833) declared:

"A supply of food for the Jews as well creasing danger of epidemics."

Page 6,663

(NO-3149) The situation was met bravely and chivalrously:

"To putaan end to these conditions Ukrainian militia.

Thereby, the Son of 11,328 Jews till 6 September 1941."

(NO-3149) Operational Report No. 92, dated September 23, 1941, related how scabies had broken out in the ghetto of Newel.

"In order to prevent further contagion, 640 Jews were liquidated and the houses burnt down." This treatment undoubtedly overcame the scabies. (NO-3143) a contagious disease, accompanied by fever, broke out. It was feared that the disease might spread to the city and the rural population. To prevent this from happening, 1,025 Jews were shot. The report closes proudly with the statement: "This operation was carried out solely by a commander end 12 men." (NO-3143) capabilities of their rifles, they turned to the field of preventive medicine. In October of 1941, the kommando leader in Witebsk came to the conclusion that there was an "imminent danger of epidemics" in the town, and to forestall that this should come to pass, he shot 3,000 Jews. (NO-3160) Mention had been made of the execution of the insane.

The reports are dotted with references to the liquidation of inmates of mental institutions. It seems that the kommandos, in addition to the executions carried out under their own orders, were ready to perform other killings on request. Einsatzgruppe C reports that a teilkommando of Sonderkommando, 4a, passing through Tschernigow, was asked by the director of the mental asylum to liquidate 270 incurable.

The teilkommando obliged. (NO-2832) located there maintained a farm for the inmates. Since there was not enough full cream milk in the town to supply the three large German military hospitals there, the milk shortage was met by executing a part of the insane. The report on the subject explains:

"A way out of this difficulty was found removed to a better asylum in Charkow."

(NO-2832) It was also stated:

"The underwear, clothing and other mainly to the hospitals."

(NO-2827) comes to light in an item taken from a report made by the Russian Government (USSR-41) which reads:

"On 22 August 1941, mental patients small town of Aglon.

Among them were of the hospital from a Children's home."

(USSR-41) Report No. 47, dated August 9, 1941, after generally discussing conditions in the Ukraine, stated of the operations of Einsatzgruppe C: "Last but not least, systematic reprisals against marauders and Jews were carried out."

Under their meticulous taskmasters, the Jews were bound to be wrong no matter what they did. If they were their badges they could expect maltreatment, since they were recognized as Jews; if they left them off, they were punished for not wearing them. If they remained in the wretched and overcrowded ghettos they suffered from hunger, if they left in order to obtain food they were "marauding".

Operation Report No. 132, describing the activities of Einsatzkommando 5, declared that, between October 13 and October 19, 1941, it had among others executed 21 people guilty of sabotage and looting, and 1,847 Jews. It also reported the shooting of 300 insane Jews, which achievement, according to the report, "represented a particularly heavy burden for the members of Einsatzkommando 5 who were in charge of this operation". (NO-2830) Operation Report No. 194, detailing the activities of Einsatzkommando 8, states that, from March 6 to March 30, 1942, this kommando executed:

"20 Russians for subversive Communist 1,551 Jews."

November 8, 1941 killed, as Report No. 143 succinctly states:

"15 political officials, 10,650 Jews."

Report No. 150, dated January 2, 1942, speaking of actions in the Western Crimea, stated:

"From 16 November thru 15 December 1941, 17,645 Jews, 2,504; Krimtschaks, 824 have been shot."

The report also states, as if talking of Cleaning out swamps:

"Simferopol, Jewpatoria, Aluschta, Kar been cleaned of Jews."

the executions and, consequently, many Jews escaped. This irritated the report-writer considerably. He stated:

"Naturally,the systematic action of Jews in Uman.

In particular, a large and escaped from the city.

Besides were found and liquidated.

The re after its arrival."

(No-3404) It rill be noted that the word "excesses" is here used in its opposite sense, that is deficiency.

Not as many persons were killed as should have been.

It also objected that people talked about these executions:

"Rumors about executions in other areas ficult.

Reports about actions against unguarded talks of German soldiers."

(NO-2834) unsuccessful because this particular report sums up with: "Altogether, 75,881 persons have been executed."

A report from the northern Crimea reads:

"Between i and 15 February, 1,451 persons looters, saboteurs, associals.

Total up to now is 86,632."

(NO-3339) October 1 to October 15, 1941, stated in Report No. 117:

"The districts occupied by the kom bringing the total up to 40,699."

(NO-3406) Coming back to Simferopol, in Report No. 153, dated January 9, 1942, we find:

"The operational areas of the teilkommandos, were shot.

Sun total: 79,276. In Simfero and Gypsy question was solved". (NO-3258).An entry from Operational Situation Report Nr. 3, on the period August 15 to August 3, 1941, states.

"During a scruting of the civilian prison elements". (NO-2653). the above will suffice to indicate their tenor and scope and the attitude of those who participated in the events described therein.

How did the action groups operate? As kommando leaders entered a town they immediately assembled what they called a Jewish Council of Elders made up of from 10 to 25 Jews, according to the size of the town. These Jews, usually the more prominent ones, and always including a Rabbi, were instructed to register the Jewish population of the community for the purpose of resettlement. The registration completed, the Jews were ordered to appear at a given place, or vehicles went to their homes to collect them. Then they were transported into the woods and shot. The last step of the kommando in closing the books in the whole transaction was to call on the Council of Elders, express appreciation for their cooperation, invite then to mount the truck standing outside, drive them out to the same spot in the woods, and shoot them, too. One report illustrates the procedure described:

"The Jew a of the city were ordered to present in a camp.

About 54,000 reported, including women and children.

After they had been made were killed; this took several days". (NOKW-2129) for his resourcefulness and skill in rounding up the intelligentsia of Winnica:

Caurt 2 case 9 "He called for the most prominent certain registration work.

When appear with these the following day."

(NO-2947) And then the report ends triumphantly on the note:

"This method was repeated for a third and liquidated."

In Kiev a clever stratagem was employed to ensnare the Jews. The word "clever" is taken from the report covering the action:

"The difficulties resulting from such a large move.

Although only a participation of expected at first, more than.

30,000 Jews arrived an extremely clever organization."

edged with a black border of misery and desolation. In every paragraph one feels the steel and flinty pen with which the report-writer cuts through the orange described therein. Report No. 94 tells of Jews who, driven from their homes, were compelled to seek primitive existence in caves and abandoned huts. The rigors of the elements, lack of food and adequate clothing inevitably produced serious illnesses. The report-writer chronicles:

"The danger of epidemics has thus increased became necessary."

and then, he adds:

"The insolence of the Jews has not yet diminished even now."

evictors still complained: The Jews were not even courteous to their executioners! tory. In this connection the prosecution introduced an interesting letter from one Jacob, Laster of Field Police to his Commanding General. The letter, dated June 21, 1942, is very chatty and companiable, the writer sends birthday greetings to the addresses, talks about his horses, his girl-friend, and then casually about Jews:

"I don't know if you, General, have also seen in Poland such horrible figures of Jews.

I thank the left.

selves. Even if it means a longer separation from our family.

Now is the time to clean up with the we don't sleep here.

Every week 3-4 actions, one other rabble.

It is very nice that we hove now a SD unit (SD Aussenkommando) with which I can work excellently."

sorry for himself that he is far away from home and thinks of his children: "One could weep sometimes. It is not good to be such a friend of children as I was." However, this does not prevent him from taking up lodging in a former Children's Asylum.

"I have a cozy apartment in a farmer children's asylum.

One bedroom and a livingroom with all the accessories."

fantastical for normal mental comprehension. As suggested before, the mention of one million deaths produces no shock at all commensurate with its enormity because to the average brain one million is more a symbol than a quantitative measure. However, if one reads through the reports of the Einsatzgruppen and observes the small numbers getting larger, climbing into ten thousand, tens of thousands, a hundred thousand and beyond, then one can at last believe that this actually happened - the cold-blooded, premeditated killing of one million human beings.

kommando, states that up to September 6, 1941, this Kommando 4a "has taken care of a total of 11,328 Jews". very casually declares: "In Latvia, up to now, 30,000 Jews were executed in all". that the operational area has been "cleared of Jews. From 19 August to 25 September 1941, 8,890 Jews and Communists were executed. Total number 13,315". 5, 1941, that total executions had reached the figure of 31,767.

Reporting on one month's activities (October 1941), Einsatzgruppe B advised that "during the period of the report, the liquidations of 37,180 people took place". 12, 1941, declared that Sonderkommando 4a had now reached the total number of more than 51,000 executions. approbation on August 10, 1942:

"During detailed consultations with the SS-Brigadefuehrer Obersturmbannfuehrer Dr. jur.

Strauch, we found that we Ruthenia during the last 10 weeks".Speaking of another place, the Commissioner General proclaimed:

"In the Minsk-Land area the Jewry was completely exterminated." Then he complained that the Army had been encroaching on the Einsatz prerogatives:

"The preparations for the liquidation of the Jews already been reported to your office.

In the Rear us anyway". and went on with his narrative:

"In the city of Minsk, about 10,000 Jews were liquidated in November of the previous year, at the Fuehrer's orders.

The Sluzk area was also ridded of several thousand Jews.

The same applies to Nowogrodek and Wilejka". not been going as well as he desired:

"Radical measures still remain to be taken." He explained: "In Baranowitschi, about 10,000 Jews are still living in the town alone." However, he would attend to that situation at once. He promised that 9,000 of them would be "liquidated next month." of Jews executed in Lithuania was 71,105. ory of the people killed as a business house might submit a list of stock on hand:

"Total: Jews Communists Total White Ruthenia 7.620 - - 7,620 to be added to these figures:

"In Lithuania and Latvia Jews annihilated by pogroms 5,500 (correct total 130,065) 122,455 135,567"

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Dixon will continue with reading of the opinion and the judgment.

JUDGE DIXON: It would not take, and it did not take many reapings of this character to reach the figure of one million.

Operational Report No. 190, speaking of the activities of Einsatzgruppe D, announces quite matter-of-fact that , in the second half of March 1942, a total of 1,501 people were executed, and then adds, perhaps boredly: "Total number shot up to date, 91,678". Operation Report No. 150 declares: "There is no longer any Jewish civil population".

Activity and Situation Report No. 9, covering the period of January 1942, apprised Berlin:

"In White Ruthenia the purge of Jews is in full swing.

of the Security Police and the SD." Eastern Territories, left nothing to conjecture as to the purpose of their organization.

"The systematic mopping up of the Eastern Territories complete removal, if possible, of Jewry.

This goal has present time, of 229,052 Jews."

observation that many of the Jews used force against the officials and Lithuanian auxiliaries who performed these excutions and that, before they were shot, they even abused Germany! that it did not take over this area until a heavy frost had set in. The report points out this "made mass executions much more difficult". And then another difficulty, the report-writer emphasizes, is that the Jews "live widely scattered over the whole country. In view of the enormous distances, the bad condition of the roads, the shortage of vehicles and petrol, and the small forces of Security Police and SD, it needs the utmost effort in order to be able to carry out shootings."

unreasonable in not coming themselves over these long distances to present themselves for shooting. In spite of all the difficulties, however, the report ends up with: "Nevertheless, 41,000 Jews have been shot up to now." in one report, where the question of setting up a ghetto was concerned the report-writer communicated that in getting things started there would be "executions of a minor nature of 50 to 100 persons only".

"On 2 January, at the order of Einsatzgruppe A of all foodstuffs, etc.

, and all the villagers shot.

neighboring town, Rossitten".

The report ends on the very casual note:

"All these actions were carried out without incident." massacred. In another village 301 people were herded into the public square and shot down mercilessly. But for the report-writer this mass violence did not even constitute an incident!

On two days alone (September 29 and September 30, 1941) Sonderkommando 4a, with the help of the Gruppenstaff and two Police Units, slaughtered in Kiew 33,771 Jews. The money, valuables, underwear and clothing of the murdered victims were turned over to the racial Germans and to the Nazi administration of the city. The massacre ends up with the phrase:

"The transaction was carried out without friction - " and then adds, as he was about to put away the typewriter:

"No incidents occurred." kommandos sought to avoid executions, not out of charity or sympathy, but because it meant just that much more work. The defendant Nosske testified to a caravan of from 6,000 to 7,000 Jews who had been driven across the Dnjester River by the Rumanians into territory occupied by the German forces, and whom he guided back across the river.

When asked why these Jews had been expelled from Rumania, Nosske replied:

"I have no idea. I assume that the Rumanians wanted to the trouble of shooting them.

We didn't want to do that.

We didn't want to do the work for the Rumanians, and we happened.

We refused it and, therefore, we sent them back." resulting from acts of the organizations to which the defendants belonged did not reach the total of one million. As a matter of fact, it went far beyond one million. As already indicated, the International Military Tribunal, after a trial lasting ten months, studying and analyzing figures and reports, declared:

"The RSHA played a leading part in the 'final solution' established to supervise this program.

Under its direc of the Security Police."

declared that, according to the reports, his Einsatzgruppe killed 90,000 people. He also told of the methods he employed to prevent the exaggeration of figures. He did say that other Einsatzgruppen were not as careful as he was in presenting totals, but he presented no evidence to attack numbers presented by other Einsatzgruppen. Reference must also be made to the statement of the defendant Heinz Schubert who not only served as adjutant to Ohlendorf in the field from October 1941 to June 1942, but who continued in the same capacity of adjutant in the RSHA, Office Amt III B, for both Ohlendorf and Dr. Hans Emlich, until the end of 1944. If there was any question about the correctness of the figures, this is where the question would have been raised, but Schubert expressed no doubt nor did he say that these individuals who were momently informed in the statistics entertained the slightest doubt about them in any way.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Dixon continues with the reading of the opinion and judgment.

JUDGE DIXON: Then, the actual figures mentioned in the reports, staggering though they are, do by no means tell the entire story. Since the objective of the Einsatzgruppen was to exterminate all people falling in the categories announced in the Fuehrer-Order, the completion of the job in any given geographical area was often simply announced with the phrase: "There is no longer any Jewish population." Cities, towns and villages were combed by the kommandos and when all Jews in that particular community were killed, the report-writer laconically telegraphed or wrote to Berlin that the section in question was "freed of Jews". Sometimes the extermination area covered a whole country like Esthonia or a large territory like the Crimea. In determining the numbers killed in a designation of this character one needs merely to study the atlas and the census of the period in question. Sometimes the area set aside for an execution operation was arbitrarily set according to kommandos. Thus one finds in the reports such entries as: "The fields of activity of the kommandos is freed of all Jews." meditated by the Einsatz units without their having to do the killing. When Jews were herded into a few miserable houses which were fenced off and called a "ghetto", this was incarceration -- but incarceration without a prison warden to bring them food. The reports make it abundantly clear that in these ghettos death was rampant, even before the Einsatz units began the killing off of the survivors. When, in a given instance, all male Jews and Jewesses over the age of 12 were executed, there remained, of course, all the children under 12. They were doomed to perish. Then there were those who were worked to death. All these fatalities are unmistakably chronicled in the Einsatz Reports, but do not show up in their statistics.

victims of the Einsatzgruppen who did not fall under the executing rifles. In many cities, towns end provinces hundreds and thousands of fellow-citizens of those slain fled in order to avoid a similar fate. Through malnutrition, exposure, lack of medical attention and particularly, if one thinks of the aged and the very young, of exhaustion, most if not all of those refugees perished. These figures, of course, do not appear in the Einsatzgruppen Reports, but the criminal responsibility for their deaths falls upon the Fuehrer-Order program as much as the actual shooting deaths. temporarily spared, not for humanitarian reasons, but for economic purposes. Thus, a report from Esthonia specifies:

"The arrest of all male Jews of over 16 years of age has been nearly finished.

With the exception of the cial Detachment 1 a. Jewesses in Pernau and Reval of were arrested and put to peat-cutting or other labor."

(L-180) a great shortage of doctors for the non-Jewish population:

"More than 60% of the dentists were Jews; more than 50% of the other doctors as well.

The disappearance from the Reich."

(L-180) Jews be killed by working and not by shooting:

"There is only one possibility which the German ad ted for a long time:

Solution of the Jewish prob economic conditions of the country."

(NO-3151) paid manpower, but there was always the danger that, despite these economic advantages to the Germans, the security police would shoot the working Jews.

(NO-3146) Einsatzgruppe C reports in September 1941:

"Difficulties have arisen, in so far as Jews are often the only skilled workers in certain trades.

Thus, the only are Jews.

At other places also only Jews can be employed "In order not to endanger reconstruction and the repair older Jewish skilled workers from the executions."

(NO-3146) and Dnepropetrovsk, collective farms, known as Colchoses,were found to be operated by Jews. They were described in the report as being of low intelligence but since they were good workers the einsatz commander did not liquidate them. However, the report goes on to say that the einsatz commander was satisfied with merely shooting the Jewish managers. (NO-3153) July 1942, expressed quite frankly his desire to strike down all Jews in one murderous stroke. However, he was willing to stay his arm temporarily until the requirements of the Wehrmacht should be satisfied:

"I myself and the SD would certainly of the Wehrmacht have fallen off.

For still being considered."

(3428-PS) Operation Report No. 11, dated July 3, 1941, also explains that in the Baltic region the Wehrmacht is not "for the time being" in a position to dispense with the manpower of the Jews still available and fit for work.

(NO-4537) the Jews were free from molestation. Einsatzgruppe B, reporting on affairs in Witebsk, declared:

"By appointed Jewish Council, so far about 3,000 Jews registered.

Badges for Jews introduced.

At present they ble.

For deterrent, 27 Jews, who had in the streets."

(NO-2954) that as the Germans advanced, the Esthonians arrested Jews but did not kill them. He shows the superior methods of the Einsatzgruppe:

"Only by the Security Police and the work."

(2273-PS) He then adds as an obvious deduction:

"Today there are no longer any Jews in Esthonia."

til he has drained from its body the last ounce of utility, so did the action unit in Minsk dispose of the Jews:

"In Minsk itself--exclusive of Reich used as labor."

(2273-PS) of Heydrich to suspend the killing of Jews until after they had brought in the harvest. point of view, was perhaps even worse than their own directly committed murders, that is, their inciting of the population to abuse, maltreat and slay their fellow citizens. To invade a foreign country, seize innocent inhabitants and shoot them is a crime, the mere statement of which is its own condemnation. But to stir up passion, hate, violence and destruction among the people themselves, aims at breaking the moral backbone, even of those the invader chooses to spare. It sows seeds of crime which the invader intends to bear continuous fruit, even after he is driven out.

of those responsible for these shameless crimes endeavored to keep them secret. SS-Brigadier General Stahlecker, head of Einsatzgruppe A, reporting on activities of Einsatzgruppe A, stated in October 1941 that it was the duty of his Security Police to set in motion the passion of the population against the Jews. "It was not less important", the report continued, "In view of the future to establish the ities could not be found out."

(L-180) In Riga this same Stahlecker reported:

"Similarly, native anti-Semitic forces be very difficult.

(L-180) was not so easy to start pogroms against the Jews. However, after certain prodding and assistance, results were attained. He reports:

Activity and Situation Report No. 6, prepared in October 1941, complained that Einsatz units operating in Estonia could not provoke "spontaneous, anti-Jewish demonstration with ensuing pogroms" because "adequate enlightment was lacking". However, as stated before, not everything was lost because under the direction of the Einsatzgruppe of the Security Police and Security Service, all male Jews over the age of 16, with the exception of doctors and Jewish Elders, were arrested and killed. The report then states: "At the conclusion of the operation there will be only 500 Jewesses and children left in the Ostland". building firm in Sdolbunow, Ukraine, has described in graphic language just how a pogrom operates. When he heard that a pogrom was being incubated he called on the commanding officer of the town, SS-Sturmbannfuehrer Putz, to ascertain if the story had any basis in fact since he, Graebe, employed some Jewish workers whom he wished to protect. Sturmbannfuehrer Putz denied the rumors. Later, however, Graebe learned from the Area Commissioner's deputy, Stabsleiter Beck, that a pogrom was actually in the making but he exacted from Graebe the promise not to disclose the secret. He even gave Graebe a certificate to protect his workers from the pogrom. This amazing document reads:

"Messrs. JUNG affected by the pogrom.

You must transfer them From the Area Commissioner Beck".That evening the pogrom broke.

At ten o'clock SS-men and Ukrainian militia surged into the Ghetto, forcing doors with beams and crossbars. Let Graebe tell the story in his own words:

"The people living there were driven on to the street dressed or in bed.

of pogroms is evidenced by one report where the Sipo and SD want some of the credit for the murders committed:

"As a result of the pogroms carried out by the Lithua smaller town were eliminated."

In some areas special groups were set up:

THE PRESIDENT: The presiding judge continues with the reading: Heading, the Jews to extermination, the public record shows that they counted on substantial material advantage. The levying of enormous indemnities against persons considered by the Nazis as Jews or halfJews and the expropriation of their property in Germany as well as in the countries occupied by it, brought huge returns to the coffers of the Reich. And even in the dread and grim business of mass slaughter, a definite profit was rung up on the Nazi cash register. For example, Situation Report No. 73, dated 4 September 1941 reporting on the executions carried out by a single unit, Einsatzkommando 8, makes the cold commercial announcement:

"On the occasion of a purge at Tscherwen 125,880 rubels kommando 8 to 1,510,399 rubels up to the present day."

Situation Report No. 133, dated 14 November 1941, shows the progress made by this unit in a little over two months:

"During the period covered by this report, Einsatzkommando rubels.

They were entered into the ledgers and passed to the Administration of Einsatzkommando 8. The total amount to 2,511,226 rubels."

On 26 October 1941, Situation Report No. 125 gave Einsatzkommando 7b credit for 46,700 rubels taken from liquidated Jews, Einsatzkommando 9 credit for 43,825 rubels and "various valuables in gold and silver", and recorded that Einsatzkommando 8 had increased the amount of its loot to the sum of 2,019,521 rubels.

Operation and Situation Report No. 31, dated July 1941, rendering an account of operations in Lithuania, recorded the taking of "460,000 rubels in cash as well as a large number of valuables" from liquidated Jews. The report stated further:

"The former Trade Union Building in Wilna was secured for the German Labor Front (DAF) at their request, likewise 1.5 million rubels."

on the highest ethnic and cultural level, executants of the program were not above the most petty and loathsome thievery. In the liquidation of Jews in Zhitomir and Kiew the reporting Einsatzkommando collected 137 trucks full of clothing. The report does not say whether the clothing was torn from the victims while they were still alive or after they had been killed. This stolen raiment was turned over to the National Socialist People's Welfare Organization. ordered to obtain furcoats for his men, and that since the Jews had so much winter clothing, it would not matter much to them if they gave up a few fur coats. In describing an execution which he attended, the defendant was asked whether the victims were undressed before the execution. He replied: "No, the clothing wasn't taken - this was a fur coat procurement operation."

A document issuing from Einsatzgruppe D headquarters (February 1942) speaks of the confiscation of watches in the course of anti-Jewish activities. The term "confiscate" does not change the legal or moral character of the operation. It was plain banditry and highway robbery. The gold and silver watches were sent to Berlin, others were handed over to the Wehrmacht (rank and file) and to members of the Einsatzgruppe itself "for a nominal price" or even gratuitously if the circumstances warranted that kind of liberality with these blood-stained articles. This report also states that money seized was transmitted to the Reich Bank, except "for a small amount required for routine purposes (wages etc.)". In other words the executioners paid themselves with money taken from their victims. some Ethnic German families were living in Southern Russia, showed that it helped by placing Jewish homes, furniture, children's beds, and other equipment at the disposition of the Ethnic Germans. These houses and equipment were taken from liquidated Jews. (September 1941), stated that it organized a regular police force to clear the country of Jews as well as for other purposes. also extended to prisoners of war. Even in the first weeks of Germany's war against Russia, large numbers of civilians from the invaded areas were indiscriminately thrown into prisoner of war camps, run by the P.O.W. department of the High Command of the Wehrmacht. On 17 July 1941, Heydrich issued Operational Order No. 8, which contained "directives" for the Einsatz units "detailed to permanent P.W. camps (Stalags) and Transit camps (Dulags)". These directives not only grossly violated the provisions of the Hague Regulations on prisoners of war and civilians in belligerently occupied territories and of century-old rules and customs of warfare, but outraged every principle of humanity. They provided for nothing less than the cold-blooded mass-murder of prisoners of war, and of civilians held in P.W. camps. The directives state as their "purpose":

"The Wehrmacht must immediately free it Bolshevist influence.

The special situa fore, demands special measures (Italics original) which have to be carried out in ness to assume responsibility."

gories of persons to seek out "above all". This list mentions in detail all categories and types of Russian Government officials, all influential communist party officials, "the leading personalities of the economy", "the Soviet Russian intellectuals", and as a separate category -- the category which was again to yield the largest number of victims of this "action" -

"All Jews" "taking any decisions, the racial origin has to be taken into consideration."

Concerning executions, the directives specified:

"The executions must not be carried out neighborhood.

They are not public and as possible."

Further:

PRESIDENT: The next heading, How were the executions conducted?

What was the modus operandi? On this subject history need not remain in the dark. Several of the executioners have themselves cleared away all mystery as to just how they accomplished their extraordinary deeds. Defendant Paul Blobel, who stated that his sonderkommando killed between 10,000 and 15,000 people, described in some detail one performance he personally directed. Specifying that from 700 to 1,000 persons were Court No. II, Case No. IX.

graves, and the executioners were then compelled to exert themselves to complete the job of internment. A method, however, was found to avoid this additional exertion by simply having the victims enter the ditch or grave while still alive. An SS eye-witness explained this procedure:

"The people were executed by a shot in the neck.

The corpses were buried in a large tank ditch.

ceremonious. These executioners called off the names of the victims before they were loaded on to the truck which was to take them to their death. This was their whole judicial trial -- the indictment, the evidence, and the sentence -- a roll call of death.

There were different techniques in execution. There were Einsatz commanders who lined up their victims kneeling or standing on the edge of the grave, facing the grave, others who had the executees stand with their backs to the grave, and still others, as indicated, who had their victims stand in the grave itself. One defendant described how the victims lined up at the edge of the ditch and, as they fell, another row stepped into position so that, file after file, the bodies dropped into the pit on to the bleeding corpses beneath.

Hardly ever was a doctor present at the executions. The responsibility of the squad leader to make certain the victims were dead before burying them was simply discharged by a glance to determine whether the bullet-ridden bodies moved or not. Since in most cases the huddled and contorted bodies were strewn and piled in a trench at least six feet deep, only one more horror is added in contemplating the inadequacy of an inspection made from the rim of a ditch as to whether life in the dark ground below was extinct or not. that an executee could only seem to be dead because of shock or temporary unconsciousness. In such case it was inevitable he would be buried alive.

aimed at the heads of the victims. If, he explains, the victim was not hit, then one member of the firing squad approached with his rifle to a distance of three paces and shot again. The scene of the victim watching the head-hunter approaching with his rifle and shooting at him at three paces represents a horror for which there is no language. lie down on the ground, and they were shot in the back of the neck. But, whatever the method, it was always considered honorable, it was always done in a humane and military manner. Defendant after defendant emphasized before the Tribunal that the requirements of militariness and humaneness were meticulously met in all executions. Of course, occasionally, as one defendant described it, "the manner in which the executions were carried out caused excitement and disobedience among the victims, so that the kommandos were forced to restore order by means of violence", that is to say, the victims were beaten. Undoubtedly always, of course, in a humane and military manner. Commenting on this phase of the executions, one defendant related how some victims, destined to be shot in the back, turned around and bravely faced their executioners but said nothing. Almost invariably they went to their end silently, and some of the defendants commented on this. The silence of the doomed was mysterious, it was frightening. What did the executioners expect the victims to say? Who could find the words to speak to this unspeakable assault on humanity, this monstrous violence upon the dignity of life and being? They were silent. There was nothing to say. not be performed publicly, but should always take place far removed from the centers of population. The tragecy of this scene is lost entirely on the executioner. He does his job as a job. So many persons are to be killed, just as a carpenter contemplates the construction of a shed. He must consider the material he has on hand, the possibilities of rain, etc. Only by psychologically adjusting oneself to such a state of affairs can one avoid a shock when one comes to a statement in a report very casually written, namely: "Until now, it was very difficult to carry out executions because of weather conditions." the winter of 1941-42, remarks:

JUDGE SPEIGHT: Adolf Ruebe, a former SS-Hauptscharfuerher, declared in an affidavit that now and then there were executioners who devised original methods for killing their victims:

"On the occasion of an exhumation in Minsk, in Novem kommando of Latvians.

children were to be executed with the men so that Jews, Gypsies and so-called asocials would be exterminated for all time. In this respect, the Einsatzgruppen leaders encountered a difficulty they had not anticipated. Many of the enlisted men were husbands and fathers, and they winced as they pulled their triggers on these helpless creatures who reminded them of their own wives and off-spring at home. In this emotional disturbance they often aimed badly and it was necessary for the kommando leaders to go about with a revolver or carbine, firing into the moaning and writhing forms. This was hard on the executioners, personnel experts reported to the RSHA in Berlin, and to relieve their emotional sensitivity, gas vans were sent to the rescue. otherwise externally resembled family trailers. Women and children were lured into them with the announcement that they were to be resettled and that they would meet their husbands and fathers in the new place. Once inside the truck, the doors automatically and hermetically closed, the driver stepped on the accelerator, and monoxide gas from the engine streamed in. By the time the van reached its destination, which was an anti-tank ditch outside the town, the occupants were dead. And here they joined their husbands and fathers who had been killed by rifles and carbines in the hands of the Einsatzkommandos. image of these murder wagons, they were simply articles of equipment so far as the Einsatzgruppen were concerned. Communications went back and forth, correspondence was written about these vans with the casualness which might accompany a discussion on coal trucks. For instance, on May 16, 1942, SS-Untersturmfuehrer Dr. Becker, wrote SSObersturmbannfuehrer Rauff, pointing out that vans could not be driven in rainy weather because of the danger of skidding.

He, therefore, posed the question as to whether executions could not be accomplished with the vans in a stationary position. However, this suggestion offered a problem all its own. If the van was not actually set for mobility the victims would realize what was about to happen to them, and this, Becker said, must be avoided so far as possible. He thus recommended: "There is only one way left. To load them at the collecting point and to drive them to the spot". Becker then complained that members of the kommando should not be required to unload the corpses:

"I brought to the attention of the commanders of those S.K. concerned, the immense psychological injuries and after each unloading."

Becker says:

"The application of gas usually is not undertaken correct ly.

In order to come to an end as fast as possible, the driver presses the accelerator to the fullest extent.

By asleep peacefully."

Service Ostland wrote the RSHA in Berlin as follows:

"Subject: S-Vans "The three S-vans which are there are not sufficient for that purpose.

I request assignment of another S-van (5 tons). At the same time I request the shipment of 20 gas hoses for the three S-vans on hand (2 Diamond, 1 Saurer), since the ones on hand are leady already". that the Einsatz authorities now even set up a school in this new development of the fine art of genocide.

The defendant Biberstein, describing one of these ultra-modern executions, spoke of the driver Sackenreuter of Nuremberg "who had been most carefully instructed about the handling of the gas truck, having been through special training courses". Biberstein was satisfied that this method of killing was very efficient because the faces of the dead people were "in no way distorted"; death having come "without any outward signs of spasms". He added that no physician was present to certify that the people were dead because "this type of gas execution guaranteed certain death". Who it was that guaranteed this was not vouchsafed to history.

power, driven to the field of action. The reports tell of two vans which travelled from Berlin to the Crimea. It would be interesting to know the thoughts of the drivers of these murder-cars as they rolled over half of Europe, through city and country, climbing mountains and penetrating plains, travelling 2,000 kilometers with their gaseous guillotines to kill helpless women and children. One of the drivers was none other than the chauffeur of the arch-murderer Reinhardt Heydrich. a few excerpts and yet there remains the instinct to disbelieve, to question, to doubt. There is less of a mental barrier in accepting the weirdest stories of supernatural phenomena, as, for instance, water running up hill and trees with roots reaching toward the sky, than in taking at face value these narratives which go beyond the frontiers of human cruelty and savagery. Only the fact that the reports from which we have quoted came from the pens of men within the accused organizations can the human mind be assured that all this actually happened. The reports and the statements of the defendants themselves verify what otherwise would be dismissed as the product of a disordered imagination. The record reveals that investigators and evidence analysts have checked and rechecked. Being human they sometimes doubted the correctness of the startling figures appearing in the reports.

Thus, when one of them came across the statement of Stahlecker that Einsatzgruppe A, of which he was chief, had killed 135,000 human beings in four months, the investigator questioned Otto Ohlendorf if this were possible. Ohlendorf read the statement in question and announced:

"I have seen the report of Stahlecker (Document L-180) the first four months of the program.

I know Stahl document is authentic."

How can all this be explained? Even when Germany was retreating on all fronts, many troops sorely needed on the battlefield were diverted on this insane mission of extermination. In defiance of military and economic logic incalculable manpower was killed off, property of every description was destroyed - all remained unconsidered as against this insanity to genocide.

Here and there a protest was raised. The SS-Commissioner General for White Ruthenia objected to the executions in his district - not on the grounds of humanity, but because he believed the unbridled murder program was lowering the prestige of Germany.

"Above all, any act lowering the prestige of the Ruthenia with methods of that sort.

action. It told of the arrival of a Police Battalion with instructions to liquidate all Jews in the town of Sluzk within two days. The Commissioner for the Territory of Sluzk protested that the liquidation of all Jews, which naturally included the tradesmen, would shut down the economic life of that area.

He asked, at least, for postponement of the executions. The Lieutenant in charge of the battalion refused to wait. The report continues:

"For the rest, as regards the executions of the action, bordered already on sadism.

The town itself offered a picture of horror during the action.

Yet, many vehicles loaded with ammunition for the armed forces were left standing in the streets of Sluzk because the Jewish drivers, already illegally forced into this service, had been liquidated by the Execution Battalion. Although the very life of the nation depended on the continued operation of every type of food-producing establishment, 15 of the 26 specialists at a cannery were shot. The Commissioner General inquired of the Reich Minister of Occupied Eastern Territories if the liquidation of Jews in the East was to take place without regard to the economic interests of the Wehrmacht and specialists in the armament industry. The Reich Minister replied:

"Clarification of the Jewish question has most likely unconsidered in the settlement of the problem."

This Tribunal came into being under the provisions of that Law, but while the Tribunal derives its existence from the authority indicated, its jurisdiction over the subject matter results from International Law valid long prior to World War II. to this case. In view of their representations and the gravity of the case itself, the various phases of the law will be discussed with more detail than perhaps ordinarily the situation might require. and impartial trial, which the Tribunal has endeavored throughout the long proceedings to guarantee to than in every way. The precept that every man is presumed innocent until proved guilty has held and holds true as to each and every defendant. The other equally sanctified rule that the Prosecution has the burden of proof and must prove the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt has been, and is, assured. began on September 29. The Prosecution required but two days to present its case in chief because its evidence was entirely documentary. It introduced in all 253 documents. 136 days transpired in the presentation of evidence in behalf of the defendants, and they introduced, in addition to oral testimony, 731 documents. The trial itself was conducted in both English and German and was recorded steno graphically and in both languages.

The transcript of the oral testimony consists of more than 6,500 pages. An electric recording of all proceedings was also made. Copies of documents introduced by the Prosecution in evidence were served on the defendants in the German language. tely in the latter part of the Opinion, but since many items of defense, especially in argumentation, are common to more than one of the defendants they will be discussed collectively to avoid repitition during the individual treatments. It is to be emphasized that the general discussion and collective description of acts or defenses of defendants need not apply to each and every defendant in the box. Any general reference will necessarily apply to a majority of them but that majority need not always consist of the same persons. As already stated, the individual treatments will appear at the end.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will now be in recess until 1:45.

(A recess was taken until 1345 hours.)

(The Tribunal reconvened at 1345 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Dixon will continue with the reading of the Judgment.

JUDGE DIXON: different headings and will be discussed in that order by the Tribunal: Jurisdiction, Self Defense and Necessity, Superior Orders and Non-Involvement.

The substantive provisions of Control Council Law No. 10 which are pertinent in this case, read as follows:

Art. II, 1. (b) War Crimes. Atrocities or of (c) Crimes against Humanity.

(d) Membership in categories of a 2. Any person without regard to nation of this Article, ifhe was (a) a principle or (b) was an accessory same or (c) took a consenting part therein or (d) was connected with commission or (e) was a member of crime or (f) with reference to paragraph 1 (a), if he held a high political, civil or military (in cluding General Staff) position in such country."

Control Council Law No. 10 was attacked by Defense Counsel at the beginning of the trial, at the end of the trial, and even after all evidence and documentation had been received and arguments closed. In a motion filed February 20, 1948, counsel renewed their representations that this law was inapplicable to the instant case because of the fact that Russia, on August 23, 1939. signed a secret treaty with Germany agreeing to a division of Poland. In the argument supporting their motion, Counsel do not dwell on the fact that in signing the agreement with in Russia, Germany naturally became a party to the very transaction involved. However, in spite of this very definite concurrence by Germany in Russia's acts, insofar as they arose out of the so called secret agreement, Defense Counsel submitted that Russia disqualified herself from membership in the Allied Control Council and that, therefore, any agreement reached with her as one of the signatory powers must necessarily be void. The argument is wholly lacking in merit. was fully considered and decided by the International Military Tribunal in its decision of September 30,1946:

" The Tribunal is fully satisfied by the humanity."

precipiatated, as the International Military Tribunal pointed out, a global war whose effects are visible today throughout the world. The legal consequences drawn from the International Military Tribunal     may not be altered by the assertion that someone else may also have been at fault.

At the final argument* in the case various Defense counsel spoke of international events which followed the ending of the war. It is intended as no offense to Defense Counsel to say that is would seem they are seeking to fish in troubled waters, or what they assume to be an agitated sea. Nonetheless, the Tribunal must refuse representations and arguments upon that subject. The defendants in this case stand accused of crimes which occured during the war. History's footsteps since the termination of World War II can not obliterate the blood marks of that collossal and tragic conflict. Counsel's representations, as in justice it should not, it does not follow that everything was relevant to the issue in the case. It is only by hearing an argument that one can conclusively determine its materiality or lack of materiality. However, the Tribunal now decides, after hearing and analyzing all the evidence, that discussions in this case on the ante-war relationship between Germany and Russia are Immaterial. It further decide* that representations on the post-war relationship Russia and the rest of the world are equally irrelevant. treaty with Germany prior to the Polish war, the Defense said or presented nothing in the way of evidence to overcome the well considered conclusion of the International Military Tribunal that Germany started an aggressive war against Russia.

On the basis of this finding alone, Russia's participation in the Allied Council which formulated Law No. 10 was legal and correct and in entire accordance with International Law.

Furthermore, Defense Counsel's representations in this respect have no bearing on the charges in this Indictment. They are not defending Germany as a nation in this trial. They are representing individuals accused of specific crimes under Law No. 10, which, like the Charter of the International Military Tribunal, was not an arbitrary exercise of power of the victorious nations but the expression of Internation Law existing at the time of its creation. Control Council Law No. 10 is but the codification and systemization of already existing legal principles, rules and customs. Under the title of Crimes against Humanity, these rules and customs are the common heritage of civilized peoples, and, in so far as War Crimes are concerned, they have been recognized in various International Conventions, to which Germany was a party, and they have been International Law for decades if not centuries. As far back as 1631, Grotius, in his De Jure Belle ac Pacis, wrote:

"But.....far must we be from admitting the all Right ceases in war; nor when under Bounds of Justice and Fidelity."

The German author Schaetzel, in his book "Bestrafungen nach Kriegsgebrauch, published in 1920, stated:

".....The Laws and Customs of Warfare are International Law.

The Imperial Decree (of 1899) speaks ofpunishment 'in accord authorities' (Art.

2). This shows clearly a source of law.

They are binding on in "The customs of war are substantive penal law as good as the State's penal legislation."

Law No. 10 with Latin maxim Nullem crimen sine lege, nulla peona sine lege. It is indeed fundamental in every system of civilized jurisprudence that no one may be punished for an act which was not prohibited at the time of its commission. But it must be understood that the "lex" referred to is not restricted to statutory law. Law does, in fact, come into being as the result of formal written enactment and thus we have codes, treaties, conventions, and the like, but it may also develop effectively through custom and usageand through the application of Common Law. The latter methods are no less binding than the former. The International Military Tribunal, in its decision of September 30, 1946, declared:

"International Law is not the product of a changing world."

a substantial degree and one such subject is the law of Land Warfare which includes the Law of Belligerent Occupation because belligerent occupation is incidental to warfare. The Hague Regulations, for instance, represent such a codification. Article 46 of those Regulations provides with regard to invading and occupying armies that:

"Family honor and rights, the lives of must be respected."

This provision imposed obligations on Germany not only because Germany signed signed the Hague Convention on Land Warfare, but because it had become International Law binding on all nations.

before it does not depend alone on this specific pronouncement of International Law. As already indicated, all nations have held themselves bound to the rules or laws of war which came into being through common recognition and acknowledgement.

Without exception these rules universally condemn the wanton killing of non-combatants. In the main, the defendants in this case are charged with murder. Certainly no one can claim with the slightest pretense at reasoning that there is any taint of ex post factoism in the law of murder. a question which will be determined later, but it cannot be said that prior to Control Council Law No. 10 there existed no law against murder. The killing of a human being has always been a potential crime which called for explanation. The person standing with drawn dagger over afresh corpse must, by the very nature of justice, exonerate himself. This he may well do, advancing self defense or legal authorization for the deed, or he may establish that the perpetrator of the homicide was one other than himself. killings to be called upon for an explanation -- and to whom are they to render explanation so that their innocence or guilt may be determined? Is the matter of some one million non-military deaths to be denied judicial inquiry because a Tribunal was not standing by, waiting for the apprehension of the suspects? governed the Nuremberg trials, have only provided a machinery for the actual application of international law theretofore existing. In the comparatively recent Saboteurs Case (Ex parte Quirin 317 U.S., 1, 1942) the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed that individual offenders against the rules and customs of war are amenable to punishment under the common law of nations without any prior designation of tribunal or procedure. In this connection reference may also be made to trials for piracy where, going back centuries, the offenders, regardless of nationality, were always tried in the arresting state without any previous designation of tribunal.

of the rules of land warfare outlined in the Hague Convention, even though the Convention is silent on the subject of courts. The International Military Tribunal speaking to this subject said:

"The law of war is to be found not ticed by military courts."

All civilized nations have at times used military courts. Who questions that Prussia during the Franco-Prussian war and Germany during World War I and World War II utilized military courts to try subjects of other nations charged with violating the rules and laws of war? diction over individuals in its actual custody charged with violation of international law. And if a single nation may legally take jurisdiction in such instances, with what more reason may a number of nations agree, in the interest of justice, to try alleged violations of the international code of war? one would be so bold as to suggest that what occurred between Germany and Russia from June 1941 to May 1945 was anything but war, and, being war, that Russia would not have the right to try the alleged violators of the rules of war on her territory and against her people. And if Russia may do this alone, certainly she may concur with other nations who affirm that right.

Thus, Russia'a participation in the formulation of Control Council Law No. 10 is in accordance with every recognized principle of international law, and any attack on that participation is without legal support. The Tribunal also inds and concludes that Control Council Law No. 10 is not only in conformity with International Law but is in itself a highly significant contribution to written International Law.

from International Law do not apply to individuals. It is a fallacy of no small proportion that international obligations can apply only to the abstract legal entities called States. Nations can act only through human beings, and when Germany signed, ratified and promulgated the Hague and Geneva Conventions, she bound each one of her subjects to their observance. Many German publications made frequent reference to these international pledges. The 1942 edition of the military manual edited by a military judge of the Luftwaffe, Dr. Waltzog, carried the following preface:

"Officers and noncoms have, before taking Law.

Every troop leader has been con questions such as the following:

Am I entitled to take hostages; How do I have to behave if bearing a flag of truce;with a franctireur; What may I do as a permitted ruse of war; What may I requisition; What is, in turn, already looting and, therefore, forbidden;lays down his arms; How should enemy and after they have landed?"

An authoritative collection of German Military Law ("Das gesamte Deutsche Wehrrecht"), published since 1936 by two high government officials, with an introduction by Fieldmarshal von Blomberg, then Reich War Minister and Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces, carried in a 1940 supplement this important statement:

"The present war has shown, even more tries to cause confusion; this is are binding on the German conduct of war."

imposed by International Law in his very paybook which carried on the first page what was known as "The Ten Commandments for Warfare of the German Soldier". Article 7 of these rules provided specifically:

"The civilian populations should not be "The soldier is not allowed to loot or to destroy."

for their clients, several defense counsel have submitted that this trial in effect represents a trial of the victors over the vanquished. This objection dissolves so quickly under a serious glance that one wonders if it was presented reflectively. In the first place, the defendants are not being tried in any sense as "vanquished individuals" any more than it is to be assumed that a person taken into custory by police authorities is to be regarded as a "vanquished person". Wars are fought between nations as such and not between individuals as such. In war there is no legal entity such as a "defeated individual" just as there is no judicial concept of a "victorious individual". The defendants are in court not as members of a defeated nation but because they are charged with crime. They are being tried because they are accused of having offended against society itself, and society, as represented by international law, has summoned them for explanation. The doctrine that no member of a wronged community may try an accused would for all practical spell the end of justice in every country. It is the essence of criminal justice that the offended community inquires into the offense involved. the Tribunal in this particular phase of the case, as in all phases, reference is made to the speech by Mr. Justice Jackson in the International Military Tribunal trial in which he said:

"We must summon such detachment and to posterity as fulfilling humanity's aspirations to do justice."

Tribunal says at the termination of the current trial.

Dr. Aschenauer, speaking for the defendant Ohlendorf and such others whose cases fall within the general pattern of the Ohlendorf defense, declared that the majority of the defendants committed the acts with which they are charged -

"(a) In presumed self defense on behalf of a third party.

(Putativnothilfe is the language).(b) Under conditions of presumed necessity danger, (so-called 'Putativnotstand')." committing the acts charged to them, acted in self defense for the benefit of a third party, the third party being Germany.

In developing this theme of defense for Germany, Dr. Aschenauer insisted that this Tribunal apply his interpretation of Soviet Law. One can not avoid noting the paradox of the defendant's invoking the law of a country whose jurisprudence, ideologies, government and social system were all declared antagonistic to Germany, and which very laws, ideologies, government and social system the defendants, with the rest of the German armed forces, had set out to destroy. However, it is the prerogative of Defense Counsel to advance any argument whichhe deems appropriate in behalf of his client and the fact that Dr. Aschenauer considers Soviet Law more modern than German Law cannot fail to be interesting.

"It has thus achieved the aim which the at for a long time.

Acts of necessity are not he averted by any other means."

be allowed unilaterally to abrogate the laws and customs of war. And it takes no great amount of foresight to see that with such facile disregarding of restrictions, the rules of war would quickly disappear. Every belligerent could find a reason to assume that it had higher interests to protect. As untenable as is such a proposition, Dr. Aschenauer goes even further:

"If the existence of the State or of may act for their protection."

Norway and there kill a Norwegian on the basis that he, the Abyssinian, was motivated only by the desire to protect his country from an assumed aggression by the Norwegian.

And that is not all:

"An error concerning the prerequisites very least -- a mitigating circumstance."

of assumed necessity to protect his nation's interest, but it developed later that he killed the wrong person, he would be absolved because he had simply made a mistake. The fact that this astounding proposition is advanced in all seriousness demonstrates how desperate is the need for a further revaluation of the sacredness of life and for emphasizing the difference between patriotism and murder.

Dr. Aschenauer does not claim that the actual circumstances supported Staatsnothilfe (defense of endangered State), but he submits that this state of affairs does not render the deeds of the defendants any less legal provided the defendants assumed that conditions existed for the application of the above-mentioned legal concepts. In support of this argument he points out what he regards the objective conditions and the subjective conditions of the German-Russian war:

"The cast European Jewish problem as part of the problem of Bolshevism;origin and import of the defendants' lem 'Bolshevism versus Europe' could only be brought about by a 'solution' execution of the Fuehrer-Order."

this theory.

Dr. Aschenauer's legal position on assumed self defense has been discussed not because it corresponds with any accepted tenets of international law but only for the purpose of demonstrating that under any law the acts of his client and others falling in that category cannot by the widest stretch of the imagination be justified as an act of self defense in behalf of German. cordance with well-established rules. And there is nothing in the most elementary rules of warfare to permit the killing of enemy civilians simply because they are deemed "dangerous". But in killing, e.g., Jews, the defendants did not succor Germany from any real danger, or assumed danger. Although they declared that the Jews were bearers of Bolshevism, it was not explained how they carried that flag. Nor did any one attempt to show how, assuming the Jews to be disposed towards Bolshevism, this per so translated itself into an attack on Germany. The mere adherence to the political doctrine of Bolshevism did not of itself constitute an aggression or potential aggression against Germany.

circumstances of the German-Russian War, but in point of fact Jews were oppressed in Germany and German-occupied territory long prior to that war. The treatment of Jews by Germany and those representing the Third Reich did not depend on the German-Russian at all. The circumstance that Jews were living in Russia when the German forces invaded Russia was simply a coincidence which did not call for their annihilation. If merely being an inhabitant of Russia made that inhabitant a threat to Germany then the Einsatzgruppen would have had to kill every Russian, regardless of race.

considered as mortal enemies and subject to exeuction only those Russians who were members of the Communist party, then even according to this theory those Jews who were not members of the Communist Party should have been spared, as were those Russians who were not members of the Communist Party. The record shows, however, that when it came to a Jew, it did not matter whether he was a member of the Communist Party or not. He was killed simply because he was a Jew.

THE PRESIDENT: The presiding Judge continues with the reading of the judgment.

THE PRESIDENT: Mass killings for Ideological Reasons Dr. Reinhard Maurach, Professor Criminal Law and Eastern European Law was called by the defendant Ohlendorf to expound the international law underlying the position of the various defendants maintaining Ohlendorf's view.

Some sections o his treatise, submitted as Ohlendorf Document No. 38, supported the prosecution rather than the defense. On three occasions he condemned mass killings for ideological reasons:

"This is the place to say with special by any 'collective suspicion', of any "It has already been emphasized that "General extermination measures cannot be matter how exceptional."

First he stated that a state of war as such does not vindicae extraordinary actions, but then in a superb demonstration of legal acrobatics he declared that if the war aims of one of the opponents are total, then the opponent is vindicated in claiming self defense and state of necessity, and therefore may introduce the mass killings he had previously condemned.

fact that Germany waged an undeclared war against Russia, that Germany adduced to support the theme that, after being invaded, Russia's actions were such as to call for the executions of which the Prosecution complains. introduced. Among them were documents on the Soviet Foreign Policy, statements emanating from the Kremlin, articles from the Russian Encyclopedia, and speeches made by Stalin. All these exhibits are strictly irrelevant and might well be regarded as a red herring drawn across the trail. But the Tribunal's policy throughout the trial has been to admit everything which might conceivably elucidate the reasoning of the defense. Thus, the excerpt from Stalin's speech of July 3, 1941, quoted in Ohlendorf's document book, will be cited here:

"In the areas occupied by the enemy, trains.

Unbearable conditions must be Germany as an ordinary war.

It is not only a war between two armies.

It is at Troops."

the execution of German prisoners of war or the shooting of wounded persons, or the mass killing of Germans in German territory occupied by Russia, or anything which would justify the allegedly retaliatory killing of non-combatant Jews.

startling features is the manner in which the aggressive war conducted by Germany against Russia has been treated by the Defense as if it were the other way around. Thus, one of the Counsel in his summation speech said:

"However, as was the case in the campaign observed to the letter by this army."

izes the defense of one's country as "cowardly", and the other equally astounding remark that the invader has the right to ignore internaional law. from the charge of killing civilian populations since every Allied nation brought about the death of non-combatants through the instrumentality of bombing. Any person, who, without cause, strikes another may not later complain if the other in repelling the attack uses sufficient force to overcome the original adversary. That is fundamental law between nations as well. Germany under its Nazi rulers started an aggressive war. The bombing of Berlin, Dresden, Hamburg, Cologne and other German cities followed the bombing of London, Coventry, Rotterdam, Warsaw and other Allied cities; the bombing of German cities succeeded, in point of time, the acts discussed here.

But even if it were German cities without Germans having bombed Allied cities, there still is no parallelism between an act of legitimate warfare, namely the bombing of a city, with a concomitant loss of civilian life, and the premeditated killing of all members of certain categories of the civilian population in occupied territory.

A city is bombed for tactical purposes: communications are to be destroyed, railroads wrecked, ammunition plants demolished, factories razed, all for the purpose of impeding the military. In these operations it inevitably happens that non-military persons are killed. This is an incident, a grave incident to be sure, but an unavoidable corollary of battle action. The civilians are not individualized. The bomb falls, it is aimed at the railroad yards, houses along the tracks are hit and many of their occupants killed. But that is entirely different, both in fact and in law, from an armed force marching up to these same railroad tracks, entering those houses abutting thereon, dragging out the men, women and children and shooting them. distinction between shooting civilians with rifles and killing them by means of atomic bombs. There is no doubt that the invention of the atomic bomb, when used, was not aimed at non-combatants. Like any other aerial bomb employed during the war, it was dropped to overcome military resistance. with the usual bombs or by atomic bomb, the one and only purpose of the bombing is to effect the surrender of the bombed nation. The people of that nation, through their representatives, may surrender and, with the surrender, the surrender, the bombing ceases, the killing is ended. Furthermore, a city is assured of not being bombed by the lawabiding belligerent if it is declared an open city. With the Jews it was entirely different. Even if the nation surrendered they still were killed as individuals.

of the Jews as Jews in any way subdued or abated the military force of the enemy, it was not demonstrated how mass killings and indiscriminate slaughter helped or was designed to help in shortening or winning the war for Germany. The annihilation of defenseless persons considered as "inferior" in Russia would have had no effect on the military issue of the war. In fact, so mad were those who inaugurated this policy that they could not see that the massacre of the Jews in many instances actually hindered their own efforts. We have seen in the record that occasionally German officials tried to save Jews from extinction so that they could be forced to work for the German war effort. This would have been another war crime but at least it would not have been so immediately disastrous for the victims.

The Einsatzgruppen were out to kill "inferiors" and, first of all, the Jews. But in the documentation of the war crimes trials since the end of the war, no explanation appears as to why, from the viewpoint of the Nazis, the Jew ad to die. In fact, most of the defendants in all these proceedings have expressed a great regard for the Jew. They assert they have admired him, befriended him, and to have deplored the atrocities committed against him. It would seem they were ready to help him in every way except to save him from being killed.

The Einsatzgruppen were told at P*etzsch that "the Jews" supported Bolshevism, but there is no evidence that every Jew had espoused Bolshevism, although, even if this were true, killing him for his political belief would still be murder. As the Einsatzkommandos entered new cities and towns and villages they did not even know where to look for the Jews. They could not even be sure who were Jews. Each Einsatzkommando was equipped with several interpreters, but it became evident throughout the trial that these invading forces did not carry sufficient linguistic talent to cope with the different languages of the States, provinces and localities through which they moved. There can be no doubt that because of the celerity with which the order was executed countless non-Jews were killed on the supposition that they were Jews.

Frequently the only test applied to determine Judaism Was that of physiognomy. One supports the killing of the Jews or denounces it. If the massacres are admitted to be unsupportable and if the defendants assert that their participation was the result of physical and moral duress, the issue is clear and it becomes only a question of determining how effective and oppressive was the force exerted to compel the reluctant killer. If, however, the defendants claim that the killing of the Jews was justified, but this claim does not commend itself to human reason and does not meet the requirements of law, then it is inevitable that the defendants committed a crime. defenses, and it is the duty of the court to consider them all. But it is evident that the insistence on the part of the defendants that the massacres were justified because the Jews constituted an immediate danger to Germany inevitably weakens the argument that they acted only under duress exerted on them personally; and in turn, the "personal duress" argument enfeebles the "danger to Germany" argument. In two or three instances an attempt was made to show that the Jews in Russia held a high percentage of official positions, a percentage disproportionate to the size of the Jewish population. This was the most common theory utilized in Germany for the oppression and persecution of the Jews. By adducing the same excuse here the defendants involved acknowledged they were putting into physical effect in Russia an antipathy and prejudice already entertained in Germany against the Jewish race. There was no duty and certainly no right on the part of the defendants to go into Russia to equalize the official positions according to the proportion between Jews and non-Jews.

Defense Counsel Dr. Mayer admitted that the Fuehrer-Order violated the recognized laws and customs of war, but urged that Russia was not entitled to protection under international law.

Apart from the fact that Russia was a party to the Hague Convention of Land Warfare -- in fact, the Hague conference of 1899 was initiated by Russia -- the International Military Tribunal pointed out that the rules of the Hague Regulations have become delcaratory of the Common Law of War. It further disposed of the objection by quoting approvingly from the memorandum issued by the German Admiral Canaris on September 15, 1941, in which he declared that it is contrary to military tradition, regardless of treaty or lack of treaty -

"To kill or injure helpless people."

Dr. Mayer also said, taking the same line as Dr. Maurach:

"If this war was not an unjustified orders given by Hitler."

If Dr. Mayer means this, he collides head-on with a res judicata. The International Military Tribunal, after studying countless documents and hearing numerous direct witnesses of and participants in the event itself, declared:

"The plans for the economic exploita shadow of legal excuse.

It was plain aggression."

of Germany, the genocide program was in no way connected with the protection of the Vaterland, it was entirely foreign to the military issue. Thus, taking into consideration all that has been said in this particular phase of the defense, the Tribunal concludes that the argument that the Jews in themselves constituted an aggressive menace to Germany, a menace which called for their liquidation in self defense, is untenable as being opposed to all facts, all logic and all law.

THE PRESIDENT: New headings. killings which are the subject of this trial, plead that they were under military orders and, therefore, had no will of their own. As intent is a basic prerequisite to responsibility for crime, they argue that they are innocent of criminality since they performed the admitted executions under duress, that is to say, Superior Orders. The defendants formed part of a military organization and were, therefore, subject to the rules which govern soldiers. It is axiomatic that a military man's first duty is to obey. If the defendants were soldiers and as soldiers responded to the command of their superiors to kill certain people, how can they be held guilty of crime? This is the question posed by the defendants. The answer is not a difficult one. A soldier is a reasoning agent. He does not respond, and is not expected to respond, like a piece of machinery. It is a fallacy of wide-spread consumption that a soldier is required to do everything his superior officer orders him to do. A very simple illustration will show to what absurd extreme such a theory could be carried. If every military person were required, regardless of the nature of the command, to obey unconditionally, a sergeant could order the corporal to shoot the lieutenant, the lieutenant could order the sergeant to shoot the captain, the captian could order the lieutenant to shoot the colonel, and in each instance the executioner would be absolved of blame. The mere statement of such a proposition is its own commentary. The fact that a soldier may not, without incurring unfavorable consequences, refuse to drill, salute, exercise, reconnoiter, and even go into battle, does not mean that he must fulfill every demand put to him. In the first place, an order to require obedience must relate to military duty. An officer may not demand of a soldier, for instance, that he steal for him.

And what subordinate is not required to do.

Even if the order refers to a offense.

If the nature of the ordered act is manifestly beyond the scope of the superior's authority, the subordinate may not plead ignorance to the criminality of the order.

is that a German soldier must obey orders though the heavens fall. The statement has become legendary. The facts prove that it is a myth.

When defendant Seibert was on the stand, his attorney asked him:

"Witness, do you remember a proverb said out of orders by soldiers?"

And the defendant replied:

"I do not know whether it was William I Emperor used the expression, 'If the to shoot his own parents'." such an order, he would execute it.

To the surprise of everybody he replied that he did not know. He declined to answer until he should have time to consider the problem. The Tribunal allowed him until the next morning to deliberate, and then the following ensued:

"Q. Now, if in accordance with this declara would you do so?

A. I would not do so.

Q. Then there are some orders which are isued by the Chief of State which may be disobeyed?

A. I did not regard this as an order by the a son to shoot his own parents.

I imagine it only as follows, Your Honor:

if I am an this village.

This is the only way in which Q. ..So. therefore, if you received such an order to obey it?

You would not obey it?

A. I would not have obeyed such an order.

Q. Suppose the order came down for you to us say, a Jew and his wife.

And in your ents.

Now, it is established beyond any absolutely guiltless, belmishless.

And you have this order Would you shoot the parents?

A. I would not shoot these parents."

Then, in summing up, the witness was asked:

"And, therefore, as a German officer, obey that order?"

And the answer was:

"I answered your example affirmatively, I said 'Yes, I could not have obeyed'."Although Defense Counsel's query intended to establish the utter helplessness of a German soldier in the face of a superior command, the inquiry finally resulted in the defendant's declaring that he would not only ignore the order of the supreme war lord to shoot his own parents, but also to shoot anybody else's parents.

He thus demonstrated that under his own interpretation of German Mlitary Law, he did have some choice in the matter of obeying Superior Orders. Why then did he participate in the execution of the parents of other people? Why did other defendants do the same if they had a choice, as the defendant Seibert indicated?

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Speight will continue with reading of the judgment.

JUDGE SPEIGHT: Subject: rance of their illegality. The sailor who voluntarily ships on a pirate craft nay not be heard to answer that he was ignorant of the probability he would be called upon to help in the robbing and sinking of other vessels.

He who willingly joins as illegal enterprise is charged with the natural development of that unlawful undertaking What SS man could say that he was unaware of the attitude of Hitler toward Jewry? in its 25 point program, which was never changed, its opposition to Jews and declared that a JEw could never be an equal citizen. Mein Kampf was dedicated to what may be called the "Master Race" theory, the doctrine of Aryan superiority over all other races. When the Nazis seized power in 1933, persecution of the Jews became an official state policy. Then in September 1935 came the well-known Nuremberg Laws which among other thin s deprived the Jews of German citizenship.

Mein Kampf was not a private publication. Its brazen voice rang throught Germany. One passage Was proclaimed over and over:

"The soil on which we now live was not fathers.

They had to conquer it by risking their lives.

So also in the of a triumphant sword."

the Jews. "Der Stuermer" and other publications spread the verbal poison of race hatred. Nazi leaders everywhere vilified the Jews, holding them up to public ridicule and contempt. In November 1938 an SS inspired and organized hoodlumism fell upon the Jews of Germany: synagogues were destroyed, prominent Jews were arrested and imprisoned, a collective fine of one billion marks was imposed, ghettos Were established, and now the Jews were compelled on orders of the Security Police to wear a yellow star on their breast and back.

Did the defendants not know of these things? Could they express surprise when, after this unbroken and mounting program of violence, plans were formulated for the "final solution of the Jewish problem"? extermination program or, if they did, they were not in accord with the sentiments therein expressed.

But again, a man who sails under the flag of skull and cross-bones cannot say that he never expected to fire a cannon against a merchantman.

When Bach Zelewski, SS General and many years member of the Party, was asked to explain the phenomenon of the Einsatzgruppen killings, he replied:

"I am of the opinion that when, for years, decades, the doctrine is preached that the Slav race is an inferior race, and Jews not even human, then such an outcome is inevitable." was not criminal. Although this proposition is at first blush opposed to all common sense, contrary to natural human reactions and out of harmony with the rudimentary law of cause and effect, yet it has been presented seriously by the defendants and in fact constitutes the major item of defense. Therefore, it cannot simply be dismissed as intolerable; reasons must be advanced as to why it is intolerable. of all grey-eyed people, regardless of age, sex or position. So long as the iris of the eyes responded to those light rays in the spectrum which make up grey, the possessor of such eyes was estined for evil days. Character, occupation and health could not influence nor could religion, politics and nationality alter the predetermined doom. The farmer at his plow, the teacher at her desk, the doctor at the bedside, the preacher in his pulpit, the old woman at her knitting, the children playing in the yard, the cooing infant at the mother's breat -- would all be condemned to death, if they saw the wondering world through the tell-tale grey eyes. a family, whose members, because of that unfathomable selection of life's chemicals and inscrutable mixing in the mystic alembic of time, all have grey eyes. Suddenly comes a thunderous knocking and the door bursts open. Steel-helemeted troopers storm in and with automatic guns and drawn pistol order the dismayed occupants into the street.

faces of mother and sister, the biting of lips of the helpless father and brother, the wild tramping of the invaders' boots through the house, the overturning of furniture, the smashing into cupboards, attics, wardrobes seeking out the hidden, horrified Grey-Eyed. The tearful farewell to home, the piling into the waiting truck of the pitiful family possessions, the bewildered mounting of the doomed Grey-Eyes. The truck rumbles forward, stops to pick up other Grey-Eyes and still more GreyEyes in the market square, at the corner store, in the parish church. are waiting chalk-faced, mute, staring at each other. The unloading of the truck, the guttural command to line up with the others. Then the red-mouthed machine rifles speaking their leaden sentences from left to right and from right to left. The villagers falling, some cut in two, others with blood flowing from their mouths and eyes, those grey eyes, pleading for understanding, for an explanation as to why? why? Others only wounded but piled into a ditch already dug behind them. The shooting party rides away, piteous hands uplift from the uncovered grave, we hear a moaning which, at times, decreases to a murmur, then mounts to a wail, then ceases altogether. and incredible than what has happened innumerable times in this very case. If one substitutes the word Jew for Grey-Eyed, the analogy is unassailable. ordered to kill the grey-eyed population, they would have balked and found no difficulty in branding such an act as a legal and moral crime. If, however, fifteen years before, the Nazi Party program had denounced all grey-eyed people and since then the defendants had listened to Hitler vituperating against the Grey-Eyes, if they had seen shops smashed and houses destroyed because Grey-Eyes had worked and lived there; if they had learned of Himmler's ordering all Grey-Eyes into concentration camps, and then had heard speeches in Pretzsch wherein the mighty chieftains of the SS had declared that all Grey-Eyes were a menace to Germany -- if this had happened, can we be so certain that the defendants would not have carried out a Fuehrer-Order against grey-eyed people?

And in that event, would there not have been the same defense of Superior Orders? did not come to pass, the defendants can denounce, as we assume they would, this hypothetical massacre, how can they less denounce a slaughter which did occur and under circumstances no less harrowing than the one pictured only for the purpose of illustration? it was entirely different with the Jews. They were bearers of Bolshevism. If that was their guilt, then the fact that they were Jews was only incidental. They were being exterminated not because of Judaism but because of Bolshevism. If by that argument they mean that a Jew was to be executed only because he was a Bolshevik, why was it to be assumed that a Russian Jew was any more bolshevistic than a Russian Russian? Why should Alfred Rosenberg, chief Nazi philosopher, be less inclined biologically to Communism than his obscure Jewish namesake and neighbor? What saved Benjamin Disraeli, leader of the Conservative Party and several times prime minister of Great Britain, from being a Bolshevist? And had he lived in 1941, would Hitler have declared him a carrier of Bolshevism? simply destined to be Bolshevistic, but it is a demonstrable truism that, if the einsatzkommandos themselves had adopted Jewish babies, those babies would have grown up to be staunch SS men. In point of fact, during the war, thousands of Czech, polish, Russian, and Yugoslav children were taken into Germany to be reared as Germans. No one knows how many Jewish offspring were included in these carloads of kidnapped children because it was seriously assumed that so long as they were blonds they could not belong to the hated race.

written by one of the defendants in which he quoted from Heydrich:

"Many of the Jews listed in your register are already known for continually trying to deny that they belong to the Jewish race by all possible and impossible reasons. It is, on the whole, in the nature of the matter that half-breeds of the first degree in particular try at every opportunity to deny that they are Jews.

"You will agree that in the third year of the war, there are matters of more importance for the war effort, and for the Security Police and the Security Service as well, than worrying about the wailing of Jews, making tedious investigations and preventing so many of my co-workers from other and much more important tasks. If I started scrutinizing your list at all, I only did so in order to refute such attacks by documents once and for all.

" I feel sorry to have to write such a justification six-and-ahalf years after the Nuremberg Laws were issued. The defendant noted in his letter his enthusiastic accord with the sentiments expressed by Heydrich and added on his own that consideration for the Jews was "softness and Humanitarian day-dreaming". He also declared that it was unthinkable that a German should listen to Mendelssohn's music, and, to hearken to Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffman", simply revealed ignorance of National Socialistic ideals. Yet, he saw nothing unidealistic about invading the office of his superior, the General Commissioner of White Ruthenia, trained in the same school of Nazi idealism, entered a complaint against the defendant's action, not because seventy innocent human beings had been killed but because a subordinate had dared to come into his office and shoot his Jews without telling him about it. the propriety and correctness of removing gold fillings from the teeth of the Jews designated for killing.

obvious, but perhaps it is not so obvious. Otherwise the arguments by and on behalf of the defendants might not have been presented with such insistence. Furthermore, this is the time and place to settle definitively, insofar as it is part of the issue in this trial, the business of the so-called Jewish problem. to be considered on either side. But what in Nazi Germany was so delicately called the "Jewish problem", was a program, that is, an antiJewish program of opporession leading finally to extermination. The socalled Jewish problem was not a problem but a fixation based upon the doctrine that a self-styled "master-race" may exterminate a race which it considers inferior. Characterizing the same proposition as the "Jewish meance " is equally devoid of sense. In fact, if it were not so tragic, the National Socialistic attitude toward the Jews could only be considered nonsensical. the Crimea. In the same area they came across a sect known as Karaimians. The Karaiminas resembled the Krimtschaks in that they shared the same Jewish religion. However, the ethnic experts in Berlin after some kind of study, concluded that the Karaiminas had no Jewish blood in their veins and were, therefore, exempt from the extermination order. Thus, although the Karaimians had Jewish religion in their souls, they did not have that kind of corpuscles in which the seeds of Bolshevism ride. Hence they had the right to live. If one can picture an einsatz unit rounding up the worshippers in a synagogue and distinguishing the Karaiminas from the Krimtschaks, releasing the former and killing the latter, one is privileged to decide whether the Nazi attitude toward Jewry was not something which could well fall into the category of nonsense, that is, tragic nonsense. with Hebrew arteries. Although any other person could change his religion, politics, allegiance, nationality, yet, according to the National Socialist ideology, there was nothing the Jew could do.

It was a matter of blood, but no one has testified as to the omniscient wisdom which counted and evaluated the offending corpuscles.

PRESIDING JUDGE: We will now take a recess of 15 minutes.

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Speight continues with the reading of the Judgment.

JUDGE SPEIGHT: One thing can be said about the Fuehrer Order. It was specific, it was unambiguous. All Jews were to be shot. And yet, despite the unambiguity of this order, in wpite of the unappealable and infallible pronunciamento that Jews were absolutely outside the pale, defendant after defendant related his great consideration for the Jew. Scores of affidavits were submitted, in behalf of nearly all the accused, demonstrating their generous conduct towards some individual Jews in Germany. One of the defendants related, in a pre-trial interrogation, how he had even lived with a Jewish woman. He wished to prove by this that he was entirely devoid of prejudice. equals in Germany, why did they consider them sub-human in Russia? If they did not recognize them as a potential danger in Germany, why should they regard them as a threat in the Crimea 2,000 miles away? It is not too much to say that most of the Jews did not know of Hitler and his doctrines until the Einsatzgruppen arrived to kill them. systematic attempts to destroy the graves of the slain as described in official German documents are interesting in that they shed some light on the mental attitude of the executioners. Did they regard the executions as culpable acts, ocular evidence of which should be destroyed? The defendant Blobel in his affidavit, signed June 18, 1947, stated that in June 1942 he was entrusted by Gruppenfuehrer Mueller with the task of removing the traces of the executions carried out by Einsatzgruppen in the East. He leaves nothing to the imagination:

"I muself witnessed the burning of corpses in a mass grave near Kiew, during my visit in August.

This grave was about 55 m long, 3 m wide, and 2 1/2 deep.

When the cover set on fire.

It took about two days for the grave to burn down.

I myself saw that the grave became red-hot right down to the ground.

After the grave was filled "Owing to the approach of the front, it was not possible gruppen."

out the incriminating evidence of the killings, that he even tried to destroy the corpses by means of dynamite. Rudolf Hoess, Commandant of the Auschwitz concentration camp, who supervised these experimentations, stated that the dynamiting method was not successful:

"Blobel constructed several experimental ovens and used wood and gasoline as fuel.

He tried to destroy the corpses by means of dynamiting them, too; this method was rather unsuccessful."

Hence other means were used:

"The ashes, ground to dust in a bone mill, were thrown in the vast forests around.

Staf. Blobel had the order and to eliminate them.

... The work itself was carried out ular task, were shot.

Concentration camp Auschwitz had to furnish continuously Jews for this kommando."

realizes that the act he is called upon to perform is a crime, he may not refuse its execution without incurring serious consequences, and that this, therefore, constitutes duress. Let it be said at once that there is no law which requires that an innocent man must forfeit his life or suffer serious harm in order to avoid committing a crime which he condemns. The threat, however, must be imminent, real and inevitable. No court will punish a man who, with a loaded pistol at his head, is compelled to pull a lethal lever. Nor need the peril be that imminent in order to escape punishment. But were any of the defendants coerced into killing Jews under the threat of being killed themselves if they failed in their homicidal mission?

The test to be applied is whether the subordinate acted under coercion or whether he himself approved of the principle involved in the order. If the second proposition be true, the plea of Superior Orders fails. The doer may not plead innocence to a criminal act ordered by his superior if he is in accord with the principle and intent of the superior. the execution of the illegal act, the doer may not plead duress under Superior Orders. are pooled in the planning and execution of an illegal act, the subordinate may not subsequently protest that he was forced into the performance of an illegal undertaking. act. It does not mean superiority only in rank. It could easily happen in an illegal enterprise that the captain guides the major, in which case the captain could not be heard to plead Superior Orders in defense of his crime. of the illegal order, that the order is obviously but one further logical step in the development of a program which he knew to be illegal in its very inception, he may not excuse himself from responsibility for an illegal act which could have been foreseen by the application of the simple law of cause and effect. From 1920, when the Nazi Party Program with its anti-Semitic policy was published, until 1941 when the liquidation order went into effect, the evermounting severity of Jewish persecution was evident to all within the Party and especially to those charged with its execution. One who participated in that program which began with Jewish disenfranchisement and depatriation and lead, step by step, to deprivation of property and liberty, followed with beatings, whippings, and measures aimed at starvation, may not plead surprise when he learns that what has been done sporadically, namely, murder, now is officially declared policy.

On January 30, 1939, Hitler publicly declared in a speech to the Reichstag that if war should come it would mean "the obliteration of the Jewish race in Europe". expected to anticipate what the enterprise will logically lead to. opposition of the doer must be constant. It is not enough that he mentally rebel at the time the order is received. If at any time after receiving the order he acquiesces in its illegal character, the defense of Superior Orders is closed to him. order when they first heard it. This assertion is, of course, contradicted by the other assertion made with equal insistence, and already disposed of, that the Fuehrer Order was legal because the ordered executions were needed for the defense of the Fatherland. But if they were shocked by the order, what did they do to oppose it? Many said categorically that there was nothing to do. It would be enough, in order to escape legal and moral stigmatization to show the order was parried every time there was a chance to do so. The evidence indicates that there was no will or desire to depreciate its fullest intent. When the defendant Braune testified that he inwardly opposed the Fuehrer Order, he was asked as to whether, only as a matter of salving his conscience in the multiplicitous executions he conducted, he ever released one victim. The interrogation follows:

"Q. But you did not in compliance with that order attempt woman or child?

A. I have already said that I did not search for children.

I can only say the truth. There were no exceptions, and I did not see any possibility."

if one will. But it may not be lightly charged with inefficiency. If any of these kommando leaders had stated that they were constitutionally unable to perform this cold-blooded slaughter of human beings, it is not unreasonable to assume that they would have been assigned to other duties, not out of sympathy or for humanitarian reasons, but for efficiency's sake alone. In fact Ohlendorf declared on this very subject:

"In two and a half years I had sufficient occasion order in their inner opinion.

Thus, I forbade the some of these men, and I sent some back to Germany."

by refusing cooperation with the Army. He testified that the Chief of Staff in the field said to him that if he, Ohlendorf, did not cooperate, he would ask for his dismissal in Berlin. declared that all those who could not reconcile their conscience to the Fuehrer Order, that is, people who were too soft, as he said, would be sent back to Germany or assigned to other tasks, and that, in fact, he did send a number of people including commanders back to the Reich. pointed out, but it is not enough for a defendant to say, as did Braune and Klingelhoefer, that it was pointless to ask to be released, and, therefore, did not even try. Exculpation is not so easy as that. No one can shrug off so appalling a moral responsibility with the statement that there was no point in trying. The failure to attempt disengagement from so catastrophic an assignment might well spell the conclusion that the defendant involved had no deep-seated desire to be released. He may have thought that the work was unpleasant but did it nonetheless. Even a professional murderer may not relish killing his victim, but he does it with no misgivings. A defendant's willigness may have been predicated on the premise that he personally opposed Jews or that he wished to stand well in the eyes of his comrades, or by doing the job well he might earn rapid promotion.

The motive is unimportant if he killed willingly. driving through the country, Blobel pointed out to him a long grave and said: "Here my Jews are buried." One can only conclude that Blobel was proud of what he had done. "Here my Jews are buried". Just as one might speak of the game he had bagged in a jungle. they were straight-jacketed in their obedience to Superior Orders, the majority of them have, with testimony and affidavits, demonstrated how on numerous occasions they opposed decrees and orders handed down by their superiors. In an effort to show that they were not really Nazis at heart, defendant after defendant related his dramatic clashes with his superiors. If one concentrated only on this latter phase of the defense one would conclude that these defendants were all ardent rebels against National Socialism and valiantly fought against the inhuman proposals put to them. Thus, one affiant says of the defendant Willy Seibert that he "was strongly opposed to the measures taken by the Party and the government".

Of Steimle an affiant said: "Many a time he opposed the Party agencies and so-called superior leaders." Another affidavit not only states that Steimle opposed violence but that in his zeal for justice he shrewdly joined the SD in order to be able "to criticize the shortcomings in the Party". Again it was stated that "repeatedly his sense of justice led him to oppose excesses, corruptions and symptoms of depravity by party-officers."

Of Braune an affiant states, "over and over again Dr. Braune criticized severely our policy in the occupied territories (especially in the East, Ukraine and Baltic States)". opposition to tyranny and injustice in his own camp. He bitterly opposed the Reich Kommissar Terboven, cancelled his orders, condemned large-scale operations, released hostages and freed the Norwegian State Minister Gerhardsen.

One affidavit said that in these actions "Braune nearly always went beyond his authority". And yet in spite of this open rebellion Braune was not shot or even disciplined. Why is it that in Norway he acted so differently from the manner in which he performed in Russia? Was he more the humanitarian in Norway? The answer is not difficult to find. One of the affiants very specifically states:

"Right from the beginning of our conferences, Braune Fehlis continually carried out.

He did not expect danger of increasing their spirit of resistance."

agree with them. But when they ideologically espoused an order such as the Fuehrer Order they had no interest in opposing it.

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Dixon will continue with the reading of the Judgment. German court. In 1921 two officers of the German U-boat 68 were charged with violation of the laws of war in that they fired at and killed unarmed enemy citizens seeking to escape from the sinking Hospital Ship H.M.S. Llandovery Castle. The defendants pleaded lack of guilt in that they had merely carried into effect the order given them by their commander, First Lieutenant Patzig. The German Supreme Court did find as a fact that Patzig ordered his subordinates Diethmar and Boldt to fire at the life boats, but it adjudicated them guilty nonetheless, stating:

"It is certainly to be ordered in favor of any doubt whatever against the law.

This less people.

They quickly found out the boats when these were stopped.

They could obey.

As they did not so they must be punished."

for the defense asked in behalf of their clients: What could they have done? After all, the defendants were soldiers and were required to obey orders. Ordinarily, in war, the proposition of unquestioning obedience involves a set of circumstances which subjects the subordinate to the possibility of death, wounding or capture. And it is tradional in such a situation that, in consonance with the honor of his calling, the soldier does not question or delay but sets out stoically to face the peril and even self-immolation. Lord Tennyson immortalized this type of glorious self-sacrifice when he commemorated the Cavalry Charge at Balaklava in the Crimea:

"Theirs not to make reply, Theirs but to do and die."

fate, were operating in the same Crimea and surrounding territory about one hundred years later, were not, however, facing the same situation which confronted Tennyson's Light Brigade. The einsatz battalions were not being called upon to face shot and shell.

They were not ordered to charge into the mouths of cannon. They were called upon to shoot unarmed civilians standing over their graves. one-sided a battle. No soldier could be accused of cowardice in seeking relief from a duty which was, after all, not a soldier's duty. No soldier or officer attempting escape from such a task would be pleading avoidance of a military obligation. He would simply be requesting not to be made an assassin. And if the leaders of the Einsatzgruppen had all indicated their unwillingness to play the assassin's part, this black page in German history would not have been written. relieved? They could have been less zealous in the execution of the inhuman order. Whole populations of cities, districts and wide lands were within their power. No Roman emperor had greater absolutism of decision over life and death than they possessed in their areas of operation. They were not ordered within any given town to shoot a precise number of people and a fixed number of women and children. But men like Braune could see no reason for making exceptions. to avoid the order by subterfuge, because had they done so, their successors would accomplish the task and thus nothing would be gained anyway. The defendants are accused here for their own individual guilt. No defendants knows what his successor would have done. He could possibly have also indicated his reluctance and with a succession of refusals properly submitted, the order itself might have lost its efficacy. But in any event no execution would have taken place that day. One defendant stated that to have disobeyed orders would have meant a betrayal of his people. Does he really mean that the German people, had they known, would have approved of this mass butchery? a little garden in which to grow a plant or two than the promise of vast lands beyond the horizon, will here learn how they were betrayed by their supposed champions.

Here they will also learn of the inhumanity and the oppression and the shedding of innocent blood committed by the regime founded on the Fuehrer prinzip.

In his attack on Control Counsil Law No. 10, Dr. Mayer declared that it invalidates two fundamental principles of the legal systems of all civilized nations:

"(1) The principle: nulla poena sine lege.

(2) Validity of the excuse of having acted under order."

The Tribunal has already disposed of objection number 1. Objection number 2 is no more convincing than was objection number 1. Law No. 10 does not invalidate the excuse of Superior Orders. It states:

"(b) The fact that any person acted pursuant in mitigation."

Dr. Mayer, like others, misreads this provision and substitutes for the word " crime" some other word, possibly "act". This makes the provision to read that anyone acting pursuant to the orders of his Government or superior does not free himself from responsibility for any act". But the provision specifically states "crime". Unless it is established that the deed in question is a crime then naturally there needs to be no explanation for its commission. If, however, the act is a crime then there can be no excuse for its commission. No superior can authorize a crime. No one can legalize what is demonstrated categorically and definitely to be a crime. prove that the acts of the Einsatzgruppen were not crimes, that they were acts of self defense committed in accordance with the rules of war. If, however, it is proved that they were crimes, then, naturally, the approval of another criminal would not make the acts any the less crimes.

Once it is juridically established that a certain act is a crime, then all those who participated in it, both superior and subordinates are accomplices. offense it was? Hitler was not above International Law. Let us suppose that in 1935 Hitler ordered one of his men to go to Siam and there assassinate its King. Would it be argued that the assassin in that situation would be inmmune because acting under Superior Orders? Any judicial inquiry would establish that the Siam assassin had committed a crime and the fact that he had acted in pursuance to the order of his Government or a superior could not possibly free him from responsibility for the crime. This is exactly what Control Council Law No. 10 says, and this is what the law has always said, or ever since there was International Law. goes much farther than Control Council Law No. 10. Under the German Code the subordinate may be convicted even if no crime was actually committed. It is sufficient if the order aims at the commission of a crime or offense. The German Code makes the obeying subordinate responsible even for any "civil" or "general offenses", i.e. for comparatively insignificant breaches of law which are not contemplated in the Allied law. Nor does the German Code, as contrasted to the Allied law, mention the defense of Superior Orders as a possible mitigating circumstance. of Land Warfare in support of their position on Superior Orders. The section in question, after listing various offenses against the rules of warfare, declares:

"..... Individuals of the armed forces will whose hands they may fall."

"individuals" is intended to apply to individuals who make up a military unit, that is, ordinarily, soldiers of lower rank. It applies naturally also to officers, but only provided they are serving under another officer of a higher rank. Unless one accepts this meaning the word "commanders" appearing in his second sentence would be entirely elusive as to its significance. But it is to be noted that in square juxtaposition to the men (and perhaps officers) who make up the military unit, the Article puts the "commanders" of such units; and by "commanders" is obviously meant the officers pr acting officers, in charge of any armed unit. ion, and the captain of a company, the sergeant or 2nd lieutenant may be in charge of a platoon. If the unit commander were not responsible, and the responsibility climbed upward from grade to grade, the result would be that the only one who could ever be accountable for an illegal order would be the chief executive of the nation, that is, the President, King or Prime Minister, depending on the country involved. That such singular responsibility was not intended is evidenced in the use of the plural "commanders" instead of the singular "commander". Making this meaning absolutely clear, the provision specifically mentions two types of "commanders" who are to be held responsible:

(a) commanders who order their units to commit war crimes; and (b) commanders if the troops under their authority be responsible -- whether he gives the order to commit war crimes, or whether the troops under his authority commit them at the behest of somebody else, since he has the control over the troops and is responsible for their acts.

of einsatz units, they clearly would fall within the provisions of Article 347, American Rules of Land Warfare. This Article 347 was repealed in 1944, but it has here been discussed at length because Defense Counsel made much of it, and because it was still law at the time the Einsatzgruppen were operating. Article 347, reference is made to Article 64 of the American Articles of War which announces punishment for the disobedience of any lawful command of a superior officer. Obviously if the order is unlawful he may not be punished for refusing to obey it. ted as it had been made by some legal commentators. In considering the law in this matter we must keep in mind that fundamentally there are some legal principles that stand out like oak trees. Much underbrush has grown up in the vicinity and they seem to confuse the view. But even the most casual observation will catch on the legal landscape these sturdy oaks which announce that:

1. Every man is presumed to intend the consequences of 2. Every man is responsible for those acts unless it be 3. Deciding the question of free will, all the circum impossible to read what is in a man's heart.

Dr. Aschenauer correctly referred to one of these trees in Lord Manfield's charge to the jury in Stratton's case, (1780) Howell, State Trials, Vol. 21, p. 1062-1224:

"A state of emergency is a reason for tended it.

If there is irresistible, has no volition with regard to the deed."

Was there irresistible, physical duress? Was there volition with regard to the deed? The answering of these two questions will serve as safe guides in applying the criteria herein announced in the discussion on the subject of Superior Orders. they were in no way involved in the homocidal operations of the einsatz units. These denials of participation took various forms. It was stated that the defendant, although traveling with the kommando, never learned of executions and certainly did not participate in them, it was asserted that, although the defendant participated in executions, the executees were partisans, saboteurs, looters, end the like; and it was also claimed on behalf of some of the defendants that, although they actually ordered and supervised executions, these executions always followed an investigation in the case involved. No one was shot unless he was proved guilty of a crime.

How thorough were these investigations if and when they took place? An order issuing from the Fuehrer's headquarters on June 6, 1941 -that is, 15 days before the beginning of the Russian war -- spoke of the conduct of the German forces entering Russia, One paragraph discussed the disposition of political commissars who "for the time being" were not to be executed unless they committed or were suspected of hostile acts. Then came this very significant instruction:

"As a matter of principle in deciding the be improvable."

execute a man more on his looks than on evidence. One of the defendants corroborated this practice. He was asked what he would do if he came upon a person speaking to four or five people in a room, advocating Communism but in no way opposing the Germans. The defendant replied:

"I would have got a look at the man, and if I I would have had him shot.

The actual speech cally."

He was asked further:

"So that you would listed to the speech and have him shot.

That is what we understood by your answer?"

And the reply was a categorical "Yes". quiries for the purpose of obtaining from the victim information which would enable the executioners to locate and seize other victims. For instance, the defendant Ott testified from the witness stand, as will be noted later, how arrested persons were arrested, "investigated", and shot. soldiers and that their only job was combat. But if the job with the Einsatzgruppen was strictly military, why did the High Command not send military men to do it? Why did they choose Ohlendorf who had had no military training of any kind to head a military organization? Very few of the kommando leaders had been soldiers, and the brief three or four weeks' training at Pretzsch, prior to marching into Russia, consisted only of drilling and target practice on the rifle range. It is obvious that they were being sent into Russia not as combat soldiers, but as ideological exponents. In the field they were a travelling RSHA, they were a Gestapo on wheels.

Report No. 128 describes the executions by Einsatzgruppe C of 80,000 persons and explains that 8,000 of them were "convicted of anti-German or Bolshevistic activities".

The report goes on further to say:

"Even though approximately 75,000 Jews the Jewish problem."

had achieved a complete liquidation of the "Jewish problem, and that, in the larger cities, after executions, all Jews had disappeared". It is evident from this statement that the main objective of the kommandos was to kill Jews, not partisans. United States Basic Field Manual, Rules of Land Warfare:

"If the people of a country, or any portion tection."

Dr. von Stein, however, failed to show that the people in the respective German-occupied areas took part in any uprising. On the contrary, it was the einsatz leaders who attempted to stir up popular tumult by instigating pogroms. served in Russia, he never saw a Jew, and that he never heard of the Fuehrer-Order. Although his kommando, prior to his arrival in Russia, had admittedly slaughtered thousands of Jews, no one ever told him of this nor did he ever hear of it. This is simply incredible. And, in support of this admittedly incredulous utterance, an even more extraordinary assertion was made by his attorney, namely, that Heydrich was anxious for Haensch not to know about these things since they had nothing to do with his work in Berlin. his kommando had killed 10,000 to 15,000 people, his attorney declared in a final summation that Blobel's duties were purely administrative-adding, to be sure that these administrative duties were to be interpreted in their "widest sense".

One of Blobel's administrative duties was to conduct executions. History will be his debtor for the authoritative account he rendered on mass-executions from the standpoint of the spirit and philosophy of slayer and slain. He was asked at the trial whether the doomed, as they were being led to their waiting graves, ever attempted to break away before the shots were fired. He replied that there was no resistance and this surprised him greatly. The following interrogation then occurred:

"Q. You mean that they resigned themselves easily to what was awaiting them?

A. Yes, that was the case. That was the case with these people.

Human life was not as valuable as it was with us.

They did not care so much.

They did not know Q. In other words, they went to their death quite happily?

A. I would not say that they were happy.

them. Of course, they were told what Q. And did that make the job easier for you, the fact that they did not resist?

A. In any case the guards never met any re Everything went very quietly.

It took Q. In other words, your pity was more for victims?

A. Our men had to be cared for.

Q. And you felt very sorry for them?

A. Yes, these people experiences a lot, psychologically."

Thus, to murder was added criminal impertinence. The victim is shown to be inhuman while the executioner is to be pitied. The condemned is put in the wrong and the slayer in the right. A person is robbed of his all -- his very life -- but it is the assassin who is the sufferer.

To these people "human life was not as valuable as it was to us". Thus we behold the moral supremacy of the murderer over the depravity of the massacred. "Our men who took part in the executions suffered more from nervous exhaustion that those who had to be shot." "administrative duties" of one of the leaders of the Einsatzgruppen in land not his own.

Court No. II, Case No. IX executions, explained that they had not killed any innocent persons but had merely shot partisans, to be sure, not in combat, but punitively.

This bald statement in itself does not suffice to exonerate one from a charge of unlawful killings. Article I of the Hague Regulations provides:

"The laws, rights, and duties of war ing the following conditions:

1. To be commanded by a person responsible for his 2. To have a fixed distinctive emblem recognizable 3. To carry arms openly; and 4. To conduct their operations in accordance with the laws and customs of war."

an armed civilian found in a tree top sniping at uniformed soldiers, is not such a lawful combatant, and can be punished even with the death penalty, if he is proved guilty of the offense. fighters in the war against an invading army, if they fully comply with the conditions just mentioned, can be put outside the law by the adversary. As the Hague Regulations state expressly, if they fulfill the four conditions, "the laws, rights and duties of war" apply to them in the same manner as they apply to regular armies. characterizing a person a partisan he may be shot out of hand. But it is not so simple as that. If the partisans are organized and are engaged in what International Law regards as legitimate warfare for the defense of their own country, they are entitled to be protected as combatants.

Court No. II, Case No. IX Einsatzgruppen operated, the so-called partisans had wrested considerable territory from the German occupant, and that military combat action of some dimensions was required to re-occupy those areas.

In belligerent occupation the occupying power does not hold enemy territory by virtue of any legal right. On the contrary, it merely exercises a precarious and temporary actual control. This can be seen from Article 42 of the Hague Regulations which grants certain well limited rights to a military occupant only in enemy territory which is "actually placed" under his control. to the enemy, he is not carrying out a police performance but a regular act of war. The enemy combatants in this case are, of course, also carrying out a war performance. They must, on their part, obey the laws and customs of warfare, and if they do, and then are captured, they are entitled to the status and rights of prisoners of war. in evidence in this case, show, however, that combatants were indiscriminately punished only for having fought against the enemy. This is contrary to the law of war.

THE PRESIDENT: The Presiding Judge continues with the reading.

From time to time the word "reprisals" has appeared in the Einsatzgruppen reports. Reprisals in war are the commission of acts which, although illegal in themselves, may, under the specific circumstances of the given case, become justified because the guilty adversary has himself behaved illegally, and the action is taken in the last resort, in order to prevent the adversary from behaving illegally in the future. Thus, the first prerequisite to the introduction of this most extraordinary remedy is proof that the enemy has behaved illegally. While generally the persons who become victims of Court No. II, Case No. IX the reprisal are admittedly innocent of the acts against which the reprisal is to retaliate, there must at least be such close connection between these persons and these acts as to constitute a joint responsibility.

Article 50 of the Hague Regulations states unequivocally:

"No general penalty, pecuniary or otherwise, and severally responsible."

in alleged reprisal for the killing of 21 German soldiers near Topola, were taken from concentration camps in Yugoslavia, hundreds of miles away, it is obvious that a flagrant violation of International Law occurred and outright murder resulted. That 2,100 people were killed in retaliation for 21 deaths only further magnifies the criminality of this savage and inhuman so-called reprisal.

Hyde, International Law, Vol. III, page 35, has this to say on reprisals:

"A belligerent which is contemptuous of like, lacks the requisite excuse."

or members of the population did commit acts which were in themselves unlawful under the rules of war, it would still have to be shown that these acts were not in legitimate defense against wrongs perpetrated upon them by the invader. Under International Law, as in Domestic Law, there can be no reprisal against reprisal. The assassin who is being repulsed by his intended victim may not slay him and then, in turn, plead self-defense. wrong for which they are to retaliate. The British Manual of Warfare, after insisting that reprisals must be taken only in last resorts, states:

Court No. II, Case No. IX "459.

....Acts done by way of reprisals mitted by the enemy."

Similarly, Article 358 of the American Manual states:

"(b) When and how employed:

(c) Form of reprisals:

reprisals.....should not be ex violations committed by the enemy."

quotes General Halleck on this subject:

"Retaliation is limited in extent by barous cruelty."

a great deal of space to the discussion of Count III in the Indictment. To the extent that the discussion has to do with the facts, it is welcome and helpful. So far as the law on the subject is concerned, it has been stated completely and definitively by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and therefore needs no amplification here. The International Military Tribunal declared the SS, SD and the Gestapo to be criminal organizations within the purview of the London Charter. The pertinent provisions of that Judgment declaring these organizations criminal and defining the categories of membership therein, follow:

The concept of war crimes is not a new one. From time immemorial there have existed rules, laws and agreements which kept opposing forces within bounds in the matter of the conduct of warfare, the treatment of prisoners, wounded persons, civilian noncombatants, and the like. Those who violated these rules were subject to trial and prosecution by both the country whose subjects they were and by the country whose subjects they maltreated. heretofore existed only in the heart of mankind, has now been written into the books of men as the law of Humanity. This law is not restricted to events of war. It envisages the protection of humanity at all times. The crimes against which this law is directed are not unique. They have unfortunately been occurring since the world began, but not until now were they listed as international offenses. The first count of the Indictment in this case charges the defendants with Court No. II, Case No. IX.

crimes against humanity. Not crimes against any specified country, but against humanity. Tribunal is convoked to determine why. This is not a new concept in the realm of morals, but it is an innovation in the empire of the law. Thus a lamp has been lighted in t he dark and tenebrous atmosphere of the fields of the innocent dead. tofore were enjoined only by the respective nations now fall within the prescription of the family of nations. Thus murder becomes no less murder because directed against a whole race instead of a single person. A Fuehrer-Order, announcing the death of classifications of human beings can have no more weight in the scales of international justice than the order of a highwayman or pirate.

and barbarities, a bright light shines through it all if one recalls the efforts made in the past in behalf of distressed humanity. President Theodore Roosevelt in addressing the American Congress, said in 1903:

Both methods have been used but they do not express the ideal. The former is often ineffectual and the latter achieves its benevolent objective only at further expenditure of blood. No recourse was had to law because there was no jurisprudence on the subject, nor was there any legal procedure to punish the offenders. Humanity could only plead at the doors of the mighty for a crumb of sympathy and a drop of compassion. a tribunal in which to proclaim its rights. Humanity need not plead for justice with sobs, tears, and piteous weeping. It has been de monstrated here that the inalienable and fundamental rights of common man need not lack for a court to proclaim them and for a marshal to execute the court's judgments. Humanity can assert itself by law.

It has taken on the robe of authority. Allied powers, 19 other nations expressed their adherence to that Agreement. In giving effect to the London Agreement and the Charter pursuant thereto, as well as the Moscow Declaration of October 30, 1943, the Allied Control Council formulated its Law No. 10 which treated, among other things, of crimes against humanity. Those who are indicted under this provision, however, are not responding alone to the nations which have approved the principles expressed in the London and Moscow Agreements, they are answering to humanity itself, humanity which has no political boundaries end no geographical limitations. Humanity is man itself. Humanity is the race which will go on in spite of all the fuehrers and dictators that little brains and smaller souls can elevate to platforms of tinsel poised on bastions of straw. sale and systematic violation of life and liberty. It is to be observed that insofar as international jurisdiction is concerned the concept of crimes against humanity does not apply to offenses for which the criminal code of any well-ordered State makes adequate provision. They can only come within the purview of this basic code of humanity because the State involved, owing to indifference, impotency or complicity, has been unable or has refused to halt the crimes and punish the criminals. on July 11, 1947 the Counselor of the Vatican defined crimes against humanity in the following language:

"The essential and inalienable rights of man cannot vary in time and space.

They cannot be interpreted and limited for they are essentially immutable and eternal.

Any injury...

enslavement, against the life, freedom of opinion.....the moral or physical integrity of the family.

....or the dignity family or profession, is a crime against humanity."

Charter, declared that the Charter's provisions limited the Tribunal to consider only those crimes against humanity which were committed in the execution of or in connection with crimes against peace and war crimes. The Allied Control Council, in its Law No. 10, removed this limitation so that the present Tribunal has jurisdiction to try all crimes against humanity as long known and understood under the general principles of criminal law. is also not restricted as to nationality of the accused or of the victim, or to the place where committed, while the overwhelming majority of those killed in the present case were Soviet citizens, some were German nationals. A special report prepared by Einsatzgruppe A, and previously quoted in another connection, declared:

"Since December 1940 transports containing Jews had arrived at short intervals from the Reich.

Of these ---.....all evacuated Jews who survive the winter can be put into this camp (apart of the Riga ghetto) in the Spring.

Only a small section of the Jews from the Reich is capable of working.

About 70 to 80% are women and children or old people unfit for work.

The death rate is rising continually also as a result of the extraordinary hard winter."

Where law exists a court will rise. Thus, the court of humanity, if it may he so termed, will never adjourn. The scrapping of treaties, the inditement to rebellion, the fomenting of international discord, the systematic stirring up of hatred and violence between so-called ideologies, no matter to what excesses they nay lead, will never close the court doors to the demands of euity and justice. It would be an admission of incapacity, in contradiction of every self-evident reality, that mankind, with intelligence and will, should be unable to maintain a tribunal holding inviolable the Law of Humanity, and, by doing so, preserve the human race itself. standing between himself and his neighbor. Each group of people through the ages has carried a stone for the building of a tower of justice, a tower to which the persecuted and the downtrodden of all lands, all races and all creeds may repair. In the Law of Humanity we behold the tower.

THE PRESIDENT: Judge Speight will continue.

JUDGE SPEIGHT: Subject, Simferopol. is without bitterness. It can only be deplored that all this could happen. The defendants are not untutored aborigines incapable of appreciation of the finer values of life and living. Each man at the bar has had the benefit of considerable schooling. Eight are lawyers, one a university professor, another a dental physician, still another an export on art. One, as an opera singer, gave concerts throughout Germany before he began his tour of Russia with the Einsatzkommandos. This group of educated and well-bred non does not even lack a former minister, self-unfrocked though he was. Another of the defendants, bearing a name illustrious in the world of music, testified that a branch of his family reached back to the creator of the "Unfinished Symphony", but one must remark with sorrow that it is a far cry from the Unfinished Symphony of Vienna to the finished Christmas massacre of Simferopol, in which the hapless defendant took an important part.

that the discussion of enormous atrocities was constantly interspersed with the academic titles of the persons mentioned as their perpetrators. If these men have failed in life, it cannot be said that it was lack of education which led them astray, that is, lack of formal education. there is no reason to disbelieve, came of devout parents. Some have told how they were born in the country and that, close to Nature and at their mothers' kneww, learned the virtues of goodness, charity and mercy. It could be said that the one redeeming feature about this entire sordid affair is that those virtues are still recognized. One inexperienced in the phenomena of which the human soul is capable, reading the reports of the Einsatzgruppen, could well despair of the human race. Here are crimes that defy language in the depths and vastness of their brutality. Here pitilessness reaches its nadir and nothing in Dante's imagined Inferno can equal the horror of what we have discovered happened in 1941, 1942, and 1943 in White Ruthenic, the Ukraine, Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia and the Crimea. which defied every concept of morality and conscience. One looked in on scenes of murder on so unparalleled a scale that one recoiled from the sight as if from a blast of scalding steam. of redemption. Some of the defendants called witnesses to testify to their good deeds, and practically all of them submitted numerous affidavits extolling their virtues. The pages of these testimonials fairly glitter with such phrases as "honest and truth-loving", "straight thinking and friendly manner", "industrious, assiduous and good-natured", "of a sensitive nature", "absolutely honest". fumes of the gas vans, through the unuttered last words of the one million slaughtered, the defendants have recalled the precepts gained at their mothers' knee.

Though they seemed not to see the frightful contrast between their events of the day and those precepts of the past, yet they do recognize that the latter are still desirable. Thus, the virtues have not vanished. So long as they are appreciated as the better rules of life, one can be confident of the future.

Nor are the affidavits merely subjective in praise. They point out objectively what the defendants did in attacking injustice and intolerance. In various parts of Europe (always with the exception of Russia) the Tribunal is told they occasionally interceded in behalf of oppressed populations and broke lances with the local Nazi despots. The affidavits state, for example, that Ott who enforced the FuehrerOrder from beginning to end in Russia, was all kindness and gentleness to the villagers in Gross-Bierderstroff in the Lorraine, and that Haensch, whose conduct in the East leaves much to be desired, was the epitome of charity in Denmark where the population in paeans of thanksgiving showered him "with adulatory messages and boquets of flowers. During the period that Naumann was stationed in Holland, one affiant states, Neumann befriended the Jews, got them out of concentration camps and released hostages. In face, according to one affidavit, Naumann was known as a man "with softness towards Jews." virtues which others saw in these defendants and their deeds as described by themselves? Was it the intimate companionship with evil? The poet Pope sought to describe this phenomenon in his quatrain:

"Vice is a monster of so frightful a mien, As to be hated needs but to be seen;We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

local bar apparently would seen, unwittingly, to have given an explanation. From the constant association with the case, he found himself arguing in his summation speech: "What did Schubert actually do which was criminal?" And then he outlined Schubert's actions:

"Schubert first goes to the gypsy quarter of Simferopol and sees them being loaded aboard and shipped off.

Then valuables handed over, and the shooting.

Finally he drives then returns to his office.

That is what he did." beings who happen to be Gypsies, there is no assertion anywhere that these Gypsies were guilty of anything but being Gypsies. He sees that the roads are blocked off, that the victims are loaded on trucks and taken to the scene of execution, that that their valuables are taken from them and then he watches the shooting. This is what Schubert did, and the question is asked: What is wrong about that?

There is no indication of any realization here that Schubert was taking an active part in mass murder. Counsel even goes further and says that when Schubert reported to Ohlendorf on what had happened, he stated that he saw "nothing unusual". intended as any criticism of professional conduct. It is the function of a lawyer to represent to the best of his ability his client's cause and it must now be apparent what difficulties confronted the attorneys in this case. None theless, with industry and skill, with patience and perseverance they made their presentations so that the Tribunal was not denied any fact or argument which could be submitted in behalf of the accused. Regardless of the results of the Judgment it cannot be said that the accused did not have the utmost and fullest defense. defendants spoke of religion. One related how Seibert often accompanied his mother to church. While he was in the Crimea, did he recall these visits to the house of God with his mother, and if he did, could he reconcile his activities there with the teachings of religion and of his mother? of religion on the part of any defendant is not an issue in this trial. The fact, however, that Seibert advanced his early Christian training as an item of defense is indication that he at least recognizes there is a dissimilarity between what he learned and what he later did. This affidavit is additionally interesting because it impliedly repudiates the condemnations of religion by men like Goebbels, Rosenberg, Himmler, and above all, Hitler himself, who designated the church as the only remaining unconquered ideological opponent of National Socialism, continually insulting it in speeches and pronunciamentos.

Bormann said:

"National Socialist and Christian the NSDAP must be eliminated.

More and more the people must be' separated from the churches and their organs, the pastors."

Socialism, it is interesting to note that at least ten of the defendants, according to their own statements, formally left the church of their childhood. in the year of 1941. In the early part of December the commander of the 11th Army, which was located in that area, notified the chief of Einsatzkommando 11b that the Army expected them to kill some several thousand Jews and Gypsies before Christmas. holiest days of the year, did not consternate the kommando leader, as one might expect, On the mystic chords of memory no echo sounded of the Christmas carols he had heard in childhood, nor did he recall the message of Peace on Earth and Good will Toward Men. The only impediment this kommando leader saw in the execution of the order was that he lacked enough men and equipment for so accelerated an assignment, but he would do his best. He called on the Army Quartermaster and obtained sufficient personnel, trucks, guns and ammunition to do the bloody deed, and it was done.

Death, which had been so commonplace a day or two before, presently revealed itself as vivid and frightening: It might overtake the executioners themselves. Life became sweet and precious. The kommando leader testified that the danger existed they might fall into the hands of the Russians. found themselves in the mood to celebrate their own Christmas party. Their chief, Otto Ohlendorf, made a speech on that occasion. The defendant Braun was questioned on this speech:

"Q. And did he talk on religious matters?

A. I cannot give any details of the words anymore.

I don't know whether he mentioned Christ, but I know Herr Ohlendorf's Q. What was his attitude as he delivered it in his speech?

What did he say that was of religious significance?

A. I really cannot give any details any more.

Q. Did anybody offer any prayers on Christmas Day of 1941?

of Germany and her people? Did it harmonize with the theory of moral revulsion to the Fuehrer-Order, as proclaimed by the defendants?

How far did the defendants get away from religion? It is to be repeated here that it is entirely irrelevant to the issue before the Tribunal as to whether the defendants are religious or not. They can be atheists of the first degree and yet be as innocent as the driven snow of any crime. Religion is mentioned because several of the defendants introduced the subject and their references to religion are pertinent in the evaluation of the credibility of certain testimony. the Gospel, left the church in 1938. At that time he repudiated organized religion and claims to have founded a religion of his own. This religion, he stated, was based on the love of his fellow-men. Despite his definite abandonment of the church, he states he was regarded as a clergyman by his fellow-officers and emphasized this point as a reason why he could not have committed the murders with which he is charged. He did admit to attending various executions, since according to his testimony, he still worshipped at the invisible altar of his own religion, he was asked whether he attempted to offer comfort and solace to those who were about to die. His answer was that since the Bolshevist ideology advocated the movement of atheism, "one should not throw pearls before swine". Then came the following;

"Q. Did you think that because they were Bol that they did not have souls?

A. No.

Q. You did believe they had souls then, didn't you?

A. Of course.

worthwhile to try to save these souls?

A. I had to assume that those were atheists.

Q. Well, suppose he did become ironic that that harm anyone?

A. These things are too sacred to me that I would risk them in such situations."

He was further asked:

"Do you think that you demonstrated that 'Love of fellow-men' by letting these considering that you were a Pastor?

Did you demonstrate there a 'Love of fellow-men?

'." And his answer was:

"I didn't sin against the Commandments of Love."

core of his religion was "Love of his fellow-men" and then ordered the shooting of innocent people whom he regarded as swine? Was he trustworthy when he declared that he never heard of the Fuehrer-Order until he arrived in Nuremberg? Was he credible when he announced that during all the time he was in Russia he never learned that Jews were shot because they were Jews? the weak, aided the poor and comforted the lonely and oppressed, is man's own determination, but that a minister of the Gospel, via the road of Nazism, participated in mass executions is an observation that cannot go unnoticed, When the Swatiska replaced the cross and Mein Kampf dislodged the Bible, it was inevitable that the German people were headed for disaster.

When the Fuehrerprinzip took the place of the Golden Rule, Truth was crushed and the Lie ruled with an absolutism no monarch has ever known. Under the despotic regime of the Lie, prejudice supplanted justice, arrogance cancelled understanding, hatred superseded benevolence -and the columns of the Einsatzgruppen marched. And in one of the front ranks strode the ex-minister Ernst Biberstein.

defendants' dock. At each session in this Palace of Justice, he has entered the door and quietly moved to his place among the other defendants. For over two years he has been making his entrances and exists. He never takes the witness stand, he never speaks, but he dominates every piece of evidence, his shadow falls over every document. responsibility or their every reverse and misfortune. But were he to cast off the cloak of invisibility and appear as he was, the amimadversions of the other occupants of the defendants' box might not be so audible, because he knows them well, He was no sudden interloper in Germany's destiny. He did not appear in a flash and order his present companions into action. Had it happened that way, the story of physical and moral duress they recounted from the witness stand would not be so incongruous. But, of their own free will, they threw in their lot with that of the specter's, and in their own respective functions enthusiastically carried out the shadow's orders, who was then not a shadow but a fire-breathing reality. they explain they had no reason to doubt him. He had been so successful. But the very successes they cheered most were usually this man's greatest crimes. Each defendant has claimed that the propaganda of the day assured them that Germany was always fighting a defensive war, but these men were not outsiders, nor were they children. They were part of the government, they belonged to the regime. It is incredible that they should believe that Germany was being attacked by Denmark, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Belgium and even little Luxembourg. Indubitably they revelled in these successes. One of Defense Counsel declared that the defendants could well believe of Hitler that "here was a man whom no power could resist".

was a living man so ignominiously and stupidly obeyed by other men. Never did living beings, made in the image of man, so pusillanimously grovel at the feet of clay. But it is not true that no one could resist him. There were people who could resist him, or at least refused to be a party to his monstrous criminality. Some voluntarily left Germany rather than acknowledge him as their spiritual leader. Others opposed him and ended up in concentration camps. It is a mistake to say or assume that all the German people approved of Nazism and the crimes it fostered and committed. Had that been true, there would have been no need of Stormtroopers in the early days of the Party, and there would have been no need for concentration camps or the Gestapo, both of which institutions were inaugurated as soon as the Nazis gained control of the German state. violences of Nazism, there were those who could not resist the glory, pomp and circumstance of war, nor the greed of unbridled domination. They accepted Hitler with fervor and passion because they believed Hitler could lead them to a gratification of their bloated vanity and lust for power, position and luxurious living.

Nor have all forsaken their "successful" leader. Several of the defendants in this case have expressed their countinuing belief in the Fuehrer. One could not bring himself to blame Hitler for any of the illegal deaths under discussion. Another regarded him as a great leader, if not a great statesman. Still another, when asked if he would have been satisfied if Hitler had succeeded in his aims, replied with a categorical affirmative. The defendant Klingelhoefer stated that he would have been happy if Hitler had won the war, even at the expense of Germany in ruins, with two million Germans killed and the entirety of Europe devastated. One other defendant told of his adoration for Hitler which apparently had not changed since 1945. The expression of such adoration offers convincing testimony on the mental attitude of the defendant at the time he received and executed the Fuehrer-Order.

doubted, but his capabilities for harm would have been nil had he not had willing, enthusiastic collaborators like the defendants who accepted his mad out-pourings and hysterical maledictions against defenseless minorities, as if his pronouncements were the apostrophies of a semi-divinity. megalomaniac to achieve his ambition of putting the world beneath his heel or to bring it crashing in ruins about his head. Some of these defendants, in following Hitler, may have believed that, in executing his will, they were serving their country. Their sense of justice staggering from the intoxication of command, their normal reactions drugged by the opiate of their blind fealty, their human impulses twisted by the passion of their ambitions, they made themselves believe that they were advancing the cause of Germany, But Germany would have fared better without such patriotism, When Samuel Johnson uttered his cynical line that patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel, he could well have had in mind a Hitlerian patriotism. death had it not been for his fellow arsonists, big and little, who continued to supply the fuel until they, themselves, were scorched by the flame they had been so enthusiastically tending. If history has taught anything it has demonstrated with devastating finality that most of the evils of the world have been due to craven subservience by sub-chiefs upon a man who through boundless ambition unrestrained by conscience has formulated plans which, proposed by anyone else, would be rejected as mad. whatever benefits derive from centralized control are lost in the infinite damage which inevitably follows lack of responsibility. That unlimited authority and power are poisons which destroy judgment and reason is a demonstrable fact as conclusively established as any chemical formula tried and tested in a laboratory.

The genius of true democratic government is that no one person is allowed to take the nation with its millions of people into the valley of decisive action without the advice, counsel and approval of those who are to be subjected to the hazards, hardships and potentially fatal consequences of that decision. cross-roads where and when there was still the opportunity to turn in the direction of the ideals which they had once known, but the wilful determination to follow the trail of blood prints of their voluntarily accepted leader could only take them to the goal they had never intended. It is possible that currently the defendants realize the mistake which h they made. Though most of them have sought to rationalize their deeds, though they attempted to explain that every executioner's rifle was aimed at a national peril, it is possible they now grasp the disservice they have done not only to humanity but to their own fatherland. It may even be that through this trial with its sobering revelations they will have demonstrated what are the inevitable consequences of any plan which stems from hatred and intolerance; and her they may have proved what has never been disproved: There is only one Fuehrer, and that is Truth. wrote on "The Myth of Blood":

"A new faith is arising today: They myth of the blood, of man.

The faith, embodied in clearest knowledge that placed and ever come the old sacraments."

What does this mean? No one has yet deciphered its cadenced incoherence, but as Rosenberg himself claimed in it conclusive proof of the master race, others were willing to assume in this torturing abstruseness the authority of a revealed writing.

Beneath the meaningless phrases Trent the subtle theme of a race of men so different from, and superior to, other men that it required an occult language, whose alphabet was understood only by the elect, to carry the wisdom of this ineffable superiority. From it could be proved everything and nothing. From it the Nazi hierarchists drew their meretricious inspiration which led to their licentious and profligate deeds. also have confirmed the rulers of nations, states and tribes in their superiority over other nations, states and tribes, but the results have invariably been the same. The theme of might against right has, through the centuries, led to consequences which were catastrophic to the assumed stronger. Through the pauseless sweep of the centuries, despots and tyrants have ever and again appealed to the weakness of their followers, the weakness of supposed strength, and have utilized their primitive vanity and arrogance of the little man in the accomplishment of their monumental horrors. Over and over, this monotonous and savage drama has appeared on the stage of history, but never was it played with such totality, fury and brutality as it was with the Nazia in the title role. tieth century, which could well have been the fruition of all the aspirations and hopes of the centuries which went before, makes the spectacle almost unsupportable in its unutterable tragedy and sadness. Amid the wreckage on the six continents, amid the shattered hearts of the world, amid the sufferings of those who have borne the cross of disillusionment and despair, mankind pleads for an understanding which will prevent anything like this happening again. That understanding goes back to the words spoken 1900 years ago, words which had they been honored in the observance rather than in the breach would have made the events narrated in this trial impossible -"Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye so to then."

PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess until tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

(The Tribunal adjourned until 9 April 1948, at 0930 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: The Honorables, the Judges of Military Tribunal II.

Military Tribunal is now in session. God save the United States of America and this Honorable Tribunal.

THE PRESIDENT (reading): attempt will be made to cite from all the testimony and documents introduced on both sides. Such a treatment would give to the overall Judgment a length out of all proportion to the nature of a final adjudication. Nor is it necessary. Although the Indictment has charged the several defendants with multiplicitous murders, the verdict of Guilty, where arrived at, does not need to be predicated on the total number contended for by the Prosecution. been on the subject of murder, the defendants are charged also in / Counts I and II with Crimes against Humanity and violations of Laws or Customs of War which include but are not limited to atrocities, enslavement, deportation, imprisonment, torture and other inhumane acts committed against civilian populations. Thus, if and where a conclusion of guilt is reached, such conclusion is not based alone on the charge of murder but on all committed acts coming within the purview of Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes. In each adjudication, without its being stated, the verdict is based upon the entire record. dorfs. There is the Ohlendorf represented as the student, lecturer, administrator, sociologist, scientific analyst, and humanitarian.

This Ohlendorf was born on a farm, studied law and political science at the universities of Leipzig and Goettingen, practiced as a barrister at the courts of Alfeld-Leine and Hildesheim, became deputy section chief in the Institute for World Economics in Kiel, then section chief at the Institute for Applied Economic Science in Berlin, and in 1936 became Economic Consultant in the SD. On behalf of this Ohlendorf, defense counsel has submitted several hundred pages of affidavits which speak of Ohlendorf's efforts to make the SD purely a fact-gathering organization, of his opposition to totalitarian and dictatorial tendencies in the cultural life of Germany, of his defense of the middle classes, and of his many clashes with Himmler, the SS Chief, and Mueller, the Chief of the Gestapo. One of these affidavits declares:

"Ohlendorf did not see superior and in ferior races in various peoples.

... He superior or inferior, but different.

The the laws of life.

For him, the goal to abilities.

Folk, in his view, also was not dependent on a state organization."

dorf who led Einsatzgruppe D into the Crimea on a race-extermination expedition. That Otto Ohlendorf is described by that same Ohlendorf. If the humanitarian and the Einsatz leader are merged into one person it could be assumed that we are here dealing with a character such as that described by Robert Louis Stevenson in his "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde". As interesting as it would be to dwell on this possible dual nature, the Tribunal can only make its adjudication on the Ohlendorf who, by his own word, headed an organization which, according to its own reports, killed 90,000 people.

and testimony in this case that Einsatzgruppe D did kill 90,000 persons in violation of the laws and customs of war, of general international law, and of Control Council Law No. 10. need to plead guilty to evasiveness on the witness stand, which indeed cannot be said of all the defendants. With a forthrightness which one could well wish were in another file of activity, Otto Ohlendorf related how he received the Fuehrer Order and how he executed it. He never denied the facts of the killings and only seeks exculpation on the basis of the legal argument that he was acting under Superior Orders. Further, that, as he saw the situation, Germany was compelled to attack Russia as a defensive measure and that the security of the Army, to which his group was attached, called for the operations which he unhesitatingly admits. All these defenses have been treated in the General Opinion and need not be repeated here.

In addition to Ohlendorf's direct testimony in this present trial, he voluntarily appeared as a witness in the International Military Tribunal trial and there described under oath the entire einsatz program of extermination. With but a minor exception he confirmed in this trial the testimony presented before the IMT. Thus, that testimony, by reference, is incorporated into the record of the instant trial and forms further evidence in support of the findings reached in this Judgment. Even outside the Courtroom Ohlendorf admitted untrammeledly the activities of the Einsatzgruppe under his charge. In at least four affidavits he related how his command functioned. He told of the area covered by his Einsatzgruppe, the division of his group into smaller units, the manner and methods of execution, the collection of the valuables of the victims, and the writing and submitting of reports to Berlin.

Unfortunately it cannot form part of this Judgment which can only dispose of the charges of criminality presented in the Indictment. Those charges against Otto Ohlendorf have been proved before this Tribunal beyond a reasonable doubt. The Tribunal accordingly finds Otto Ohlendorf guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment.

It has been argued by Dr. Aschenauer that Ohlendorf was not a member of a criminal organization as determined by the International Military Tribunal decision and Control Council Law No. 10. In support of this argument it is asserted that Ohlendorf was ordered to Russia as an employee of the Reich Group Commerce. It is impossible that Ohlendorf, as the leader of Einsatzgruppe D, should have been functioning as a member of the Reich Group Commerce. He headed Office III of RSHA before he went to Russia, and he headed it when he returned. organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

JUDGE SPEIGHT (reading): specialized in law and economics when he studied at the universities of Giessen and Munich. He later worked in the District Court at Darmstadt. He joined the Nazi Party in February 1928 and subsequently became a member of the SA, the SS, and SD. He served as an SS officer in the Polish campaign. He headed Einsatzgruppe A in the Russian campaign. His attorney devoted many pages in his final plea to arguments on self defense, necessity and national emergency, confirming and emphasizing what was said at great length by Dr. Aschenauer on these subjects.

In the latter part of the plea, Defense Counsel insisted that his client in no way participated in the execution of the Fuehrer Order. If, as a matter of fact, the defendant committed or approved of no act which could be interpreted either as a War Crime or Crime against Humanity, the argument of self defense and necessity is entirely superfluous. gruppe A the defendant was aware of the criminal purpose to which that organization was put, and, as its commander, cannot escape responsibility for its acts. Jost outlined his activities outside of Germany in the following language:

"During my activity as Chief of the Einsatz Security Police and SD in Eastland (BdS Ostland).SD Eastland was located in Riga.

On the whole, of the Security Police and SD (KdS) the same as kommando, respectively."

to Army control, Jost as Chief of Einsatzgruppe A cooperated with the Army command. When the territory came under civilian administration, he, as Commander-in-Chief of Security Police and SD received his orders from the Higher SS and Police Leader or SS and Police Leader. Under this double designation he was responsible for all operations conducted in his territory.

Report No. 195, dated April 24, 1942, reporting on activities within the area under the command of Einsatzgruppe A, states:

"Within the period of the report a total of and crimes."

murders. The item itself does not carry the exact date of its happening, but the latest date revealed in the entire document is March 26. Thus the execution of the 1,272 persons mentioned the rein could not have occurred on a date subsequent to March 26. The defendant testified that he was in Smolensk when, on March 24 or 25, he received his orders to take over the command of Einsatzgruppe A and that he did not arrive in Riga, headquarters of the Einsatzgruppe, until March 28 and 29. thousand murders prior to March 29 and, as late as March 26, as indicated by the report above-mentioned, was still killing Jews, It would be extraordinary that it should suddenly cease this slaughter for no given reason and with the Fuehrer Order still in effect, three days before Jost arrived.

The Prosecution argues that it would not take an officer of Jost's rank (Major General of Police) four days to travel the 100 miles between Smolensk and Riga. But whether Jost arrived the day before or the day after is not controlling in the matter of responsibility for the program involved. The Fuehrer Order was in effect prior to Jost's arrival at Riga and he did not revoke it when he took over the Einsatzgruppe. The defendant does state that when in May 1942 he received an order from Heydrich to surrender Jews under 16 and over 32 for liquidation he placed the order in his safe and declined to transmit it.

Report No. 193, dated April 17, 1942, reports an execution in Kauen, as of April 7, 1942, of 22 persons "among them 14 Jews who had spread communist propaganda". The defendant was asked on the witness stand:

"Do you regard it proper, militarily proper, to propaganda?"

and he replied:

"According to my orders these measures had to be carried out.

In that far it was correct and justified."

victims had indulged in Communist propaganda "up to the last moment". But there is nothing in International Law which justifies or legalizes the sentence of death for political opinion or propaganda. reports about "mass executions" during his time. If there had been no such executions during his incumbency it is reasonable to suppose that Jost would have emphatically so declared. It cannot be assumed that so grave and solemn an event as a mass execution could fall into the realm of the forgettable. Thus the only possible conclusion is that here the defendant was equivocating. the area, one of his subordinates, SS Hauptsturmfuehrer Truebe, wrote to the RSHA, requesting shipment of a gas van and gas hoses for three gas vans on hand. Jost denied any knowledge of this letter but admitted that the subordinate in question had the authority to order equipment. It is not reasonable to suppose that the ordering of such extraordinary equipment would not come to the attention of the leader of the organization and the fact that the ordered gas van was to go to White Ruthenia (where he was also in command) does not absolve the defendant from responsibility. alone with the crime of murder. The Indictment lists various offenses, including enslavement, imprisonment, and other inhumane acts against civilian populations. Thus the defendant cannot escape responsibility for a consenting part at least in the slave labor program instituted by Sauckel in his territory. Report No. 193, dated April 17, 1942, carried this item:

"On orders by the new Plenipotentiary for the Commissariate General 'White Ruthenia' has to muster about 100,000 workers.

But will be adopted."

order of May 19, 1942. He testified that he visited Heydrich and Himmler and urged his recall and even spoke to Rosenberg against the extermination program in principle. He asserted that later he was recalled and subjected to disciplinary action, Although he retained his general officer rank in the police he was sent to the front, as a sergeant in the Waffen SS. The credibility of this story depends entirely on Jost, since all the other alleged conferees are dead, and there were apparently no surviving witnesses that he could call to confirm his conversations. to do with the reversal in his military fortunes, it can be believed that illness alone could not have brought about such a drastic change in his situation. Nonetheless the evidence is irrefutable that he was a principal in and an accessory to the extermination program in his territory. He may have, after participation in this enterprise, at last relented, and this is to his credit, but this cannot wipe out the criminality which preceded his withdrawal from the field. defendant is guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. criminal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

JUDGE DIXON (reading):

and obtained employment in a commercial firm in his home town of Meissen, Saxony. In 1933 he joined the SA in a full-time capacity and then became official and officer of police. He joined the SD in 1935. He was Chief of Einsatzgruppe B from November 1941 until February or March 1943. The Prosecution contends that he took over the command of this organization on November 1, 1941 and points to various pieces of evidence to confirm that contention:

(1) Neumann's personnel SS record, (2) Reports listing Naumann as being in Smolensk (Headquarters of Einsatzgruppe

B) on November 12, 1941, (3) Testimony of Steimle that he met Nau (4) Naumnann's note to the co-defendant fluence Klingelhoefer's testimony that Neumann's duties began on November Neumann's purpose in establishing the latter date of induction into the chiefship of Einsatzgruppe B is to refute the Prosecution's claim that he is responsible for executions committed by Einsatzgruppe B in the month of November.

One report, dated December 19, 1941, described v arious actions which resulted in the liquidation of several thousands of people. Another report carrying the date of December 22, 1941 told of the execution of 324 Jewish prisoners of war and 680 civilian Jews. executions, since the reports were published four to five weeks following the events described therein. This would date the indicated events as having occurred about the middle of November and consequently prior to the date he claims he took over the Einsatzgruppe command. It has not established as a fact that the Operational and Situation Reports always appeared four to five weeks subsequent to the chronicled events.

It was testified during the trial that this period of delay fluctuated and that sometimes the reports were published within two weeks after the happening of the events.

However, this discussion is more interesting than practical. Even if Naumann were to prove irrefutably and conclusively that the reports were delayed and that he did not arrive in Smolensk until November 30, this would still not exonerate him from the charges under Counts I and II, for there is existent the Operational Report of April 21, 1942, covering operations from March 6 to March 30, a period during which indubitably Naumann commanded the area under consideration. This report shows, inter alia, that the Einsatzkommando 9 killed 273 persons made up of 85 Russians "belonging to partisan groups", 18 "because of Communistic, seditious acts and criminal offenses" and 170 Jews. Sonderkommando 7a executed 1,657 persons, 27 of whom were partisans and former Communists,45 were Gypsies, and 1,585 were Jews, The same report shows that unit Einsatzkommando 8 killed 1,609 persons made up of 20 Russian Communist, 5 criminals, 33 Gypsies and 1,551 Jews. was not "derived from the actual observation of the author of the document". This indeed is equivocation. The Operational Report was made up from accounts sent in by Einsatzgruppe B, accounts controlled by Naumann himself. In his affidavit of June 27, 1947 Naumann declared:

"The Einsatzgruppe B reported regularly on the Office.

Written reports were sent to Berlin every by radio.

The reports were prepared by my staff and submitted to me as a matter of routine," states:

"It is in no way intended to disclaim the assertion while Naumann was Chief of Einsatzgruppe B." executions appeared "much too high". In other words Dr. Gawlik claims that the numbers are incredible.

To say that these figures are incredible is an entirely credible and sane observation. This whole case is incredible, This is a case where the incredible has become the norm. It is not necessary to look at the reports to be shocked with incredulity. Many of the defendants themselves made statements on the incredulous things which they did. that it was in effect when he arrived. From this he seems to argue an absence of guilt. But Naumann had the power of command:

"The law of war imposes on a military officer in violations of the Law of war."

(Judgment, Milita ry Tribunal I, Case No. I, the United States of America against Karl Brandt et al, page 70.)

Naumann met from time to time with his kommando leaders. He knew that they were giving full effect to the Fuehrer Order. He knew that executions were taking place and even stated that if any of his subordinates had refused to carry out the order he would have taken disciplinary action against them.

Then it is to be noted from Naumann's own testimony that he knew of the liquidation order even before he took command of the Einsatz gruppe. He testified:

"... I was ordered to Heydrich and I received clear orders from him for Russia.

Now, first officials.

...." that Naumann was aware of the Fuehrer Order and that he carried it into effect. The only defense left him is that of the so-called Superior Orders. Did he agree with the order or not? If he did not and thus was compelled by chain of command and fear of drastic consequences to kill innocent human beings, the avenue of mitigation is open for consideration.

If, however, he agreed with the order, he may not, as already demonstrated, in the General Opinion, plead Superior Orders, The answer to this question can be found in his own testimony. anything morally wrong about the Fuehrer Order, and he replied in the negative. He was asked again the same question, and he replied specifically:

"I considered the decree to be right because it was necessary."

inquired if Naumann intended by his answer to say that he "saw nothing wrong with the order, even though it did involve the killing of defenseless human beings", and he replied "yes". dant is guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. nal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant, Erwin Schulz.

SS-Brigadier General Erwin Schulz entered the Army in 1918. After the first World War he successively studied law at the University of Berlin, was employed on the staff of the Dresden Bank and joined the Security Police. In 1940 he became Commissioner Inspector of the Security Police and SD. He was serving as Commandant of the Fuehrerschule of the Security Police in Berlin-Charlottenburg when he was assigned to the command of Einsatzkommando 5 which formed part of Einsatzgruppe C. He left Pretzsch with his kommando on June 23, 1941 and arrived in Lemberg in the early part of July. Here he was told that, prior to the evacuation of Lemberg by the Russians, 5,000 of the inhabitants had been murdered, and reprisals were in order. 2,500 to 3,000 people were arrested and within several days executions began. Schulz's kommando was ordered to participate in the executions and, under his direction, shot from 90 to 100 people.

kommando had been thoroughly investigated and found guilty of participation in the massacre which preceded his arrival. He stated further that after the execution he observed that Wehrmacht members were abusing the other 2,000 detainees being hold in a stadium, and that he opened the gate and allowed these detainees to escape.

These Lemberg shootings, despite the defendant's explanation, still remain unexplained. Schulz states that 5,000 Ukrainians and Poles had been massacred by the Russians and that then the invading forces, which had already executed hundreds of thousands of Poles, took reprisals against the Jews for the murder of Poles. If the operation was a "reprisal" one, as the report states, the Einsatz leaders would not have conducted investigations. If these executed were actually guilty of murder then the measure was not a reprisal but an orderly juridical procedure. Defense Counsel argues that Einsatzkommando 5 really had nothing to do with this affair:

"....it was only to fire the shot, without having of the incidents which preceded the shootings."

proceeded with the execution. Schulz testified that German soldiers had also been murdered in the Lemberg affair, but he could not state how many. Hitler had ordered a reprisal measure and that seemed to suffice. The defendant admitted that he conducted the execution of those allotted to him without any report of their guilt. He was not even furnished with a list of the executees. and was successively at Zhitomir and Berditschew. On August 10, while at Zhitomir, Schulz was instructed by the Einsatzgruppen leader that Jewish women and children, as well as men, were to be executed. Schulz states that, in moral rebellion against the order, he left for Berlin on August 24, arriving there on August 27. He spoke with Streckenbach and asked to be relieved from his post, and he was assured that this would be done, He returned to the kommando on September 15, and turned over the unit to his successor on September 25.

against the execution order cannot be conclusively known, since the other participants in that discussion, assuming that it took place, are not available. It is true that he did give up his kommando in the latter part of September 1941. Whether this excluded him from responsibility for executions, however, remains to be seen.

Report No. 88 states that "between August 24 and August 30, Einsatzkommando 5 carried through 157 executions by shooting comprising Jews, officials and saboteurs." Schulz used his trip to Berlin which embraces the six days indicated in the report, as an alibi for this shooting. But if the operation was planned before he left, his absence would not exonerate him. The man who places a bomb, lights the fuse, and rapidly takes himself to other regions is certainly absent when the explosion occurs, but his responsibility is no less because of that prudent non-presence. kommando 5 even thought he knew he intended to be absent while on the trip to Berlin is established by the fact that on the actual date of his departure, August 24, he ordered the kommando to move on from Berditschew to Skwira, 100 kilometers east of Berditschew, which removal actually took place on August 26. Schulz's explanation for this removal is a laudable one, if true. He says that he wanted to avoid that his kommando should come in contact with Higher SS and Police Leader Jeckeln who was set on execution of all Jews, including women and children. In any event, the fact remains that Schulz retained control of the kommando until the actual arrival of his successor in the latter part of September.

that before leaving for Russia he heard Heydrich's speech in which Heydrich said:

"That every one should be sure to understand that, in this fight; Jews would definitely take their the one to be overcome.

For that reason, all mea cular.

The experience in Poland had shown this."

The expression "all measures" certainly put Schulz on notice as to what was expected of the Einsatz units. for the executions described in Reports Nos. 132 and 135. The former is dated November 12 and the latter November 19, so that if one allowed even the maximum of five weeks' delay in publication of the reports, these executions would still fall subsequent to the date Schulz admittedly left Russia.

However, Report No. 47, dated August 9, 1941 which describes the shooting of 400 Jews (mostly saboteurs and political functionaries) would be within the time Schulz was on duty in Russia. This report makes the further statement: "Einsatzkommando 5 shot an additional 74 Jews up to this date."

Report No. 94 definitely chronicling a period when Schulz was in command, even though absent on the Berlin trip, says: "Einsatzkommando 5 for the period between August 31 and September 6, 1941, reports the liquidation of 90 political officials, 72 saboteurs and looters and 161 Jews." cuted by his kommando were only those who had committed offenses entitling them to be shot and in this connection Dr. Durchholz said that the "perpetrators who were Jews, were designated only as 'Jews' in the reports of the Einsatzgruppe, upon orders from superior offices, that they were not to be listed as 'saboteurs, plunderers, etc.'".

whose handling of the truth was as careless as his review of the evidence in capital cases in Esthonia. The Tribunal now declares that the record is absolutely bare of credible evidence that those listed in the column headed "Jews" fell into any category other than those who were shot merely because they were Jews. The whole documentation in the case is directly to the contrary.

Dr. Durchholz claims of his client a liberal attitude towards the Jews, but he adds:

"It goes without saying that he wanted to reduce again to normal proportions," It was just this spirit of reduction to what the Nazis called "normal proportions" which brought about the excesses in Germany leading to disfranchisement, appropriation of property, concentration camp confinement and worse.

In his final plea, Dr. Durchholz devoted some 20 pages to Schulz's activities prior to his Russian venture. He says here that Schulz was a competent police officer, that he was considerate and polite and was regarded as an "exemplary, modest, plain person who looked after his officials like a father". That the defendant is a person of innate courtesy has been evidenced in the court room, but the issue in this case is whether he lived up to International Law. did not respond to the obligations imposed upon him not only by the International law but the concept of law itself, of which, as a long police official, he could not be ignorant. In spite of this, however, it can be said in his behalf that, confronted with an intolerable situation he did attempt to do something about it.

JUDGE SPEIGHT: The defendant Franz Six. high school at Mannheim in 1930 and then matriculated at the University of Heidelberg where he specialized in sociology and political science, receiving the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1934. He then taught at the University at Koernigsberg (where he also took up the position of press Director of the German Student's Association). In 1936 he received the high academic degree of Dr. phil. habil. from the University of Heidelberg, and became Dozent in the faculty of law and political science at Koenigsberg; later, he passed examinations for the Venia Legendi at the University of Leipzig. By 1938, he was Professor at the University of Koenigsberg, and by 1939, he had obtained the chair for Foreign Political Science at the University of Berlin and was its first Dean of the faculty for foreign countries. achievements, duly enumerated by the defendant himself, the youth who came to him for guidance and instruction could expect in him a comparable degree of achievement in moral honesty. Unfortunately, this may not have been true, and therein is a tragedy of its own. A school teacher is bound in conscience to hold himself impeccable in deportment because of the example he constantly presents the future citizens of the State. The example afforded by Six left something to be desired. Reference will be made to the defendants own words on the witness stand in support of this observation.

to the Tribunal the tale of his student days at the University of Heidelberg. He said:

"I carried on my studies at Heidelberg for four years on an average of twenty marks a month.

I needed nine marks to live on.

Nine marks, that meant thir complacency with so much distress."

Then on his own words he solved the enigma: "The answer which I gave myself was joining the Nazi Party." showed, he had become a Nazi in 1930, that is, even before he matriculated at the University of Heidelberg, so that whatever advantages, benefits and comforts derived from National Socialism were already due to him at Heidelberg. Thus, by failing to tap the munificent resources which Nazism offered, while already a full-fledged Nazi, Six suffered needlessly during those four sad years at Heidelberg.

There is another illustration. Six declared he had no animosity toward Jews and advanced his respect for two certain Jewish university professors as proof of this assertion, He was then asked whether it disturbed him that these two Jews, because of their race, were persecuted. He replied that he regarded it as "highly unpleasant" that these people should have been "affected by the new laws and regulations". Whereupon the inquiry was made as to whether he was offended by the persecution of thousands and millions of the brothers and sisters of these two professors. He answered: "What do you mean by persecution? When did the persecution begin?" When this was explained to him he conceded that the burning down of the Jewish synagogues on November 9, 1938, was a "shame and a scandal". Counsel for the Prosecution now inquired if he regarded the Fuehrer-Order, which called for the physical extermination of all Jews, as a "shame and a scandal". Here he saw a difference.

The synagogues had been burned down without an order and therefore the destruction was a "Shame and a scandal". The Fuehrer-Order, however, to destroy human beings, issued from the Chief of State and consequently could not be a shame and a scandal. He later conceded that the execution of women and children was deplorable, but the killing of male Jews was proper because they were potential bearers of arms. versity of Berlin at which Six was professor and Dean, had, as far back as 1809, defined "the limits beyond which the activities of the State must not go." Obviously Six did not agree with the doctrine that there could be a limit to the activities of the State, The name of Adolf Hitler apparently throw a shade over the light of his learning, and thus, for him there was nothing wrong, even mass killings, so long as the order therefor originated with the Fuehrer. In this last named organization he attained the grade of Brigadier General. On June 20, 1941 he was appointed Chief of the Vorkommando Moscow. According to the defendant the task of this kommando was to secure the archives and files of Russian documents in Moscow when the German troops should arrive there. The defendant arrived in Smolensk on July 25, 1941 and remained there until the latter part of August when he returned to Berlin. were not as innocuous as made out by him. The prosecution submits that the Vorkommando Moscow was ussed in liquidating operations while under the command of Six. Further, that the seizing of documents in Russia was done not for economic and cultural purposes, but with the object of obtaining lists of Communist functionaries who had themselves become candidates for liquidation.

In support of its position, the Prosecution introduced Report No. 73 dated September 4, 1941, which carries on its final page the heading "Statistics of the liquidations", and then enumerates various units of Einsatzgruppe B with the executions performed by each.

"The total figures of persons liquidated by the Einsatz gruppe as per 20 August 1941 were:

1.) Stab and Vorkommando 'Moskau' 144

2.) Vorkommando 7a 996

3.) Vorkommando 7b 886

4.) Einsatzkommando 8 6,842

5.) Einsatzkommando 9 8,096 Total .....16,964" The same report carries the item:

"The Vorkommando 'Moskau' was forced to execute another tablished Ghetto of Smolensk."

kommando Moscow could not have performed the executions mentioned therein. His argument is as follows: Assuming that the executions occurred August 20th, two days must have elapsed before the report left Smolensk. Allowing then two or three days more for evaluation of the events, the report, according to Dr. Ulmer, could only have left Smolensk on August 25th or 26th. A few days were needed for the transmission to Berlin and there, on September 4, 1941, it appeared as Operation Report No. 73, Dr. Ulmer then says:

"The report can therefore -- and that is essential - earliest, i.e. on the sixth day after the defendant had left Smolensk."

No one questioned the correctness of the date of September 4th when the report was published in Berlin.

Therefore, the longer the time required for the submission of the report to Berlin, the further back must be the happening of the events narrated therein, and thus the further back into the period when Six was incontrovertibly in Smolensk. The usual argument presented in matters of this kind has been that the delay between the event and the eventual publishing of the report was a longer one rather than a shorter one. In this case the date in the document itself indicates a delay of only 14 days. If Dr. Ulmer argues that the lapse of time was longer than 14 days, then the events in question occurred prior to August 20th when no one questions that Dr. Six was present in Smolensk. specifically states that he never made any reports to Einsatzgruppe B. Report No. 34 declares, under the heading of Einsatzgruppe B:

"Smolensk, according to the report by Standartenfuehrer Dr. Six, is a thoroughly destroyed as Minsk.

... It was follow to Smolensk."

Report No. 11, dated July 23, 1941 listed Vorkommando Moscow as one of the units of Einsatzgruppe B. Furthermore, Six admitted having supplied Einsatzgruppe B with some of his interpreters.

The defendant has described himself as a "pure" scientist. His duties were so scientific that in April 1944 he made a speech in Krumhubel at a session of consultants on the Jewish question in which he was reported as follows:

"Ambassador Six speaks then about the political structures of world jewry.

The physical elimination of Eastern Jew ry would deprive Jewry of its biological reserves.

... The so internationally."

At this same session:

"Embassy counsellor v. Thadden speaks about the Jewish the Anti-Jewish executive measures.

" Six admitted having been present and having addressed the meeting but denied making the remarks attributed to him.

"I hereby promote you, effective 9 November 1941 to Signed:

H. HIMMLER." was "quite unimaginagle" that "special merits in the past should be mentioned" in the "promotion". Whereupon the Prosecution introduced the following document:

"Memorandum: The Reich Main Security Office requests the promotion of SS-Oberfuehrer Dr. Six to Brigade fuehrer, effective 31 January 1945.

..SIPO Einsatz;

22 June 1941 -- 28 August 1941, East Einsatz... On Police Einsatz in the East."

SS prior to 1939, but it is incongruous to say the least that one who joins the Nazi Party voluntarily because he believes it to be the salvation of Germany, joins the SA voluntarily, becomes a brigadier general in the SS, and joins the SD voluntarily, should seek to leave it when Germany was riding the crest of the high wave running toward ever continuing and ever more glorious victories and triumphs.

gruppe B and despite the finding that Six was aware of the criminal purposes of Einsatzgruppe B, the Tribunal cannot conclude with scientific certitude that Six took an active part in the murder program of that organization. It is evident, however, that Six formed part of an organization engaged in atrocities, offenses and inhumane acts against civilian populations. The tribunal finds the defendant guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. minal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined in the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

JUDGE DIXON: The defendant Paul Blobel. commanded Sonderkommando 4a from June 1941 to January 1942, and in that capacity is responsible for the killing of 60,000 people. Defense Counsel in his final plea, argued that the maximum number of persons executed by Sonderkommando 4a cannot have exceeded 10,000 to 15,000 which in itself, it must be admitted, would anywhere be regarder as a massacre of some proportions, except in the annals of the Einsatzgruppen. 60,000 killings are subject to error. He points out first that the reports are not under oath. This overlooks the fundamental fact that the reports are strictly military documents and that every soldier who collects, transmits and receives reports is under oath. He then states that the reports were compiled and issued by an office unfamiliar with the subject covered in the reports.

But this is to say that a military headquarters is stranger to its own organization. But the crowning objection to the reliability of the reports is the conjecture that possibly headquarters did not have a map with which to check the locations!" defendant was under the jurisdiction of the Army, coming directly under the orders of Field Marshal von Reichenau of AOK 6. The Tribunal has already spoken on the defense of Superior Orders. But Blobel asserts that the persons executed by his kommando were investigated and tried, and that Field Marshal von Reichenau had reviewed every case. There is nothing in Blobel's record which would suggest that his bare statement would be sufficient to authenticate a proposition which, on its face, is unbelievable. It is enough to refer to the massacre at Kiev where 33,771 Jews were executed in two days immediately after an alleged incendiary fire, to disprove Blobel's utterance in this regard. Incidentally Blobel, whose kommando took an active part in this mass killing, said that the number reported was too high. "In my opinion", he states, "not more than half of the mentioned figure were shot". accordance with International Law.

He testified:

"Executions of agents, partisans, saboteurs, suspicious Hague Convention."

It is to be need that Blobel's ideas of International Law are merely because he thinks they are suspicious.

Sixteen separate reports directly implicate Blobel's kommando in mass murder, many of them referring to him by name. Report No.,143 delcares that as of November 9, 1941, Sonderkommando 4a had executed 37,243 persons. Report No. 132, dated November 12, 1941, tells of the execution of Jews and prisoners of war by Blobel's sonderkommando. That report closes on the note: "The number of executions carried out by Sonderkommando 4a meanwhile increased to 55,432." Report No. 156 declares that as of November 30, 1941, Sonderkommando 4a had shot 59,018 persons. explanation why Blobel became involved in the business just related. He said that in 1924 Blobel began the practice of his profession, that of a free-lance architect. By untiring efforts he became successful, and at last he realized his dream of owing his own home. Then came the economic crisis of 1928-29. "The solid existence for which he had fought and worked untiringly was smashed by the general economic collapse." He could get me now orders, his savings disappeared, he could not pay the mortgage on his house, which he had previously stated he owned. Paul Blobel was, as his counsel tells us, "down to his last shirt". The defendant was seized by the force of the quarrels between major political parties, and his counsel sums it up:

"This situation alone makes the subsequent behavior of the defendant Blobel comprehensible."

In 1935 he received an order as architect to furnish the office of the SS in Duesseldorf. Despite the miraculous prosperity promised by National Socialism, the defendant in 1935 still found himself in distress and so he thus decided to take up Nazi work seriously and become clothed again. He would give his entire time to National Socialism. life in ascertaining public opinion. Defense Counsel states that Blobel tried to withdraw from the SD prior to the outbreak of World War II, but later contradicts, this with the statement that "up to 1939 there was no reason for him to withdraw from his activities with the SD and to turn his back upon this organization." charge of Sonderkommando 4a and marched into Russia. In one operation his kommando killed so many people that it could collect 137 trucks full of clothes, Blobel's attitude on murder in general was well exemplified by his reaction to the question as to whether he believed that the killing of 1,160 Jews in the retaliation for the killing of 10 German soldiers was justified. His words follow:

THE PRESIDENT: WALTER BLUME.

SS-Colonel Blume obtained his Doctor's Degree in Law at the University of Erlangen. He later served with the Prussian Secret State Police. In May 1941 he was called to Dueben where he was given command of Sonderkommando 7a and instructions on the task of exterminating Jews. This unit formed part of Einsatzgruppe B which in the execution of the FuehrerOrder killed Jews, Communists and alleged asocials in no inconsiderable numbers. Blume states that he left his kommando on August 15 or 17, 1941. The defendant Steimle stated that Blume remained with the kommando until September 1941.

Report No. 73, dated September 4, 1941, credited Vorkommando 7a with 996 killings as of August 20. Even if Blume's assertion as to the date of his leaving the assignment were correct, that would only mean that he cannot be charged with that proportion of the 996 murders which occurred during the last 3 or 5 daysof this period; and even this only under the additional assumption that prior to his departure he had not given orders which were executed within those 3 or 5 days.

Report No. 11, dated July 3, 1941 states that Blume's kommando liquidated "officials of the Konsomol (Communistic Organization) and Jewish officials of the Communist Party."

Report No. 34, dated July 26, 1941 speaks of the incident already described in the General Opinion -- the killing of the 27 Jews who, not having reported for work, were shot down in the streets. This happened in the territory under Blume's jurisdiction.

Blume admits having witnessed and conducted executions. He states that he was opposed to the Fuehrer-Order and that he made every effort to avoid putting it into effect, But the facts do not support this assertion, From time to time during this trial various defendants have stated that certain reports were incorrect, that the figures were exaggerated, even falsified.

Yet, when Blume was asked why, since he was so morally opposed to the Fuehrer-Order, he did not avoid compliance with the order by reporting that he had killed Jews, even though he had not, he replied that he did not consider it worthy of himself to lie. his revulsion about cold bloodedly shooting down innocent people. In spite of this reasoning on the witness stand he submitted an affidavit in which it appears he did not have scruples against lying when stationed in Athens, Greece. In this affidavit he states that the KriminalKommissar ordered him to shoot English commando troops engaged in Greek partisan activity. Since Blume was inwardly opposed to the kommissar decree as he pointed out, he suggested to his superior that the order to kill these Englishmen could be circumvented by omitting from the report the fact that the Englishmen were carrying civilian clothes with them. him with revulsion, yet he announced to the firing squad after each shooting of ten victims:

"As such, it is no job for German men undertake these executions.

This we out this order."

had committed any crime or had shot at anybody, but that the Fuehrer had said that he, the Fuehrer, was convinced that these people "would shoot" at them, their women and children, 2,000 miles away. In other words, the victims were to be killed because of the possibility that they might at some time be of some danger to the Fuehrer and the executioners.

Blume says that he made this speech to case the feelings of the men, but in effect he was convincing them that it was entirely proper to kill innocent and defenseless human beings. If he was not in accord with the order, he at least could have refrained from propagandizing his men on its justness and reasonableness, and exhortation which could well have persuaded them into a zestful performance of other executions which might otherwise have been avoided or less completely fulfilled.

Blume's claims about revulsion to the Fuehrer-Order are not borne out by his statement:

"I was also fully convinced and am so tic dictatorship, and still is."

instructed the local commander to arrest all Jews and confine them to a ghetto. Since the local commander of Wilna was not Blume's subordinate, Blume was not called upon to issue the order for the incarceration of the Jews which only brought them one step closer to execution under the Fuehrer-Order. Blume's explanation that he hoped the Fuehrer-Order might be recalled is scarcely adequate. He could have done nothing. Duty did not require him to incarcerate these Jews. men charged with having asked the farmers not to bring in the harvest he was asked whether such an execution was not contrary to the rules of war:

"Q. Are you familiar with the rules of war?

"A. In this case I acted by carrying out "Q. Did you regard a person who told a farmer sentence which you invoked?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Are you familiar with the rules of war?

"A. I already stated that for me the directive was the Fuehrer-Order.

That was my war law."

that he was shooting innocent people and admitted the shooting of 200 people by his kommando.

Blume is a man of education. He is a graduate lawyer. He joined the NSDAP voluntarily, swore allegiance to Hitler voluntarily and became director of a section of the Gestapo voluntarily. He states that he admired, adored and worshipped Hitler because Hitler was successful not only in the domestic rehabilitation of Germany, as Blume interpreted it, but successful in defeating Poland, France, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Yugoslavia, Greece, Luxembourg and other countries. To Blume these successes were evidence of great virtue in Hitler. Blume is of the notion that Adolf Hitler "had a great mission for the German people." he would not go so far as to say that this order which brought about the indiscriminate killing of men, women and children, constituted murder and the reason for the explanation was that Hitler had issued the order and Hitler, of course, could not commit a crime. In fact Blume's great sense of guilt today is not that he brought about the death of innocent people but that he could not execute the Fuehrer-Order to its limit:

"Q. We understood you to say that you had a bad order.

Does that mean that you regretted Order?

"A. Yes. This feeling of guilt was within me.

ed it impossible, to follow a Fuehrer-Order."

Dr. Lummert, Blume's lawyer, made a very able study of the law involved in this case. His arguments on Necessity and Superior Orders have been treated in the General Opinion. Dr. Lummert, in addition, has collected a formidable list of affidavits on Blume's character. They tell of Blume's honesty, good nature, kindness, tolerance and sense of justness, and the Tribunal does not doubt that he possessed all these excellent attributes at one time. One could regret that a person of such excellent moral qualities should have fallen under the influence of Adolf Hitler. But on the other hand one can regret even more that Hitler found such a resolute person to put into execution his murderous program. For let it be said once for all that Hitler with all his cunning and unmittigated evil would have remained as innocuous as rambling crank if he did not have the Blumes, the Blobels, the Braunes and the Bibersteins to do his bidding, -- to mention only the B's. the Indictment. criminal organizations SS, SD and Gestapo under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment. Universities of Munich, Freiburg, Cologne and Tuebingen. He worked as an assistant judge in the Inner Administration of Wuerttemberg and became a Government Councillor in 1937. In October 1939 he was chief of the Immigration Center and in June 1941 was appointed chief of Sonderkommando ia of Einsatzgruppe A. He left for Estonia on the 23rd day of that month. On December 3, 1941 he became Commander of the Security Police and SD for Estonia. He returned to Germany in September 1943. During this long period of 26 months he had ample opportunity to be involved in the execution of the Fuehrer-Order which he originally heard in Pretzsch end which was fully discussed again in Berlin before he left for the East.

Despite the defendant's protestations from the witness stand, it is evident from the documentary evidence and his own testimony, that he went along willingly with the execution of the Fuehrer-Order. Hardly had his kommando reached its first stopping place before it began its criminla work. Operational Report No. 15 reads:

"Group leader entered Riga with Ein satzkommando 1a and 2." of 400 Jews and the setting up of groups for the purpose of fomenting progroms.

Sandberger seeks to deny responsibility for the executions, although it has been demonstrated that not only he was in Riga at the time they occured, but he actually had a conversation about them with the Einsatzgruppe Chief Stahlecker before he left Riga.

This same report shows that a teilkommando of Sandberger's unit, Einsatzkommando 1a, was assigned to an operation in Dorpat; and it is interesting to note that a subsequent report (No 88, dated September 19, 1941) tells of an execution in Dorpat of 405 persons of whom 50 were Jews. This report closes with the significant statement:

"There are no more Jews in prison." included one item under Esthonia of 474 Jews and 684 Communists. The defendant also denies responsibility for these killings, placing the credit or blame for them on the German Field Police and Esthonian Home Guard. It is a fact, however, that the Esthonia Home Guard was under Sandberger's juridiction and control for specific operations, as evidenced by the same report:

"The arrest of all male Jews of over 16 "At present a camp is being constructed be free of Jews in a short while".(Emphasis supplied) Report No. 17, dated July 9, 1941 carried the item:

"With the exception of one, all leading to about 14,500.

cipated but argued, reponsibility for only a fraction of the mental figure". He placed this "fraction" at 300 to 350 persons. In further attempted exculpation from responsibility for the numerous killings which admittedly occured in the territory under his jurisdiction, Sandberger announced in court a system of investigation, appeal, review and re-view which involved eleven different people, one of whom was himself. The real difficulty about Sandberger's explanation is that it lacks not only support, documentary or otherwise, but it lacks credibility in itself. Sandberger's story would argue that these involved and elaborate pains were taken under the Nazi aegis to protect the lives of the very people, the supreme order under which they were operating had doomed to summary extermination. for at least 350 deaths in this instance:

He states he did this to protect the Jews, hoping that during the internment the Fuehrer-Order might be revoked or its rigorous provisions modified. The Jews were later executed. Sandberger claims that the execution took place without his knowledge and during his absence, but his own testimony convicts him:

"Q. You collected these men in the camps?

A. Yes, I gave the order.

Q. You knew that at some future time they could expect nothing but death?

A. I was hoping that Hitler would withdraw the Q. You knew that the probality, bordering on being collected?

Sandberger's temporary absence, on the date of the execution of course, in no way affects his criminal responsibility for the deed. witness stand to denial, the one admission he did make was that executive measures in Esthonia were taken under his supervision. the Fuehrer-Order and other Nazi dictates is evidenced by the eulogistic remarks which appeared in the recommendation for his promotion:

JUDGE DIXON: The defendant WILLY SEIBERT. University of Goettingen in 1932 as a graduate economist. He served in the Army from 1932 until 1935 when he entered the SD as an expert in economics. In 1939 he became Chief of Group III D, Economics, in the RSHA and, as such, Deputy to defendant Ohlendorf. He continued in this capacity until transferred to service with Einsatzgruppe D in May 1941. April 2, 1947, declared:

"The former Standartenfuehrer Willi Seibert was my Chief III.

their original statements as to Seibert's activities with the Einsatzgruppe and endeavored to delimit his functions to those of Chief of Office III. This modification could well have stemmed from a desire to help a co-defendant, rather than because of a mistaken statement in the first instance. One could err in the general summing up of another's activities, but it is difficult to comprehend how one in the normal possession of faculties of memory and reflection could ascribe the accomplishment of a very specific act to another if, in fact, it had not occurred. Thus, in his affidavit of April 2, 1947, Ohlendorf stated: "The only people whom I generally assigned to inspections were, except for Schubert, Willi Seibert and Hans Gabel." Here we have a very definite type of work. specifically declared that Willy Seibert was Ohlendorf's deputy, and that Ohlendorf or Seibert had assigned him to supervise and inspect an execution which involved some 700 people. Schubert could scarcely have credited Seibert with this type of executive authority, unless he was aware ho possessed it. One Karl Jonas declared by affidavit that Seibert was deputy to Ohlendorf. he was not Ohlendorf's deputy generally for Einsatzgruppe D, he did represent his chief "in all matters which a Chief III has to work out". And then he explained that "as senior officer on the staff of the Einsatzgruppe" he "took over all tasks within the Group whenever Ohlendorf was absent from the Group".

his activities to those falling within the normal scope of Office III, he did state that he made inspections of Tartar companies, that he engaged in combat actions against partisans and that he did make reports on executions. These assignments obviously do not fall within the duties of a Chief of Office III, as Office III was described by Seibert. been originally appointed by Heydrich as chief of the Department IV in his Einsatzgruppe. Under the plan of organization, Setzen would thus become Ohlendorf's deputy in executive functions of the Einsatzgruppe. However, Ohlendorf did not use Setzen for this purpose. He assigned him to the leadership of a subkommando, and the evidence is entirely convincing that he used Seibert for functions which would otherwise have been performed by Setzen. Seibert had been Ohlendorf's deputy in Office III of the RSHA since 1939. It would be quite natural for Ohlendorf to want Seibert, who had been his deputy in Berlin, to continue in a similar capacity in the field. And it is significant that they both returned at about the same time to the RSHA in Berlin and Seibert once more took up his duties as deputy to Ohlendorf in Office III. of reports signed by Seibert as acting commander for Ohlendorf during the latter's absence. These reports show conclusively that Seibert was reporting upon the general activities of the Einsatzgruppen, which included executions, planning for operations, and negotiations with Army officials, and in one of the documents Seibert is revealed requesting a conference with the chief of Staff of the Army. A report (Register No. 1118/42) dated April 16, 1942, carried the phrase "The Crimea is freed of Jews". Seibert knew the full significance of that phrase.

He was questioned about it on the witness stand:

"Q. When you signed the report which contained of Jews?

A. That did not have to be the case, Your Honor, or at least during the first time; they were Q. Eventually they were executed?

A. Yes, that is probably the case.....

Q. And when you signed the report which contained the phrase, 'The Crimea is freed of Jews', you knew what had happened to the Jews?

In May 1935 he qualified as instructor of secondary schools, and in March 1936 he passed the examination as Studienassessor. During this time his unit executed 500 people:

It is evident that this defendant, like the defendant Blobel, has a distorted view of what constitutes established offenses when he states, as he does in his pre-trial affidavit, that under his leadership his kommando executed even "persons suspected of being partisans".

did not submit any evidence to contest the defendant's assertion that every exeuction of partisans was preceded by a thorough examination on the basis of a regular procedure. narrative of an episode involving the shooting of three girls who, according to the defendant, were about to form a partisan group. He explained that the case of these throe girls was investigated for eight days. Whether such an investigation actually took place or not can only depend on the credibility of the defendant himself. In this respect it must be remarked that, if his concern for the girls' civil rigts rose no higher than his regard for their spiritual comfort, the victims could not have had much of a chance to defend themselves. Steimle himself commanded the firing squad, and he was asked if the girls were afforded any religious assistance before the shots were fired. He replied that, since they were Communists, they could not have had a religious conviction. Then the question was put to him as to what he would have done in the event they were religious. His reply was:

"If the wish had been uttered I can I, myself, wouldn't have bothered."

His admission, however, that he reviewed investigations and ordered death sentences makes him co-responsible with the persons in charge of the examinations. A superior may not delegate authority to a subordinate and then plead non-involvement for what the subordinate does.

were engaged in the execution of Jews prior to Steimle's arrival, they should suddenly cease performing their principal function while the Fuehrer-Order was still in force. Jews in his territory is discredited by Report No. 108:

"The Sonderkommando 7a executed a local, Gorodnie.

In Klinzy 83 Jewish terror were likewise liquidated.

He added that he was opposed to it and thus, by failing to shoot Jews, he exculpated himself from any responsibility under that order. But, neither the Fuehrer-Order nor the Indictment in this case is limited to the extermination of Jews. The ruthless killing of members of the civiliam population other than Jews is also murder. Nonetheless the Tribunal is convinced that the Einsatz units under Steimle's leadership and authority killed Jews on racial grounds and also killed Jews on supposed offenses without affording them the trial called for under the Rules of War and International Law. It is also clear that Steimle did not attempt to prevent Foltis, his subordinate, from killing Jews under the Fuehrer-Order. The Tribunal finds from all the evidence in the case that Steimle authorized and approved of killings in violation of law and is guilty of murder. defendant guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. criminal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and, therefore, is guilty under Count III of the Indictment. JUDGE SPEIGHT: The Defendant Ernst Biberstein.

Ernst Emil Biberstein was originally named Szymanowsky. This striking change in name was no more extraordinary than the change in his profession. From clergyman in the Lutheran Protestant church in Kating, Schleswig-Holstein, he went to a chiefship in the Gestapo in Oppeln, Germany, in the meantime having renounced the church and his ecclesiastical garb. In August 1935 he entered the Reich Ministry for Church Affairs and in May 1936 was promoted to Oberregierungsrat in the State service. He served in the Wehrmacht from March 10, 1940, until October 20, 1940, when he became Chief of Gestapo at Oppeln. In the meantime, he had become SS-Sturmbannfuehrer and as such went to Russia as Chief of Sonderkommando 6 under Einsatzgruppe C. He served in this capacity from September 1942 until June 1943.

a sworn statement that his kommando during the time he was its chief killed from 2000 to 3000 people. In Nuremberg he twice repeated these figures under oath. At the trial he sought to repudiate the total, saying that the interrogator, on the three different occasions, had insisted that he name a figure and that a discrepancy of one thousand more or ess did not matter. It was then put to him that allowing for a margin of one thousand he had still admitted to from one to two thousand killings. He refused, however, at the trial, to name any figure. that he had witnessed two executions, the precise details of which he had described in his three pre-trial declarations. In his affidavit of July 2, 1947, he related:

"I personally superintended an execution of a gas truck.

The persons destined valuables (sometimes the clothes also) and 60 people.

The truck was then driven to any outward signs of spasms.

There was no that the people were really dead."

"I have also witnessed an execution carried out with firearms.

The persons to be exe automatic pistol.

The persons thus killed mostly dropped straight into the pit.

I the neck.

No physician was present either at this form of execution."

only because the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe wished him to experience the sensation of watching an execution so that he might know how he would feel about a spectacle of that kind.

"Q. You didn't know that before you witnessed You didn't feel that before you actually witnessed the execution?

A. Of course not, Your Honor, for, before,

Q. So you had to see an execution in order sentiments?

A. Yes, I had to see what kind of an effect this would have on me."

stantiation of this assertion he advanced various explanations:

(1) that Thomas, the Einsatzgruppe chief, was aware of his religious background and therefore wished to spare him his feelings;

(2) that there were no Jews in his territory anyway; (3) that he did not know of the Fuehrer-Order. point where he declared that althought he had led an einsatzkommando in Russia for 9 months, he did not learn of the FuehrerOrder until he reached Nuremberg. In fact he states that the very first time the Order ever came to his attention was when it was talked about in the court room and its contents shocked him considerably. nounced the word "investigation" with a certain self-assurance which proclaimed that so long as they "investigated" a man before shooting him they had fulfilled every requirement of the law and could face the world with an untroubled conscience. But an investigation can, of course, be useless unless proof of innocence of crime releases the detainee. Investigating a man and concluding he is a Jew or Communist functionary or suspected franctireur gives no warrant in law or in morals to shoot him. Biberstein claims that all executees of his kommando were given a proper investigation and killed only in accordance with law. Can this statement be believed? In testing Biberstein's credibility he was questioned regarding his work as a Gestapo Chief.

His answers to the questions put to him shed some light on the extent to which Biberstein can be believed in his wholesale denials:

"Q. Suppose that you learned that in the town was waging, what would you do?

A. I would have asked the man to come to me just would have warned him."

"Q. You are on your way home one evening from what would you do?

A. Nobody would have done this, I don't think.

Q. Well, let us suppose someone did. Peculiar A. I would have told him, 'Don't talk about it.

Keep it to yourself, keep it quiet'."

"Q. Well, let's go a little further. This 'By the way, I just found out that there is a plot on here to kill Hitler.

I heard the men talking about this; I know the house in which they gather; I saw Biberstein.

' What would you do?

A. I would have told him, 'Go to Official So-andSo and report it to him'.Q. And you would have done nothing?

A. Why what could I have done? I didn't. know what to do. I had no police directives." that a pastor has the task "to help souls but never to judge". Biberstein was no longer a pastor, professionally, spiritually or intellectually. He had already denounced his church and his religion and when asked why he did not offer religious comfort to those who were about to be killed under his orders and in his presence, he said that he could not cast "pearls before swine". incriminating answer, truth in an unguarded moment emerged and Biberstein confessed to murder from the witness stand.

He steadfastly had maintained that every exeuction had been preceded by an investigation. As chief of the kommando which conducted the executions, his was the responsibility to be certain that these investigations revealed guilt. However if conceivably he could -- although in law and in fact he could not but even if arguendo he could be excused from responsibility for the death of those who were executed outside his presence, he could not escape responsibility for the death of those killed before his eyes.

With regard to the two executions which he witnessed (one by gas van and the other by shooting), he testified that the first involved some 50 people and the second about 15. He was questioned as to whether investigations had been made to determine guilt or innocence of these 65 executees. He replied:

"I did not see the files of these 65 cases.

I only know that men of the to investigate the cases."

The interrogation continued:

"Q. You do not know of your own knowledge that those cases were investigated?

These 65 deaths?

A. I did not see it.

Q. No. So, therefore, you permitted 65 or not?

A. I said that I only made spot checks.

Q. Did you make any spot checks in these 65?

A. Not among these 65.

Q. Then we come back to the conclusion that death without even a spot check?

A. Without living made a spot check, yes." is guilty of murder in ordering the death of 65 persons and supervising their very executions without evidence of guilt. Sonderkommando 6, during the time that Biberstein was its chief accomplished mass murder. It finds further that as its chief, Biberstein was responsible for these murders. is guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. Judge Dixon; The Defendant Werner Braune University of Jena in July 1932 and in 1933 was awarded the degree of Doctor of Juridical Science. He joined the SS in November 1934. In 1940 he became chief of the Gestapo in Wesermuende. In October 1941 he was assigned to Einsatzkomando 11b. As chief of this unit Braune knew of the Fuehrer-Order and exected it to the hilt. Hi defense is the general one of Superior Orders which avails Braune no more than it does anyone also who executes a criminal order with the zeal that Braune brought to the Fuehrer-Order. Various reports implicate Braune and his kommando in the sordid business of illegal killings. Simferopol. Braune was the kommando leader in charge of this operation. He has admitted responsibility for this murder in unequivocal language:

"It took place under my responsibility.

with Mr.Ohlendorf and there we con the assignment.

I personally was there company and, I think, another Captain."

Like a guillotine blade in its descent it did not stop to inquire into cause and premise. Nonetheless, the question was put to Braune as to why the Army, which apparently had immediately ordered this execution, was so anxious that the slaughter be accomplished before Christmas. Braune enlightened the Tribunal and simultaneously horrified humanity for all time as follows:

"The Fuehrer-Order was there, and now the Army said 'We want it finished be fore Christmas'. I wasn't able at the time to find out all the reasons.

May Army to issue that order.

Maybe they were territorial Questions.

Maybe they were questions of food.

The Army, at cause of the food situation.

..."

There were also executions after Christmas. Einsatz-Order, dated January 12, 1942, speaks of an operation destined -

"....to apprehend unreliable elements (partisans, saboteurs, possibly enemy Jews, leading Communists, etc.)

." Braune admitted that he took an active part in this operation. He was asked what happened to the Jews who fell into the dragnet which he had spread, and Braune replied:

"If there were any Jews, Mr. Prosecutor, they were shot, just as the other Jews."

the defendant replied:

was convinced that "the whole lot of them had engaged in illegal activities", but he admitted that there was the possibility, theoretically, as he described, that among these 1,184 executees "There were some people who had not participated participated in sniping activities."

defendant is guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. criminal organizations SS, SD and Gestapo under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

THE PRESIDENT: The Defendant University, trained as Referendar in various cities and passed his final State Law Examination in December 1934. He took a position with the town administration of Doebeln in February 1935 and in the Fall of that year entered the SD. In the early part of 1942 Haensch was assigned to Sonderkommando 4b as its leader. It is the contention of the Prosecution that his authority over this unit began on January 16, 1942. The defendant asserts on the contrary that although it is true he was ordered to this post in January, he did not arrive at the site of the kommando until March 15, 1942. service, the defendant presented evidence to show that he was in Berlin on February 7, 1942, for some dental work, that, on February 20, 1942, he opened up a bank account, on February 21, 1942, he posed for some pictures and on another date attended a birthday party, all in Berlin.

entation of evidence both for and against the alibi contended for by the defendant. The question of alibi, however, remains moot, in view of the fact that even if the Tribunal assumed that the defendant did not arrive in Russia until March 15, 1942, the date asserted by him as the beginning of his active service with the Sonderkommando, this assumption would not exculpate him. The record proves beyond a reasonable doubt that Sonderkommando 4b, under the leadership of the defendant Haensch, was active in War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, even subsequent to March 15, 1942. and killed one-half of them. The identification of Haensch's unit in this mass execution is established by the following:

(1) Report No. 188, dated April 1, 1942 shows that Sonderkommando 4b had an active unit operating in Zhitomir.

(2) Report No. 189, dated April 3, 1942 states:

"Locations and communications as re 1 April 1942, remain unchanged."

so that it was bound to be the unit responsible for the incident described in the report as follows:

"Zhitomir -- 50 hostages from Gayssen were shot."

(3) Report No. 190, dated April 8, 1942 confirms the responsibility of Sonderkommando 4b for the events of April 3 by declaring that units of Sonderkommando 4b were still stationed at Zhitomir.

Report No. 189 above indicated, carries also another item under "Einsatzgruppe C":

"From 28 March up to and inclusive 31 March a total of 434 persons were subjected to 'special measures' (executed). The figures breaks down as follows:

253 Jews and 1 insane." 4b was responsible for the 434 executions, but for the purpose of demonstrating that Einsatzgruppe C (and, therefore, its integral units, including Sonderkommand 4b) was at the time actively engaged in the carrying out of the extermination program. 15. Report No. 6, dated Juno 5, 1942 shows that Sonderkommando 4b, under the leadership of Maonsch, was located at Gorlovka. The same report carries this item:

"Several large-scale actions against partisansa and Communists were carried out in the district of the Gorlovka in late April -- early May 1942. 727 out of1,038 persons arrested were given special treatment Among them there were 461 partisans, mentors of destruction battalions, saboteurs, looters and some Communist activists and NKVD agents."

The conclusion is inescapable that Hanesch's organization is responsible for the various executions mentioned herein. himself from Gorlovka at the time of the executions, but his evidence in this respect was vacillating and entirely inconclusive. He admitted that officials under his command participated in the action. Whether he personally was present in the actual physical arresting and shooting of the victims is of no consequence legally. A high ranking officer who plans an operation or participates in the planning and has control over officers taking part in the movement certainly cannot escape responsibility for the action by absenting himself the day of execution of the plan. Haensch was not only responsible for the sonderkommando during the operation, but he admits having been informed on the results thereof.

It is urged by Defense Counsel in behalf of Haensch that:

"In addition, nothing happened during the course of these operations which could be regarded as a crime. The containing of partisans, members of the ing to International Law.

I believe I further.

The report also shows that by the so-called 'special treatment'.vestigated."

partisans and Communists. Membership in any political party is not a capital offense according to the Rules of War and International Law. And executions for membership in a general political party can only be murder. It is asserted that all the cases were investigated. The report says nothing about investigations and, in any event, there is no evidence in the record that the investigations, if held, conformed to the accepted trial requirements, recognized by the Rules of War and International Law insofar as they appertain to civilians. Whatever defense exists to the charges contained in this item depends on the defendant's word. Can he be believed? never heard of the execution of Jews as Jews. Only three or four weeks prior to his alleged assumption of command over Sonderkommando 4b, the kommando killed, 1,224 Jews. He professed to know nothing about this massacre. He was asked:

"You have now stated that you have no reports.

Therefore, if 1,224 Jews were Jews?"

His only reply was that no one talked about these killings or any killings at all, and that he did not learn that Jews were executed for racial reasons until he arrived in Nuremberg five years later!

4b he was told by Mueller, Chief of the Gestapo and Thomas, Chief of Einsatzgruppe C, that the executive activities of Sonderkommando 4b were to remain unchanged. He was asked whether he carried out these directives of Mueller and Thomas and he replied in the affirmative.

Report No. 24, dated July 16, 1941, discloses the killing of 180 Jews and the burning of Jewish homes by Sonderkommando 4b. Report No. 88, dated September 19, 1941, spoke of the execution of 435 Jews as well as 28 saboteurs and 55 officials and agents of the NKWD. Report No. 94, d dated September 25, 1941, contained an item on the execution of 290 Jews. Report No. 111, dated October 12, 1941, declared that 125 Jews had been liquidated. Report No. 132, dated November 12, 1941, reported 161 Jews killed. Report No. 135, dated November 19, 1941, repotted 562 Jews liquidated. Report No. 143, dated December 8, 1941, described the killing of not only 137 Jews, but also 592 "mentally deficients". Report No. 173, dated February 25, 1942, revealed the killing of 649 political officials and 139 Jews. Report No. 177, dated March 6, 1942, chronicled the execution of 1,224 Jews. policy of Sonderkommando 4b as it existed prior to his arrival in Russia, and the above enumeration indicates quite clearly what that policy was, this can only mean that he continued with the execution of the FuehrerOrder. The Tribunal rejects completely the defendant's statement that he did not know of the execution of Jews. In the face of what appears in the record the Tribunal also refuses to accept as fact the statement of the defendant that he was only personally aware of four executions involving in all sixty deaths. einsatz service. Over eight pages (which is over one-third of the entire statement) were devoted to a discussion on executions and his, the defendant's manner of conducting then. On page 22 he said:

"I was requested to make statements con To this I must state the following:

An estimated number would lack any basis of fact.

For I cannot give such an estimate."

of executions performed by the kommando during the time he was its chief is practically conclusive, if words have any meaning, that the number was a very large one. There is additional reason for this conclusion, in suite of his mentioning specifically three or four executions. His long eight-page description of executions is written in a manner and style which reveals irrefutably that mass killings former a regular routine to him and were not unusual events. A few sentences taken from this volunteered statement are quite illuminating on this point:

"The executions were effected by shooting than 8-10 paces.

The seeumption that the shootings were effected 'by revolver' does not correspond with the facts.

I have already the 14/7/47.

"I must once again energetically repudiate the out in a mean manner, e.g., in the form in the neck or in an otherwise lowdown manner."

expert with long experience, belies the defendant's assertion on the witness stand teat his kommando conducted only four executions with aamaximum of sixty deaths. given the benefit of a hearing, but no evidence was adduced to indicate the character of the charges brought against the arrestees except the general statement that they were partisans, saboteurs, looters or Communist activists.

Nor was there any evidence that these persons recieved a trial. Furthermore, the large number of victims and the haste with which they were executed would demonstrate, considering the time element, the impossibility of trials for all of them. As a matter of fact the defendant testified that Streckenbach pointed out to him that in the East there would be no "formal court proceedings such as we were accustomed to carrying out in the Homeland, in the Police Courts, or another court." And on the contrary, he was instructed that the procedure was to follow the decree of the highest political authorities and it is a matter of record that all einsatz units had received the Fuehrer decree. The Fuehrer-Order, of course, provided for no trial whatsoever. The Tribunal is convinced that the civilians shot by Sonderkommando 4b under Haensch's leadership did not receive the trial intended by the Rules of War and International Law. The credible evidence shows, further that if there were any proceedings they were entirely of an ephemeral nature. the cases of the sixty persons executed by his kommando:

were killed under his orders:

"Q. There were sixty people killed under your orders?

A. Yes." he pronounced the death sentence.

"Q. Now, how many of these sixty cases did the evidence on?

A. The evidence? I only looked through Q. All right.

A. (Continuing) came thereafter.

Q. That is thirty-two that you investigated yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. So that means that twenty-eight went to your having reviewed the evidence?

A. No.

Q. Sixty were killed under your orders?

A. Yes.

Q. Thirty-two you investigated?

A. Yes." went on to say that no investigated the sixty cases. The defendant's manner of testifying, his shifting and evasive attitude while discussing this subject, convince the Tribunal that he did not tell the entire truth about the sixty alleged investigations. The defendant stated that some of the killings had been ordered by the Army, but that he reviewed those cases also. It developed, however, that no written report was made so that it is not clear, if he had no personal knowledge of the facts and received no written report, how he could review the cases. His explanation, which is obviously no explanation, follows:

"....these cases of executions which I was to me for information.

Today, I cannot state exactly, committed by the defendants.

I Considered kommandos."

Much of the defendant's testimony, even if believable, does not exculpate him. Much is simply not worthy of belief. For instance, when he says that Streckenbach, who was the man responsible for the announcement of the Fuehrer-Order in Pretzsch, said nothing to him about this momentous program as he was about to depart for the East, Haensch utters an obvious falsehood. when he says that in his conversation with Heydrich, Heydrich was silent about the Fuehrer-Order, he declares what is incredible. And even, more incredible is his statement that the very Chief of the Einsatzgruppe, under whom he was to operate, remained mute on the subject of the Order of the head of the State, the very Order which brought the Einsatzgruppen into being. And then one can only dismiss as fantastic the declaration of the defendant that his predecessor who had admittedly executed thousands of Jews under the Fuehrer-Order, and whose program Haensch was to continue, said nothing to Haensch about that program. And when Haensch boldly uttered that the first time he ever had any inkling of the Fuehrer-Order was when he arrived in Nuremberg six years later, he entered into a category of incredulousness which defies characterization. Crimes against Humanity has been clearly and conclusively established. From all the evidence in the case the Tribunal finds the defendant guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. criminal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

JUDGE SPAIGHT: (reading) passed his examinations as assessor in 1934 and entered the Administration of Justice at Halle. From June 19, 1941, until March 1942, he served as commander of Einsatzkommando 12. put it into effect because it was his good fortune never to have been in a position where he had to execute the order. When he was asked if he had been called upon to shoot 500 Jews under the Fuehrer-Order whether he would have done as, he replied:

"If I had been in a situation where the then probably I would have done it."

he would take the matter up with his conscience:

was carried out by one of his detachments, but declared that the execution was legal because the executees had sabotaged farm machinery and crops. The defendant's explanation is in flat contradiction to the report which specifically states that the 94 Jews were killed as a counter-measure. The phrase "counter-measure" carries no implication of guilt on the part of the victims and killing such victims can only be a crime. it had taken place, but admits that it was done by members of his kommando. He admitted further the possibility that the Fuehrer-Order figured in the decision of the sub-kommando leader to perform the execution. He asserts that his sub-komnando leader conducted investigations before shooting the Jews, but he made no independent inquiries to determine whether the executions were warranted. Taking him at his word, his acceptance without inquiry of the killing of 94 persons was a demonstration of criminal and wanton indifference which might well have induced his men to further illegal and unjustified executions. but admitted that there were shootings under his authority even though he did not know the number.

severe weather prevented any activities on the part of his kommando. It is a fact that Report No. 178 said:

"Kommando 12 had to limit its activities unpassable streets."

But it also said:

"From the 16 to 28 February 1942, 1,515 Jews.

271 Communists, 74 partisans, 421 Gypsies, as asocials and saboteurs."

While all these killings are not to be charged to Sonderkommando 12, it does refute the statement that Sonderkommando 12 was entirely immobilized during the period in question. Nor was it immobilized, according to Report No. 165, which, covering events in January 1942, said:

"Besides, 2 further Teilkommandos were of combing out the northern Crimea."

Then there was the episode of the Roumanian Jews. The prosecution contended that the defendant was involved in a forced migration of Jews from German-controlled territory into Roumania, and that in the operation some of the Jews were shot. The defendant admitted that he had led some 6,000 to 7,000 Jews across the Dnjestr River, but denied that in this movement any of the Jews were shot. In fact he endeavored to convey the impression that in this particular affair a great favor had been done the Jews in repatriating them. A witness, Harsch, called to testify on the subject stated that he witnessed the arrival of the Jews on the Roumanian side of the river, and that once they had gained that point they evinced their gratitude to the German escort by crying "Heil Hitler". Although this contingent of Jews escaped the German firing squad by leaving German territory, it is not so certain what fate awaited them in Roumania. The defendant Nosske, in this regard, testified, as stated before in the General Opinion:

"I assume that the Roumanians wanted to trouble of shooting them.

We didn't want to do the work for the Roumanians."

The witness Harsch said that later he saw these same Jews within barbed wire enclosures on Roumanian territory.

total killings of the parent organizations, Einsatzgruppe D, but refused to name any figure or even an estimate of the number of persons his kommando had executed. He said that in his entire period of service in Russia he had only seen two people killed and then, after vividly narrating the details of an incident which resulted in numerous executions, he could not or would not state the number of people who had been killed. It is extraordinary that he should recall the alleged investigation of this incident but not recall what happened as a result of the investigation. executed by his kommando, he did finally say that he knew it had killed at least 244. Taking his testimony as a whole, the Tribunal is convinced that the kommando executed a number considerably larger than 244. Nor is it convinced that the Rules of War and International Law were observed in all these cases.

Report No. 95, dated September 15, 1941, speaks of various executions conducted by Einsatzgruppe D of which Sonderkommando 12 formed a part. In his summation, defense counsel says:

"Even if the report contains reports on of the Fuehrer-Order."

But the report itself says:

"From 19 August until 15 September, Total number:

killings enumerated here, it is obvious that the shooting of the Jews, since no qualifying phrase limits the reference to the Jews, was done on the basis of the Fuehrer-Order. the Roumanians shows a familiarity with the Fuehrer-Order which belies his general assertion that he was opposed to it. In that statement he practically asserted that he was against killing Jews for the Roumanians, but that there was no objection to the same kind of a performance if it took place in the territory of his own organization. to Germany, the Higher SS and Police Leader in the Duesseldorf area instructed him to round up all Jews and half-Jews in that area and shoot them. The defendant stated that he protested this order and that, eventually, it was revoked or at any rate not enforced. Nosske's protest against this order was undoubtedly due mostly to the fact that many of the intended victims, because of the conjugal relationship of the halfJews, were considered Germans. Nonetheless, his action in refusing categorically to obey the order, demonstrated, contrary to the argument advanced throughout the trial in behalf of the various defendants, that a member of the German Armed Forces could protest a superior order and not be shot in consequence. Though it is true the defendant suffered some inconveniences because of his unwillingness to shoot the people of Duesseldorf, he was not shot or even degraded.

defendant is guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. organizations SS, SD and Gestapo under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess until one forty-five o'clock.

(The Tribunal recessed until 1345 hours.)

(The hearing reconvened at 1345 hours, 9 April 1948)

THE MARSHAL: All persons in the Courtroom will please take their seats. The Tribunal is again in session.

JUDGE DIXON: The defendant Adolf Ott. administrative office of the German workers Front in Lindau. He joined the NSDAP in 1922 and became a member of the SS in 1931. In 1935 he entered the Security Service. except perhaps the meaning he intended to give to the word "execution". In his pre-trial affidavit he said that his kommando carried out 80 to 100 executions. At the trial he stated that, by the word execution, he meant the death of but one person. The context of the affidavit would logically convey a contrary view because, immediately after speaking of the "80 to 100 executions", he says: "I remember one execution which took place in the vicinity of Bryansk", and he then proceeds to describe this execution which involved "corpses". The affidavit also says that the valuables collected from "theseepeople" were sent to Einsatzgruppe B. to the effect that the word "execution" is used in the sense of a multiple killing. However, for the purposes of the ascertainment of guilt or innocence it matters little whether, by "80 to 100 executions", Ott meant the killing of only 80 to 100 people or a multiple of 80 to 100, which multiple, in view of the evidence in this case, would increase the number of the slain to many hundreds at the very least.

Sonderkommando 7b on February 15, 194-2, and, according to his testimony in court, he arrived at the headquarters of the kommando in Bryansk on February 19. He asserted, however, at the trial, that he did not actually take over the leadership of the unit until about the middle of March. It is the contention of the prosecution that Ott testifyingly delayed his chief ship of the kommando until March 15, in order to avoid responsibility for the executions enumerated in Report No. 194:

"In the area of the Einsatzgruppe, during the following were specially treated:

through SK 7b: 82 persons, 19 among then for 27 Jews."

February 19 for the specific purpose of taking over control of Sonderkommando 7b it is not clear why he should have waited until March 15 to assume leadership of the unit. But even if this unexplained delay in the technical assumption of command were a fact, this would not of itself exculpate Ott from responsibility for the operation involved. Under Control council Law No. 10 one may be convicted for taking a "consenting part in the perpetration of crimes" and it would be difficult to maintain that Ott, while actually with the kommando, did not (even though technically not its commanding officer) consent to these executions, declared that the 82 persons enumerated therein were killed between March 6 and March 30.

Thus, if arguendo Ott's authority over the kommando was delayed until March 15, there is still the responsibility on his part for the executions which occured between March 15 and March 30. as to the number killed before March 15 and the number executed after March 15 is academic, because the evidence is conclusive that, during the at least ten-month period that Ott commanded sonderkommando 7b, great numbers of people were killed in violation of international Law. in the individual judgments, to enumerate and discuss all the executions charged against the defendants by the Prosecution if it is once established that the defendant is guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. In this respect, Ott himself removed every possible scintilla of doubt when he said:

"I told my sub-kommando-leaders that basis of the Fuehrer-Order."

After this statement in court, he was asked:

"Did I understand you, witness, to say accordance with the Fuehrer-Order?

Is that what you said?

And his answer was:

"Yes, that is correct." shot, even if he did not belong to a partisan or sabotage organization. And he replied:

"Yes. He would have been shot, even one of these organizations."

incontrovertible guilt, more questions were out to him on this subject, so that there could be no possible misunderstanding The further interrogation follows:

"Q. If he had not belonged to an organization he would have been shot anyway?

A. He would have been shot if he had not been Q. .....so that whether he belonged to an or saboteurs; or not, he was bound to be shot because, if he wasn't shot as a be shot under the Fuehrer-order?

That's correct, isn't it?

A. He was shot in accordance with the Fuehrer Order -- yes.

I would like to add..... that, in this particular case to see 'is he a member of an organization or is he not'.Q. And in each case you found out he was a organization?

A. One of these three groups.

Q. Yes, now if you had found out that he was under the Fuehrer-Order, that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. What was the necessity of the investigation shot?

What; was the reason for wasting all anyway?

A. Interrogations were carried out to find out and their activities.

That was the purpose of the interrogation."

refused to speak:

"Q. Some of them refused to talk?

A. That is so.

Q. They were shot just the same?

A. They had to be shot if they were Jews." of equivocation and error, the defendant was questioned further, and he answered as follows:

"Q. Well, then you did shoot some Jews because they were Jews?

A. I have already said, ..... every Jew Q. How many Jews did you shoot just because they were Jews?

A. I estimate there must have been about 20, at least."

that he shot 20 Jews just because they were Jews conclusively establishes his guilt, and it is unnecessary to consider the other items of accusation advanced by the prosecution. this subject, and that is the undeviating fidelity of the defendant to the virtue of Consistency. consistency, which has always been regarded as a jewel, did not lose any of its sparkle or glean in the hands of Adolf Ott. When asked why he did not release some of the Jews when he had the opportunity to do so, he replied:

"I believe in such matters there is capture or I have to release them all."

One more item in Ott's case is worthy of comment. In his pre-trial affidavit he said:

"In June 1942, without having received ment camp in Orel.

In my opinion people comparatively snail misdeeds.

For this were made by my kommando.

It happened too that people were released.

The in this camp was 120 persons."

in the declaration that it was his opinion that people ought not to be shot right away for comparatively small misdeeds", but his assertion that it "happened too" that is, it even happened, that people were released. the defendant guilty under counts I and II of the Indictment. member of the criminal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under count III of the Indictment.

JUDGE SPEIGHT: The defendant Woldemar Klingelhoefer. Kassel, served in the Army from June to December 1918 and after the war studied music and voice. He gave concerts throughout Germany and later received a State's Certificate as voice-teacher. In 1935 he became an opera singer. In 1937 he took over Department culture, SD III/c in Kassel. In 1941 he was assigned to Einsatzgruppe B as an interpreter, This Einsatzgruppe, already by November 1941, according to Report No. 133, had killed 45,467 persons. This score was considerably increased later.

evidence at all indicate that Klingelhoefer could be charged with all these executions simply because he belonged to Einsatzgruppe B, which, of course, consisted of several kommandos. The reference to the larger unit is made only because the defendant has told of various transfers within the Einsatzgruppe. He said that he was in Sonderkommando 7b from June 22, 1941 to July 10, 1941, and then entered Vorkommando Moscow. In October he took over an independent command of this unit and held it until he went on leave. On his return to Russia on December 20, 1941 he entered the Group Staff of Einsatzgruppe B where he remained until December 1943. There are scores of reports covering the activity of these various units and it is unnecessary to trace Klingelhoefer in and out of these individual units specifying the exact number of persons killed by the units during the time he was with that particular organization.

Report No. 92 shows that Vorkommando Moscow killed over 100 persons as of September 13, 1941 and Klingelhoefer admits he was in charge of that unit during August and September 1941.

Report No. 108 declares that by September 28, 1941 the Vorkommando Moscow and the Group Staff of Einsatzgruppe B had killed 2,029 persons. Between August 20 and September 28, 1941 the Vorkommando and the Group Staff executed 1,885 people. Klingelhoefer admitted that he was in charge of Vorkommando Moscow during that time. had executed 2,457 persons and, whereas Klingelhoefer can not be charged with the entire number of 572 persons killed between September 28 and October 26, 1941, he can not escape responsibility for some of these killings since in this period he commanded part of Vorkommando Moscow.

he witnessed showing thereby the greatest familiarity with the macabre techniques involved but in his pre-trial affidavit he related how he shot 30 Jews because they had left the Ghetto without permission. He did this, he said, under orders from the chief of the Einsatzgruppe, Nebe, who ordered him "to establish on example". At the trial he gave a different explanation of this episode which, however, establishes even a clearer case of guilt. He said that three women had contacted some partisans and, returning to the town, had talked to the thirty Jews in their homes. This, according to the defendant, made them guilty of partisan action and he had then shot. He, of course, also shot the three women. He, did, however, accord them a special consideration. He had them blindfolded for the execution and then ordered that they be given a separate grave. Einsatzgruppe operation was only that of interpreter. Even if this were true it would not exonerate him from guilt because in locating, evaluating and turning over lists of Communist party functionaries to the executive department of his organization he was aware that the people listed would be executed when found. In this function, therefore, he served as an accessory to the crime.

"Q. I asked you, witness, didn't you know that going to exterminate all these he could?

You either knew it or you didn't know it.

A. Of course, I did."

mere interpreter in the grim business of the Einsatzgruppe. He was an active leader and commander. He knew what the einsatz units were doing to the Jews, "Q. You told us you knew that if he then set free?

A. If he left the ghetto, he violated the Q. So that he was killed anyway?

A. Then he had to be executed, yes."

In his own affidavit the defendant stated:

"While I was assigned by Nebe to the part of the Jews there.

The Jews had Hauptsturnfuehrer Egon Noack.

The interrogation on the witness stand that he was morally opposed to the Fuehrer-Order, it is evident from all the testimony in the case that he went along quite willingly with it. would have been happy for Hitler to win the war even at the expense of its present condition with two million Germans killed, the nation in utter ruins and all of Europe devastated This statement has no bearing, of course, on the question of his guilt under counts I and II, but it is helpful in determining the state of mind as to whether he obeyed the so-called Superior Orders with a full heart or not. defendant accepted the Fuehrer-Order without reservation and that he executed it without truce.

The Tribunal finds the defendant guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. of the criminal organizations SS and SD under conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is therefore guilty under count III of the Indictment.

JUDGE DIXON: the Wehrmacht from 1934 to 1936. He then joined the SD. to October 2, 1941. During this time, the Sonderkommando was engaged, as all other kommandos of the Einsatzgruppe, in the execution of the Fuehrer Order. The reports show that, during the time that Fendler was with the unit in question, many executions occurred:

Report No. 24 - IIA/31, NO-2938 Report No. 19 - IIC/49, NO-2934 Report No. 111- IIA/44, NO-3155and asserts complete ignorance of them.

In fact, according to his story, he did not learn of the Fuehrer execution order until after he had severed all connections with the Sonderkommando. Department III and that he was concerned only with the gathering of information. Defendant after defendant has asserted that, in doing Department III work, he was utterly ignorant of the functions performed by the other departments, but one cannot help but observe that Department III did not operate within the confines of a high stone wall separating it from the rest of the kommando. An Einsatzkommando in the field usually consisted of from 80 to 100 men and 7 to 10 officers.

Sonderkommando 4b had a staff of 7 officers. Fendler lived, ate and associated with these officers. He was Department III, some other officer was Department IV, and still another officer was Department V or VI, and so on. It is absurd to assume that Fendler could not know what these other officers were doing, especially in view of the fact that Fendler was the second senior officer in the kommando. Fendler, himself, ever conducted an execution, but it is maintained that he was part of an organization committed to an extermination program.

Fendler asserts that Department IV alone conducted the executions and, therefore, within the water-tight compartment of his own Department III, he did not know what was happening in Department IV. between the SD (which is Department III) and the Gestapo (which is Department IV), said:

"One of the principal functions of the local Agency for the local Gestapo units.

In the Police and SD was slightly closer."

executions and that, generally, he did not know what was taking place. Fendler's assertion runs counter to normal every day experience because it is simply incredible that a high-ranking officer in a unit would not know of the principal occupation of that unit. after he had left the kommando and was at Kiev on his way home. He was asked:

"So that you had to travel five hundred kilometers and two days' distance from the is that right?"

And his answer was "yes". the kommando was making out morale reports on the population. He was asked whether, when he learned of the pogrom which had occurred in Tarnopol, where about 600 people were murdered, he included this fact in his report. He replied in the negative. He was asked why he would not include so momentous an event as the murdering of 600 people in the streets in a report which he was compiling on the morale of the population, and he replied he did not have a chance:

"Q. Well, how much time would it take in an SD 600 Jews were murdered, - or you didn't want to report?

How much time would it take to say that?

A. Two seconds.

Q. Well, then, why didn't you have the two seconds to write that?

A. Because I made no report.

Q. Why didn't you make a report?

A. Because I was given the order by the kommando leader to evaluate this material."

leader and stated that, when he acted as an advance kommando leader, he occupied himself only with the obtaining of intelligence files left behind by the Bolshevists. But, in evaluating these reports, it is inevitable that he would need to tell someone what he found. In fact, he did admit that this information usually was "utilized for individual reports". The Army was also informed "in a written form or orally". and thus would not know what the others were doing, the defendant stated that his unit never divided its forces. Thus, one officer would not need to do the job of others. However, since this would establish that, by sheer proximity, the officers could not help but know each other's business, the defendant later stated that the unit was not always together because of the distance it had to travel.

The defendant knew that executions were taking place. He admitted that the procedure which determined the so-called guilt of a person which resulted in his being condemned to death was "too summary". But there is no evidence that he ever did anything about it. As the second highest ranking officer in the kommando, his views could have been heard in complaint or protest against what he now says was a too summary procedure, but he chose to let the injustice go uncorrected.

He was asked:

"Do I understand you correctly that you were of sufficiently safeguarded?

Is that what you want to say, that that was your opinion; was that your opinion?"

And he replied:

"That was my theoretical opinion, Mr. Prosecutor." the Tribunal is not prepared to say that the evidence in this case rises to that degree of certainty which could conclusively establish that the defendant was guilty of planning the killing of people or ordering their death. It does, however, show that the defendant took a consenting part in the criminal activities in the sense intended in Control Council Law No. 10, although there are some mitigating circumstances. From the evidence in the case the Tribunal finds the defendant guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. The Tribunal finds the defendant was a member of the criminal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

THE PRESIDENT: the Latvian Army in 1932. After discharge in 1933 he worked with an import firm until November 1939 and then moved to German-occupied Posen, being employed from November 1939 until January 1940 at the Advisory Office for Immigrants and from January 1940 until May 1941 at the Office of Repatriation of Ethnic Germans. In May 1941 he was assigned for emergency service with the RSHA and then transferred to Pretzsch as an interpreter to the newly formed Sonderkommando 4a. He traveled with the Sonderkommando to Hrubgoschow and from there to Ludzk where he was assigned to a Teilkommando of the same organization.

In December 1941, he took leave and reported back to Sonderkommando 4a in Charkow in March 1942. He remained with this unit until December 1942 and, at the same time, acted as liaison officer between the Einsatzkommando and German and Hungarian army units. In January 1943, the area under the jurisdiction of the 2nd Army was subordinated to the area of the Einsatzgruppe and the defendant's reports and activities were controlled by Einsatzgruppe B. In the winter of 1943, he returned to Berlin. time he served with Sonderkommando 4a, he was officially informed that the kommando participated in a number of executions in the areas assigned. that such executions did occur. A the trial the defendant claimed that executions were entirely beyond his sphere of activities, and his job was simply to make reports. One could well believe, if one were to accept as fact the statements of the various defendants who functioned in the so-called Department III that these kommandos were engaged in a scientific expedition studying the flora and fauna of the land through which they traveled, obtaining data on agriculture and economy, but in some way or other avoiding all contact with the grim enterprise to which the units were committed. It is not known what blinders these defendants wore that they could be in the very midst of the carnage caused by their own associates and yet remain entirely unaffected thereby. Again we come to the question of credibility. The witness was asked whether, in making a report on the economy of the country he would indicate that the labor supply had been affected because of the execution of Jews. He replied in the negative and the following ensued:

"Q. Making a report on the economy you would include that in your reports, would you not?

A. The situation which we found was that the entire Q. The economy wasn't helped by shooting off further labor supply, was it?

A. No.

Q. Did you report this in your reports?

A. I may say the following.

Q. Did you make this statement in your reports, that the economy was made worse?

Did you report that?

A. As far as I remember I reported about the fact Q. And did you report that Jews were being decimated?

A. No.

Q. You didn't put in any report that Jews were being killed and this affected the economy of the Ukraine?

A. No, in this shape I did not report about it. I only Q. ..... You say that you did include in your report economic potential.

Did you then add that this because of the executions?

A. No, I did not report that.

Q. And yet you want to tell the Tribunal seriously that you made a report on the economy of the Ukraine?

A. Yes." employed as an interpreter. He amplified later that he was drafted into the Einsatz-organization because of his ability in languages. His witness Kraege confirmed this. Yet, at the trial, von Radetzky denied acting in the job for which apparently he was best adapted.

It can only be assumed that he made this denial because, by admitting the translating functions, he would be admitting that he knew of executions which followed certain investigations. Asked how it was that he was able to side-step his job of interpreter he replied that his work day was filled up with his job of expert in the SD Department.

"Q. Well, how did you become and expert in De partment III?

You had not had SD training?

A. No, I did not have that, I said-

Q. Well, then, how did you become an expert so quickly?

A. I was appointed for this because of my Q. Well now, we come back to languages again.

wouldn't he naturally turn to you who was interpreter?

A. There were other interpreters in the kom Q. Then you were not used as an interpreter?

A. I was never used as an interpreter by the Commander.

I was never used in interro gations as interpreter, either."

an interpreter. Report No. 156, commenting on the activities of a teilkommando of Sonderkommando 4a at Lubny, stated that - and thus, "......it was possible, with the aid of leading Communists.

"On the 18 October 1941 the Teilkommando of the NKWD Files."

34 agents and Communists and 73 Jews were shot."

Report No. 37 states:

"In Zhitomir itself, Gruppenstab and the NKWD."

the NKWD could only be established through the medium of the interpreter the documents would point to you Radetzky as that interpreter since he admitted being with this advance commando. Hence the possible motive for denying the interpreter's position.

Other reports also show the need for an interpreter:

Report No. 24 - IIA/81, NO-2938 Report No.187 - IIIC/34, NO-3237 Report No.111 - IIA/45, NO-3155 Report No. 111 would indicate still another reason why von Radetzky would deny his interpreter's role:

"On 26 September, the Security Police took up its activities in Kiev.

That day, Camp, and in the city itself.

Thus, interrogated in detail.

Conforming denied all political activity.

Only confessed, i.e. they admitted the position statements beyond this.

They were shot on 27 September."

(Emphasis supplied). he obtained supplies for the komnando. When asked what supplies were involved he replied: "Food and fuel". He was then asked about ammunition. He replied that he did not remember. It was then put to him:

"Witness, you either remember or you don't remember.

If you remember food ordered ammunition or not.

Did you order ammunition?"

and he now replied with a definite "No". He was then asked why it was that he at first said he could not remember if he had ever obtained ammunition for his kommando:

"Q. Do you remember now very definitely that you did not order ammunition?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you say now definitely that you did not order ammunition?

A. I an certain that I would remember if kommando."

pre-trial affidavit, that, during his absence, von Radetzky took over. Blobel repudiated this statement on the witness stand, but he also denied that von Radetzky could ever have been even a teilkommando or vorkommando leader. But the documentary evidence clearly establishes that von Radetzky was active as a sub-kommando leader. rank in his kommando could qualify as leaders and, to that extent, he also was "a leader of the kommando." Sonderkommando 4a and rear army HQ "to liquidate the Jews of Zhitomir completely and radically." not present at it but that he had been ordered to negotiate with the field command about the furnishing of vehicles. He stated that he was of the impression that the Jews were to be resettled in Rowno. It is difficult to believe that the defendant did not know what "resettlement" meant in Einsatzgruppen circles. Sonderkommando 4a during Blobel's absence. Although there is evidence that Blobel was often absent because of illness, the Tribunal cannot find beyond a reasonable doubt that, during those absences, von Radetzky took over the kommando.

Report No. 14 tells of a reprisal operation carried out at Ludzk by a sub-unit of Sonderkommando 4a. Gustav Kraege stated in an affidavit that von Radetzky was one of the officers of this sub-unit. Von Radetzky stated he was present in Ludzk during the time of this execution but denied having been commander of this unit, although he stated he was the highest ranking officer in the sub-kommando.

When Kraege appeared in court as a witness he sought to repudiate his statement about ascribing the chiefship of the sub-kommando to von Radetzky but he did admit that, at the time he was actually in Ludzk, he believed that von Radetzky was commanding, since Radetzky gave him his direct orders. knowledge of the extermination of Jews he finally admitted this knowledge. doubt that the defendant knew that Jews were executed by Sonderkommando 4a because they were Jews, and it finds further that von Radetzky took a consenting part in these executions.

The Tribunal further finds, in contradistinction to the defendant's statement, that he did at times command a sub-kommando. luntarily and remained in it against his will, submitting that on eleven different occasions he endeavored to be relieved from this service. It must be remarked, however, that whether he became a member of the einsatz forces voluntarily or involuntarily, he did his work zestfully. It can be said in mitigation that, according to his testimony, he did on occasion endeavor to assist potential victims of the Fuehrer-Order and in one particular instance issued passes which allowed some persons to escape from the camp in which they were being held. Nonetheless, the Tribunal is convinced that the evidence establishes beyond a resonable doubt that von Radetzky took a consenting part in War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity and, therefore, finds him guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. on behalf of the defendant to show that he did not enter the SS or SD organizations voluntarily, but was drafted. It is not sufficient however, in order to absolve oneself from the charge of membership in a criminal organization to show that one entered its ranks involuntarily.

Attention is directed to that part of the International Military Tribunal Decision which says that it charges with criminal membership in the SS those persons who became or remained members of the organization with knowledge that it was being used for criminal purposes, "or who were personally implicated as members of the organization in the commission of such crimes." The decision excludes those who were drafted into membership by the State in such a way as to give them no choice in the matter but adds that this exception does not apply to those who committed the acts declared criminal by Article 6 of the Charter. Thus, the question whether von Radetzky entered the SS voluntarily or involuntarily becomes moot in view of the finding of the Tribunal that he is guilty under Counts I find II of the Indictment, thereby proving conclusively his personal implication in the acts established as criminal by the Charter. The same finding holds true with regard to the defendant's membership in the SD. defendant was a member of the criminal organizations SS and SD under the conditions defined by the Judgment of the International Military Tribunal and is, therefore, guilty under Count III of the Indictment.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will be in recess fifteen minutes.

(A recess was taken.)

(The hearing reconvened at 1505 hours.)

THE MARSHAL: The Tribunal is again in session.

THE PRESIDENT: The defendant, Eduard Strauch.

SS-Lieutenant Colonel Eduard Strauch is a graduate lawyer. He joined the Allgemeine SS on December 1, 1931. In 1934 he joined the SD. Einsatzkommando 2 on November 4, 1941. This is denied by the defendant who, in effect, claims he was never in charge of this kommando. The defendant explains that when an area passed into the hands of the Civilian Administration from the military the einsatz units ceased to exist and were replaced by:

(1) the chief commanders (Befehlshaber) of the (2) the commandants (kommandeure) of the Security military at all, yet in seeking to make this point he gave the illustration of the Chief of Offices (Befehlshaber) of the SIPO and SD, Ostland with headquarters at Riga, the area of the Civilian Administration, maintaining his headquarters as Chief of Einsatzgruppe A in Krasnowlisk, within the Army area.

By this very illustration, which was supposed to show the contrary, it is very clear how one could act in a civilian administrative capacity and be head of an einsatz unit at the same time. command of Einsatzkommando 2, Latvia, on November 4, 1941, and that in February 1942 he became commander of the Security Police and SD in White Ruthenia, situated at Minsk. From some time in July 1943 until he left Russia, he served as Intelligence Officer in an anti-Guerrilla warfare unit.

Strauch's guilt has been established by numerous documents. Strauch seeks to deny that he cooperated with Jeckeln, Higher SS and Police Leader in the Jewish operation of November 30, 1941, because he only had 20 men under him. But it is an extraordinary conincidence indeed that one officer and exactly 20 men of Einsatzkommando 2 participated in that operation which resulted in the death of 10,600 Jews in Riga.

Report No. 186, dated March 27, 1946 shows Strauch was commander of the Security Police and the SS for White Ruthenia during this period. The report chronicled the death of 15,000 Jews in Tscherwen.

Report No. 183, dated March 20, 1942, states:

"In the period from 5 to the 28 February Another 16 persons were arrested."

This operation was conducted by Hoffmann who was Strauch's deputy, and who kept Strauch informed of his operations, as Strauch admitted on the witness stand. 31, 1942 to the Reich Commissar in Riga as follows:

"During detailed consultations with SS-Obersturmbannfuehrer Dr. jur.

weeks. In the Minsk-Land area, the of labor in any way."

then abandoned that position, claiming that Kube exaggerated the figures. The Tribunal is convinced that the letter is authentic, and that the statements contained therein represent the truth even if not accepting the absolute accuracy of the figures down to the last digit.

of the Jews, and displayed considerable indignation when anyone sought to defend them. In a letter dated 25 July 1943, he related a plan whereby 5,000 Jews of the Minsk Ghetto were to be "resettled". The Jews, jowever, learned that the resettlement meant execution and Strauch bitterly attacked those responsible for this "treachery". He said:

"We had no choice but to herd the Jews together by force."

70 Jews to special treatment and expressing his resentment because complaint had arisen from the fact that he had had the gold fillings removed from the mouths of these Jews before they were killed. on Strauch which further emphasizes Strauch's guilt which is complete:

"About the middle of February 1943 the sturmbannfuehrer, Eduard Strauch.

At about 6 o'clock in the morning the kommando was called together.

A Haupt every member of the kommando.

A cer to carry out the shootings.

JUDGE SPEIGHT: Felix Ruehl from 1926 until 1929. He then went to England for one year. In February 1931 until September 1933 he worked in the Luckenwalde court and in September 1933 joined the Gestapo. In May 1941 while attending the Leadership School in Berlin he was summoned to Pretzsch, assigned to Sonderkommando 10b of Einsatzgruppe D, left for the field on June 27 or 28 and arrived in Roumanian territory about July 30. On October 1, 1941, having been called back to Berlin to continue his studies, he left the kommando. Robert Barth, supposedly a former onlisted man in the kommando in which he stated that during the "temporary duty trips" of the kommando leader which usually took two or three days, the unit was commanded by Ruehl. If it were established that Ruehl really served as commander of the unit even for brief periods during such times as the kommando was engaged in liquidating operations, guilt under Counts I and II would be conclusive. The Prosecution maintains that it has proved that verything. But if this proposition is to be upheld it must rest on the one pedestal of Barth's affidavit. Ruehl could not come into the leadership automatically as the result of rank or seniority because they were such as to place him only in the fourth position. Thus the proof of leadership must rest on the Barth column which probatively speaking, is a rather shaky one. While the rules of procedure permit the introduction of affidavits and indeed this innovation in trial routine has accomplished much good in the saving of time, an affidavit can never take the place of a flesh and blood witness in court when the affiant is available and the issue raised by the affidavit is a vital one. Had Barth appeared in court, not only would Defense Counsel have had the opportunity to cross-examine him, but the Tribunal itself could have appraised with more discernment than it can now his otherwise unsupported statement of Ruehl's supposed leadership. The pedestal of Barth's assertion with regard to upholding the hypothesis of Ruehl's leadership must withstand the successive hammer blows of, first, the unexplained absence of the affiant, secondly, Ruehl's low rank in the hierarchy of the unit and, thirdly, the fact that normally an administrative officer would not have executive functions.

Under a multiple attack of that character the Tribunal cannot ascribe to this lone piece of evidence the strength needed to sustain so momentous a weight as the leadership of a kommando with its concomitant responsibility for executions. witness stand, that Ruehl never functioned as a deputy commander of Sonderkommando 10b. Ruehl denies that the action reported therein took place and then adds that he arrived after the date of the alleged executions. The communication in question, however, states:

"Kommando 10b reached Czernowitz on Sunday, 6 July 1941, at 18.

15 hours fore and had provided quarters."

(Emphasis supplied) of quarters it is not to be excluded that he led the "advance division" which established communications with the Roumanians and provided quarters. This, however, in itself would not make him a participant in the executive actions which followed nor would his contact with the Roumanians in itself establish that he was aware that executions were impending. A presumption in an issue as serious as the one involved in this particular transaction.

The Prosecution has also introduced Report No. 19, dated July 11, 1941 which plainly involves the kommando, but again there is no indication that Ruehl was in charge of the kommando or had any authority over it.

Report No. 50, dated August 1, 1941, speaks of an operation in Chotin or Hotin. Ruehl denies all knowledge of the executions mentioned therein. That Ruehl may not have taken any part in these executions is admissible, but that he was ignorant of their happening is contrary to human observation. That he may not have done anything to prevent them is within the realm of believability but to assert that as a member of a unit made up of only seven officers and 85 men he could not know that killings were taking place is to enter into a fairyland which was quite the antithesis of the demons' land in which they were operating. deduction to produce the conclusion of cognizance. It is readymade in Ruehl's own pre-trial sworn statement in which he tells of having received official notice of the killings by the kommando of 12 to 15 people declared to have participated in a surprise attack against Roumanian troops. He also tells of the sonderkommando which killed 30 Jews declared to have participated in the murder of two German air pilots. At the trial he denied having actual knowledge of these events and stated that what he acquired in the way of information came to him only through hearsay. illegal operations of Sonderkommando 10b, it has not been established beyond a reasonable doubt that he was in a position to control, prevent or modify the severity of its program. the matter of the migration of a large group of Jews from the German controlled territory into Roumania. Although this episode was dwelt on at length during the trial, no evidence was adduced to show that Ruehl acted in any capacity other than courier between the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe and the escorting Roumanian officers of the so-called transport. There is no evidence that Ruehl in any way maltreated these Jews, and certainly he did not participate in the execution of any of them. months and during the entire period took part in no executive operation nor did his low rank place him automatically into a position where his lack of objection in any way contributed to the success of any executive operation.

Judge Dixon: Heinz Hermann Schubert: 1934, having previously served in the Hitler Youth Organization. In October 1934 he joined the SS. From October 1941 to June 1942 he served as adjutant to Ohlendorf, Chief of Einsatzgruppe D. At the trial he testified that his duties consisted mostly of attending to the personal affairs of his chief, the receiving and filing of correspondence, the making of appointments, receiving visitors and so on. It would appear, however, that he was more than an office boy with shoulder straps.

Schubert's own affidavit answers the question as to whether he is guilty under Counts I and II of the Indictment. The pertinent parts of this affidavit read as follows:

"In December 1941 -- I do not remember mations of the Einsatzgruppe D. My consisted of three parts:

recount on the witness stand of the part he played in the execution of defenselless and innocent people would clearly take him within the purview of Control Council Law No. 10.

When asked why these 700 to 800 people were shot he replied:

"I did not know why the individuals were being executed.

It is possible tion were being executed.

As for me, based on the Fuehrer-Order."

he emphasized that he did not select the place for the execution. It was then pointed out to him that his affidavit did not so indicate:

"This does not say that you selected it.

It says that you went there to ing."

He affirmed this version. With regard to the taking of the valuables he also confirmed in court:

denied that he had been "generally assigned to inspections". He did, however, state that he knew "definitely" that Gabel "carried out such inspections". It would be strange, indeed, that Ohlendorf should mention three names, and it developed that the only one who performed the duties he assigned to them should be that one person who did not appear in this trial as a defendant. instructions generally given by the Chief of the Einsatzgruppe with regard to the "manner of carrying out executions". THE PRESIDENT: Matthias Graf. the whole time he served in Russia was he an officer. When first attached to Einsatzkommando 6 he held the rank of Unterscharfuehrer (corporal). After one year he was promoted to Scharfuehrer (sergeant) and when he left Russia in October 1942 he held the rank of Oberscharfuehrer (master sergeant), that is to say he remained in a non-commissioned officers' status throughout the entire period of his service with the kommando. served as SD expert. Upon Grimminger's death in July 1941 Graf took over his position.

Although Graf was statistically with Einsatzkommando 6 for thirteen months he served also for a short period with the Commander of the Security Police and the SD in Stalino. For five weeks he was detailed to the Liaison Office of AOK 17; he was on furlough for five weeks and was ill and on sick leave for about three months. Thus about five months of thirteen months' incumbency with the einsatzkommando were spent away from the unit. During the eight months he actually served with the organization, Graf never once acted as commander of it or any of its subdivisions. but he refused to accept the assignment. Because of this refusal he was arrested and placed in custody for disciplinary action. Eventually the disciplinary proceedings were dropped and he was sent back to Germany. be innocent until proved guilty. The Prosecution has introduced reports showing that Einsatzkommando 6 engaged in various executive operations. It is not questioned that the kommando did participate in liquidating operations and, despite the defendant's denial, it is not to be doubted that he know of at least some of these executions. However, more than more knowledge of illegality or crime is required in order to establish guilt under Counts I and II of the Indictment. Furthermore, in view of his various absences from the kommando it can not be assumed that his membership in the organization of itself proves his presence at and knowledge of any particular executive operation, without there being proof of that fact.

In view of Graf's non-commissioned officer's status in an organization where rank was of vital importance, it is not to be assumed that the commander of the organization would take Graf into his confidence in planning an operation. As a non-commissioned officer he would not participate in officers' conferences. Since there is no evidence in the record that Graf was at any time in a position to protest against the illegal actions of others, he cannot be found guilty as an accessory under Counts I and II of the Indictment.

Since there is no proof that he personally participated in any of the executions or their planning, he may not be held as a principal. the Tribunal concludes that the evidence does not rise to that degree of proof required by the principles of justice and the concomitant guarantees of correct procedure to warrant a finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and thus finds him not guilty. of lack of attendance and general indifference to the organization. It would appear that at no time was Graf a fanatical adherent of National Socialism. In 1932 he intended to go to South America but was prevented from doing so because of restriction on foreign currency. He tried to migrate in 1940 but could not do so because of the war. His primary interest was not politics but business. His Work Book, a document required under the Law of February 26, 1935 (published in Reich Law Gazette 311) lists him as an Independent Business man from the period of October 1, 1935 to February 1, 1940 and as a civil servant from March 1, 1940. for service with the Landrat in Kempten and then entered the SD-Aussenstelle in Kempten on a war supplementary basis. that he might join the army. He took an interpreter's examination in order to qualify for linguistic services in the army but he did not succeed in his attempt. On April 18, 1941 he wrote a letter, seeking to be released from the SD so that he might be enrolled in the army. A copy of this letter was introduced as a document. as defined by the International Military Tribunal Decision, September 1, 1939 is accepted as a crucial date. On that date Graf was not a member of any criminal organization. When, in 1940, he was drafted by the Emergency Service Regulations he applied to rejoin the SS.

He explained that this application was purely a perfunctory function because he would automatically have fallen into this organization on account of his then being a member of the SD:

"The Personnel Departmental Chief could a member of the SS, so he said, 'Of the SS'. Therefore, I made out the ap special formation, the SD.

After all, number."

the insistency of his departmental chief the defendant pointed out, that although drafted into war service on January 1, 1940 he did not make his application for the SS until July 28. Had he had a sincere desire to rejoin the SS, he would not have waited 7 months to make the application. He, therefore, submits that the filing of the application was a were form.

The Tribunal finds that the defendant's leaving the SS in 1936 showed a clear intention to disassociate himself from that organization and accepts the defendant's explanation that he would not have rejoined the SS in July 1940 had he not been drafted by the Emergency Service Regulations and deferred to the SD. The Tribunal therefore finds him not guilty of membership in the SS under the conditions declared criminal by the International Military Tribunal. decision which declares that the Security Police and SD was a voluntary organization and that membership therein was voluntary. The Tribunal therefore finds the defendant guilty of membership in the SD. It further finds as a mitigating circumstance, however, that is membership in the SD was not without compulsion and constraint. It therefore adjudges that the period of the defendant's imprisonment from the date of his arrest, following the termination of the war, to the present date, shall constitute the sentence of the Tribunal based upon such conviction.

In view of the fact that the defendant has thus already served his term of imprisonment under the sentence just imposed, it is now ordered, that he be permanently discharged from custody under the Indictment upon adjournment of the Tribunal this day.

THE PRESIDENT: The Tribunal will now be in recess until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.
